"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

A fine specimen of the Great Grey Shrike has been picked up dead in the Teviothead district.

Private J. Dugmore, of Cardiff, D Company, 2nd Welsh Regt., is now in G Block, A Ward, 4th London General Hospital, Grove Lane School, Denmark Hill, London, writes Mr. F. Thomas, Sec., Cardiff C.B.S. He arrived from France on April 21, and I am sure he would be pleased to meet any fancier as he is in a strange town among strangers.

We regret to hear that Mr. R. L. Crisp, the esteemed president of the London C.B.A., is on the sick list. His numerous friends will join with us in wishing him a speedy and complete recovery from his illness.

Mr. E. P. Gilbert, sec. of Norwich Crested Canary Association, whose address is 69, Barn Road, Norwich, writes that his society is about to arrange open classes for its annual show, and that particulars will be advertised in due course.

We have received the syllabus of the Liverpool B.B.A. for 1916. Among the items to come are: May 11, a lecture on colour-feeding, by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe; N.F. shows, June 3 and July 15; August 10, Methods of Moulting British Birds, by Mr. C. Houlton; Oct. 12, Preparing birds for exhibition, by Mr. A. E. Huyton; and many other interesting subjects. Twenty-nine classes are provided at the N.F. shows, and the full classification is set forth in the syllabus. The sec. is Mr. T. R. Jones, 25, Emerald Street, Liverpool.

Will Any Reader Oblige?

Many years ago a booklet entitled "Profitable Canary Breeding as Practised in Germany" was written by the late Mr. A. Rettich. We are anxious to borrow or purchase a copy of this, and if any of our readers has it in his possession we should be greatly obliged if he would loan or sell it to us. We need scarcely say that if it is sent to us on loan the utmost care will be taken of it, and it will be returned safely to the kindly lender.

A Greenfinch's Fine Record.

I beg to thank you for the honour you have conferred upon me in portraying my Greenfinch on the front page of your valuable journal CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Fairhurst, Manchester. I also desire to thank your artist, Mr. Norman, for the clever sketch he has made. The bird has been very successful on the show bench; in fourteen open championships he has taken eight firsts, four seconds, one third, one vhc. The Greenfinch is my favourite bird, and, although many experts I know are opposed to it, I believe in them being colour fed, of course judiciously.

OBITUARY.

MR. F. LUDBROOK (Bradford).

It is with regret, writes Mr. S. Midgley, Hon. Sec., Yorkshire Union of C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the very sudden death of Mr. F. Ludbrook, one of the oldest and most highly respected fanciers in the Bradford district. Death has been very busy amongst our prominent fanciers of late, but none will be more missed than the late Fred Ludbrook, whose cheery word and advice was esteemed by all he came in contact with.

I am sure that I am voicing the sentiments of all fanciers in saying that our deepest sympathy goes out to the widow and family in their hour of sorrow. He was laid to rest at the Undercliffe Cemetery on April 20, and amongst the fanciers who attended the funeral were the President and Vice-President of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S., Mr. W. B. Atkinson and Mr. H. J. Chittenden.

Mr. W. Helliwell, Sec. of Bradford O.S., also sends a sympathetic letter, in which he points out that the deceased fancier was one of those who, some thirty years ago, founded the City of Bradford O.S. By the death of Mr. Ludbrook another link between past and present is broken.

I regret to have to inform you, writes Mr. Thos. Smith, Hon. Sec. Ilkerton C.B.S., Mr. M. Marriott, our treasurer, has suffered the loss of a daughter, aged 28. She has had a long and painful illness, and passed away on April 20. I am sure that the sympathy of fanciers and friends will go out to Mr. and Mrs. Marriott and family in their sad bereavement.

The "Temple-Rooks" in Town.

As a footnote to an interesting page of pictures of the Rooks in the Temple, "The Sketch" of April 19 makes the following amusing announcement:—

"The Hon. Cawdor and Mrs. Temple-Rook returned to town last week after a prolonged absence at their country seat near Crowborough. They have left their former residence in the neighbourhood of Gray's Inn for a flat in Fountain Court, Temple, where our photographs were taken. Since their arrival they have been much occupied in furnishing the new abode, which they decided to carry out in a combination of the Georgian and Futuristic styles. Mr. Cawdor Temple-Rook is an enthusiastic connoisseur of old furniture, and loves to ramble round the purlieus of Tottenham Court Road. He invariably himself carries home the numerous treasures he picks up. Mrs. Temple-Rook, being more interested in the future, prefers the modern style, especially for the nursery. In view of Zeppelin raids and the present state of affairs generally, Mr. Temple-Rook has wisely taken out an "all-in" policy against various risks, including aircraft, submarines, German snipers, and lawyer-politicians."

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Clapham C.B.A., Oct. 11-12; City of Birmingham C.B.S., Dec. 6, 7. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

Southern Border F.C. Patronage.

The Southern Border Fancy Club will again give its patronage to societies who will give a fair classification for Borders during the next show season, writes Mr. G. Burton, hon. sec., 126, Lee Road, Lee Green, S.E. Secretaries should make early application, as patronage is limited to six shows.

An Open Show this Year for Clapham C.B.A.

Mr. T. J. Hose, hon. sec., writes that the show of the Clapham C.B.A., fixed for Oct. 11 and 12, at St. Anne's Hall, Clapham, will be open to all. Mr. J. Robson will judge Canaries, and Mr. J. Frostick the British and Foreign.

A TIMELY HINT.

Owing to the shortage of paper it is not certain that we may be able to publish a second edition of "CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" for 1916. See the advt. on page 225, and send for your copy at once, or you may be disappointed.

Breeding and Exhibiting the Norwich Plainhead Canary.

By A. MOORMAN, Carisbrooke

As soon as they have finished moulting, pick out the most promising ones and cage separately, and run them into a show cage now and again so as to get them used to being handled.

If you have been fortunate enough to breed a bird that comes up to the standard of show points, try your luck on the show bench, but be sure you stage it in a faultless condition, as, no matter how good your bird may be, if it is at all dirty, or shown in a dirty cage, it will not take the judge's eye. If your bird is dirty you will have to hand-wash it, but with a little nerve and confidence you will soon get over any difficulty attaching to this.

Handwashing Made Simple.

The articles you require for washing are three large basins, a soft hair shaving brush, a sponge, plenty of clean muslin cloths, a piece of soap (white curd or glycerine and cucumber is very good), a good drying cage, or a nice clean show cage, a bright clear fire and plenty of hot water, rain water if possible, as this gets the dirt out better.

Fill up the first basin with hot water, and make a nice soapy lather; then fill the other two with hot water, trying your elbow in it to make sure it is not too hot. Add a little vinegar to the third basin for the final rinsing, as this helps to get the soap out of the feathers.

Everything being ready, catch your bird, take it in the left hand and dip its body in the water of the first basin, but not the head. After it has soaked a little while, take it out, hold the tail on the side of the basin, and wash it, using the brush the right way of the feathers. Do the wings in the same way, and then wash down the back.

This done, turn it over on its back and hold the head between the thumb and forefinger; wash from the throat down the chest and under the wings; turn it over to its former position, and wash the head and neck, taking care not to let any more soap than you can help go into its eyes, and wash well round the nostrils.

Having now got all the dirt out, rinse out as much of the soap as possible in the first basin, and then remove to the second basin, rinse well with the sponge, and finish off in the third one. Use plenty of water for rinsing to be sure you get all the soap out, for if you leave any trace in the feathers, especially round the neck, your bird will be spoiled and your labour in vain.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

Easter Monday, club sing, with a record entry, about £5 in money to be sung for, and a special of 2s. 6d. for the lowest singer or nearest 5sec. We had a bumping house 4min. time sing: 1, Hardman, 4min. 15sec.; 2, Troops, 4 9; 3, Davis, 3 56; 4, J. Norburn, 3 39; 5, Jones, 3 35. W. Walton and J. Walton win special.—J. Hardman, Sec.

LEEDS.

Open contest for quality Linnet singing, Clarence Hotel, Skinner Lane, Ap. 23; 19 birds faced the three judges, and some grand singing was heard: 1, 2, A. Binns; 3, H. Wigfield. Judges, Messrs. C. Tower, C. Ward, W. Lipman. Special contest same day. Mr. F. Allen of Leeds, presented three prizes, and members asked him to judge. 1, 2, A. Binns; 3, H. Wigfield. Judges, Messrs. F. Allen and E. Towes. Ap. 24, 28 birds sang: 1, 2, A. Binns; 3, H. Wigfield; 4, B. Smith. Judges, Messrs. C. Towes, T. Summers, and S. Butterfield. We had a special contest with some of the birds that did not sing. A gentleman added a special prize and Mr. F. Allen did the same, and judged 20 of the best birds in Leeds. 1, 2, shared T. Dobson and H. Wigfield; 3, A. Binns. Judges F. Allen, C. Towes, and T. Summers.—W. Lipman, Hon. Sec.

Grand contest, Plasterers' Arms, Skinner Lane, Ap. 23. 24 birds sang. Judges, A. Lorriemman, N. Solomon, 1, Hayes; 2, 4, J. Chibndate; 3, Reeder. Ap. 24, 40 birds. Judges, A. Lorriemman, C. Lorriemman, A. Kendall, 1, Deapole; 2, 4, Lorriemman; 3, Walker; 5, Parkinson; 6, Reeder; 7, Turner. Sec. Novice sing, Talbot Hotel, Ap. 23, 16 birds: 1, Old Batch; 2, Smith; 3, Wood. Open contest, April 30.—J. Wood, Sec.

With the sponge mop as much water out of the feathers as you can, then take a warm cloth and gently wipe it the way the feathers lie as dry as you can, especially under the wings and round the vent. Then roll it in one of the muslin cloths, which should be nice and warm, and in rolling be careful the feathers lie the right way, and place it before the fire, leaving it rolled in the cloth for about ten minutes.

Take it out of the cloth and put it into the drying cage or show cage, and place before the fire again, but not too close or it will dry too quickly. If you wash your birds at night leave them in the warm room until next morning; this will prevent them from taking cold. With a little practise you will soon overcome the difficulty of washing birds for show. Always wash the birds three days previous to a show.

When your birds return from the show fill their drinkers with milk which has been previously boiled, adding a little whisky, and also give a little egg food, as this is a good thing for them after a long journey.

A young beginner in breeding the Norwich Plainhead should get birds of the finest blood, bred from a good winning strain, keep a pedigree book, and enter the stock he has purchased. The ring numbers of all the young bred each year should also be recorded, as then he can always refer back year after year when pairing, and see how they are bred. In this way after a few years of experience he will get together a pedigree strain that can be relied on to produce some good exhibition Norwich.

Hens for Mule Breeding and Their Treatment.

By VERNON R. HODGETTS (Cradley).

Showing how to produce the proper kind of hen Canary, how to prepare them for breeding, and how to feed them both in and out of the breeding season.

IN breeding Mules persons have several motives, one of which is to breed an exhibition bird. Some who are less ambitious simply wish to breed a few singing pets, and at the same time to earn a little financial repayment. I know I was bursting with pride when I sold my first mules, though they were just ordinary singing Greenfinch mules, and the experiences of that first season have been helpful to me ever since. I am convinced that the majority of novice mule breeders at first breed mules for singing pets, and for this purpose I strongly advocate the use of common Roller hens.

Procuring Hens.

If cold-room bred, they are hardy, cheap, and among the most prolific of breeders, and these are three important points for novices at the game. At the same time the singing is made more subdued, for, under the influence of the superior singing qualities inherited from the Roller hen the young are less liable to reproduce the Finch's harsh notes.

Of course, nature will assert itself, and, do what we may, some mules will always introduce some harsh notes into their repertoire. But, whatever hens are chosen, be sure that they are young, untried ones. By choosing birds with legs free from large scales, and with short nails on the toes, a novice may feel certain that he has young hens.

For Breeding Light Mules.

Reverting again to the Roller hen, this bird is generally inbred to a far greater extent than most breeds, and by obtaining a clear yellow Roller hen of good shape, style, and feather, a novice stands a good chance of breeding a mule or two with light feathers. Of course, these mules will be too small for exhibition specimens, but while breeding a few singing pets he may very easily produce a mule showing distinctly that the mother bird has the tendency to throw light mules to a greater or lesser extent.

If during the first season he obtains such a hen, next season, if he so desires, he can proceed to the higher ambition of establishing a light muling strain to produce exhibition mules instead of ordinary singing mules. To obtain this strain the novice should procure the largest clear yellow Norwich cock which he can afford. Here let me digress to say that, if a shilling stands between your obtaining an indifferent specimen and a good one, sport the extra shilling, and the greater interest added to your hobby will cause you to unconsciously devote increased care to your pets. This is a psychological fact that cannot be denied.

Pair this cock to the Roller hen and the youngsters will be ideal for muling purposes, as the lack of size in the mother bird will be recompensed by the larger size of the father, while the lumpiness of the Norwich cock will be counteracted by the slim build of the Roller hen. This is a great consideration when breeding with such a naturally lumpy bird as a Greenfinch.

Test the young hens with a Finch, and if the light strain has improved, pair the young hens back to their father. Do not pair brother to sister, as this is inbreeding too closely, and causes deterioration in size and vitality—two serious defects.

The Finch Must be a Good One.

To produce exhibition mules the Finch must be carefully chosen. The Goldie, for instance, must be large, possess a full face and neck with rich square-cut blaze, and be broad in the chest. To crown all he must stand up boldly on the perch at an angle of 45 degrees. This posture applies to the Linnet, Greenfinch, etc. No matter what Finch is chosen, it must be large, well proportioned and richly coloured, and devoid of all tendency to crouch, or this tendency will be transmitted to the young to their detriment.

With hens bred as described, and good Finches chosen, the breeder can look forward to a successful season.

For a Canary hen to breed with a Finch is contrary to the laws of nature. To succeed in the breeding of mules we must therefore try to overcome this difficulty, and everything depends upon the vigour, condition, and friendliness of the birds. As springtime approaches the maternal instinct urges the mother-bird to go to nest. This instinct must be stimulated by having the hen in absolutely hard condition. She will pair with a cock of her own species even if ailing a little, but unless quite healthy her condition never gets so forward as to allow her to accept the advances of a Finch.

To obtain this condition I proceed as follows. Throughout the autumn I feed my hens on a little sprinkling of rape, together with the usual plain canary seed. As winter approaches, I increase the rape until I have a mixture of two parts canary seed to one of rape. As rape contains energy-producing properties it keeps the birds warm in the cold season.

If we have a sudden spell of very sharp weather, I give about half-a-dozen hemp seeds per hen each morning. This seed also has great energy-producing properties and stimulates the birds to greater activity, and, incidentally, they keep themselves warm by vigorous exercise. As this seed stimulates birds in a similar manner to which brandy and wines stimulate human beings, it must never be given too freely, or the object in view will be defeated, and probably liver derangements will ensue. Still I am convinced that just a little is very beneficial during cold snaps.

As the breeding season draws nearer, I make a mixture as follows: Two parts niger, one part linseed, half part maw, half part gold of pleasure, and a quarter part lettuce. I give this once a week during January, and then on every alternate day during February and until the hens go to nest, when I discontinue its use. Half a teaspoonful per hen is quite sufficient.

My reason for having so much niger is that it is good for preventing egg-binding, and being of an oily nature, it allows the Canary to lay in a store of latent energy, which asserts its beneficial influence during the changeable treacherous weather of early spring. The linseed acts in a similar way, if to a lesser extent, while the lettuce, which I do not often find mentioned in tit-bits for Canaries, is one of the most valuable of seeds. It is a wonderful conditioner for all small seed-eaters, its cleansing effect upon the bowels being superb, while it helps to modify the very stimulating effect of the maw and gold of pleasure.

Don't Forget the Green Food.

Greenfood fills the same place in the birds' dietary as vegetables do in ours; therefore, I consider that it should be given with discretion all the year round. The difficulty is the lack of greenfood in the winter, and this is how I overcome the trouble. Whenever possible, I supply a little ripe apple, boiled carrot or parsnip, and best of all, a boiled pea stuck on the end of the perch. Boiled cauliflower and broccoli are also immensely enjoyed.

The Breeding of Norwich Plainheads, Crests and Crestbreds.

By A. E. JEFFRIES (Richmond, Yorks.).

FOR a change, I give boiled rape in the place of crushed hemp, and if the weather is very cold a pinch of mawseed as well. By this feeding I find my birds keep in good condition all through the show season. I also give a piece of sweet apple or boiled carrot once or twice a week when green food is not obtainable.

I have very little trouble when pairing up, providing my stock is in breeding condition. This is easily seen, as the cocks will be in full vigorous song, and the hens will seem very restless, continually flying from perch to perch, giving a merry "chip-chip," and flapping their wings.

Should any of my stock be backward, I give a pinch of mixed seed every two days, and twice a week a little egg-food, also a sprig of watercress or a young dandelion leaf or two, and I find they soon come into breeding condition.

Now the next thing is putting them up. I put the hen in one compartment, and the cock in the other, and draw the wire slide so that they can see each other. The cock will soon make the hen's acquaintance, and try to feed her through the wire slide.

When they start this, I find it is quite safe to let them together. Should you be limited to room, you can put the cock in a show cage and hang him on the breeding-cage, so that he can see his mate, it will answer the same purpose.

Necessary Preliminaries.

One thing must not be overlooked, that is to trim all over-grown beaks and nails, but don't cut the nails too close; also trim all long feathers round the vents of cocks and hens, especially in the Crests and Crestbreds. I also trim all crests off during the breeding season.

Two or three days after I have put them together, I supply them with nest-pan lining, moss, and cow-hair, and I find they soon commence their duties. I also give each pair a piece of cuttlefish bone. As soon as I see the hens building in earnest, I give a pinch of inga and maw seed in the evenings; this I find prevents egg-binding. I also keep a supply of grit in the cages. I have only lost one hen in fifteen years from egg-binding. All going well, from a week of pairing up the hen will lay her first egg. She may seem sleepy and puffed out a day or two before her first egg, but leave well alone.

I take each egg away till she has laid three, replacing those taken out by a dummy egg till the evening of the day when the third egg is laid. Then I take out the nest-pan, rearrange her nest, and make it comfortable, if necessary. I dust it out well with Keating's Powder and replace her own eggs. The young then all hatch out together, or about the same time.

All going well, you may expect young on the thirteenth evening of incubation, but on the twelfth day I immerse the eggs in warm water for a few minutes, and I am seldom troubled with young dying in shell. I also consider it a good thing to offer the hens a bath two or three times during incubation, with a pinch of salt in it, especially in the hot weather; it refreshes them a good deal.

I do not take the cocks away unless I am running them with two hens, as I find some hens will sit better and rear the young better, with the cock's assistance.

On the thirteenth day I supply the parents with a little yolk of egg, just passed through a sieve, and continue this for two days. On the third day I give white and yolk together mixed with Spratts' Cage Bird Food, and cod liver oil food, equal parts, and a pinch of maw seed or scalded rape, whichever the old birds feed best on. I give crushed hemp when the young are a week old, and continue this feeding till the young leave the parents. I also give green food once a day, young dandelion at the beginning of the season, and then lettuce, but only the young leaves.

I find it is best to keep on the same green food, as changing it often causes diarrhoea. Should you notice a nest of young with diarrhoea, give half a teaspoonful of ground arrowroot mixed with egg-food; it will soon put them right.

The Care of the Young.

I take the young from the parents when they are a month old, but for a week after they leave the parents I give, in addition to plain canary seed, a saucer of lightly-crushed canary, hemp, and rape seed. I also give them a little egg-food, with a little boiled rape mixed in with it, and I put Parrish's Chemical Food in the drinking-water.

I continue this feeding till the young can crack seed for themselves, and then I bring them on to a plain diet of canary food, but still give egg-food twice a week. I keep the cage floors well supplied with gritty sand.

If I see any of them puffed out at all, I at once put them by themselves, and give bread scalded with milk, with a pinch of sugar and maw sprinkled over it. In the water I put Epsom salts, as much as will cover a sixpence, and in a day or two this treatment will put them right.

I commend the colour feeding of the youngster at about eight weeks old, and the adult birds at the end of the breeding season. I give the colour food twice a week at first, and when I see a few feathers about the cage bottoms I give it every day.

I find it best to keep the birds together in the flight cages, but not overcrowded, excepting those I think likely to make show birds, and these I put in couples when colour feeding.

I continue giving the food a little stronger each day till at full strength, which is three tablespoonfuls of colour food to one of egg and crumbs. Nearing the end of the moult I bring it down to one and a half tablespoonfuls to each egg in order to keep them an even colour throughout, as I find that if the colour food is continued at full strength the heads and necks sometimes get more colour than other parts of the body.

I cover all cages with muslin to keep off the strong rays of the sun, and I take the seed boxes off all day, replacing them again before dusk, and towards the end I give a

"Bessie," the Meyer's Parrot:

Twenty Years and Still Running.

The facts recorded in the following notes have been kindly furnished by the Rev. G. H. Raynor, the owner of the charming Meyer's Parrot figured on our front page this week.

THE representative of this species (Pseoecephalus meyeri), which we figure on our front page to-day, is the property of the Rev. G. H. Raynor, of Hazleleigh, and came into his possession in 1899 by purchase from Mr. Fulljames, who was then dispersing his well-known collection of foreign birds. She was the survivor of a pair which in 1897 gained first prize for Mr. Fulljames at the Palace.

The Second Time on Earth.

After changing her home to Hazleleigh, where she has now lived in a fireless room for seventeen years, she rested on her laurels for no less than ten years. She then travelled once more to Sydenham to put in an appearance at the Jubilee show of the London and Provincial O.S., where, although a widow, she once more gained premier honours. Since then until (and including) February 1914, she appeared regularly at the Palace and London C.B.A. shows, winning first prize on all but two occasions, on each of which she had to own defeat from a magnificent specimen of one of the most peculiar and interesting of all Parrots—the Hawk-headed.

"Bessie" has seldom been exhibited at shows outside London, but in 1911 she went as far as Edinburgh to compete at the Scottish National. There she was placed third in a small class, her conquerors being representatives of ordinary and comparatively common species, a Leadbeater's Cockatoo and a Blue-fronted Amazon. But it was hardly a case of "vae victis"! for when these two same birds travelled south to a great London show shortly afterwards, they were out of the running.

The genus Pseoecephalus is included in the African Pioninae, which are termed typical Parrots, and some ten species congeneric with Meyer's have from time to time appeared on the show bench in England, the commonest being the well-known but very charming Senegal. Although but rarely imported into England, Meyer's is perhaps the most widely distributed and commonest of African Parrots, extending from Abyssinia through Eastern Africa to the Transvaal, and thence across the Continent to Demaraland.

"Bessie" has never been coddled and has always been in the pink of health, as has been the case with the other three species of this genus kept by Mr. Raynor (Aubrey Levallant's, and the Senegal) who is strongly of the opinion that nothing is more detrimental to the welfare of such birds than close, stuffy atmosphere. He holds the opinion that they should be put out of doors whenever the weather is reasonable, and should have a good variety of plain food, canary, sunflower, hemp, maize, and millet in the spray. Loose white millet they do not seem to care for, but a little good mix Parrot food, much reprobated by some experts, is very acceptable and beneficial every day, and then. Draughts are fatal, but plenty of fresh water to drink and bathe in is an absolute sine qua non.

Like most Parrots, Meyer's much appreciates an occasional lump of sugar, also a piece of wood, whether green or sore, to gnaw on, and last, but not least, what all Parrots love, namely a supply, when they are in season (May to November) of the green seed-head of the common pot marigold (Calendula officinalis) which will grow like a weed in any garden.

tablespoonful of crushed linseed mixed in with the colour food; this puts a nice shine on plumage.

Twice a week I give sulphate of iron in drinking water, a piece about the size of a pea, and boiled carrot twice a week to tighten up. The baths I hang on three times a week; the great secret of successful muling is to keep the birds thoroughly clean.

A Few Hints in Conclusion.

To prevent egg binding I use inga or maw seed.

To strengthen birds up I give three to four spoonfuls of best port wine in the egg boxes.

To destroy red mite I use two ozs. of sulphur dissolved in half a pint of methyl spirits.

I have cured birds with stiff back clasp by rubbing them well with Zam-Buk and flat perches.

I never part with a good show bird. I is old I give him a season's rest, feed him up, and then mate him to a young bird. I have two cocks six years old, and last year I never had a clear egg from the hens I mated to them.

CANARIES FOR THE WOUNDED AND GERMAN TRADE FOR BRITISHERS.

Valuable suggestions from our Readers. Wide-spread support for the schemes.

WE are gratified to notice that our scheme is spreading rapidly. It has been noticed in the Press in Edinburgh, Bristol, South Wales, Bishop Auckland, Dorset, Newcastle, Blackpool, etc.; one paper has a column of praise for it. We hope that young birds chirping for the funds will soon be heard in these and many other places, for a suggestion has been made that fanciers should set apart one pair for the benefit of the fund, the young from that pair being earmarked for our wounded heroes.

Some very valuable suggestions, which we have pleasure in publishing as received, come from the Cheltenham C.B.S. through the hon. sec., Mr. A. S. Treasure. When the first meeting of the organising committee is held, on May 3, these and all others received from our kindly correspondents who are taking such interest in our double scheme will have full consideration.

Local Advisors.

In an article on our scheme the "Yorkshire Observer" says:—"In our own country the city of Norwich has established a reputation all over the world for its Canaries. There are there some 3,000 breeders, mostly working men, who devote all their leisure to the business, and their turnover is estimated at about £20,000 a year. Canary-breeding is carried on one a more extensive scale in Bradford and other West Riding towns than most people imagine, and if conducted on the best lines it is one of the most profitable hobbies. The principal customers for German Canaries have been England and the United States, and this trade may be captured if the fanciers go to work in the right way."

Correspondents from one end of England to the other offer help in their districts, so that any who require assistance may go to them and avoid disaster. Will others please copy, and write us and put their name on our list of local advisors.

Mr. Bastock's Birds Find a New Home.

We have received many offers for Mr. Bastock's birds, the highest being a very generous offer by Mr. Ryder, of Plymouth, who offers £2 10s., and also very generously gives £1 to the funds. In conveying these generous offers Mr. Ryder suggests a shilling fund. We need scarcely say that we welcome this suggestion. All the shillings received will be duly acknowledged in our columns, whether sent separately or through a secretary of a cage-bird society. Applications from our wounded heroes still continue to come in, and we are anxious to fill these wants, so send along offers of birds and help the soldiers who have fought so bravely for the country.

Offers Wanted for These—

Several applicants have been disappointed in not getting Mr. Bastock's birds, but there are still some good birds which we should like to turn into cash, notably Mr. Rossignol's green Yorkshires, which were offered last week; Mrs. Wolferstan's pair of Crestbreds, for which she asks £1; a cock in full song, which cost 10s. 6d., and a young hen, besides cages, cage fronts, and fittings. Anything received above this price will be for the benefit of the fund. Then we have a Pile Game Bantam priced at 8s. 6d.; he is a winner and a good stock bird; so now Pile Game Bantam breeders, send along your offers for this bird.

Another Local Subscription List Opened.

A subscription list has been opened by the Stoke-on-Trent C.B.A. to assist our fund—other societies please copy. We are daily expecting a supply of collecting cards from our printers, and shall be pleased to send one to any reader who will help us in the good work.

Relatives to Come In.

It has been suggested that the scheme be extended to relatives of soldiers fallen in the war. This is a grand idea, and we hope to be able to give effect to the suggestion. Our committee of organisation meets on May 3 and every suggestion made will have its consideration.

Keep the Organiser Busy.

Send along suggestions, talk it over with friends and let us have your practical views. A reader from Sussex thinks that some of our readers may know the German methods of "farming" Canaries, as he calls the proceeding. If so, we should be glad if they would pass on their knowledge. We are open to further any methods that make for greater efficiency.

In reply to our letter to the secretaries of the London Cage Bird Societies we have received nominations of delegates as follows. Many societies, of course, have not held a monthly meeting since our invitation was sent out, and we are still, therefore, awaiting some replies. The first meeting of the organising committee will be held at our offices, 154, Fleet Street, on Wednesday, May 3, at 8, and if there are any London societies which have not by that time held a meeting we hope that the respective honorary secretaries will themselves represent their societies pro tem, and attend the meeting, so that the first meeting of the committee will be fully a representative one. Our invitation of last week to provincial societies to send a delegate still holds good, of course.

Clapham C.B.A.—Mr. W. H. Vale.
London Cage Bird Association.—Mr. John Robson.

St. Quintin Park F. and F. Society.—Mr. H. Goldsmith.

British Roller Canary Club.—Mr. Gutierrez.
Crystal Palace District and Penge C.B.S.—Mr. Last.

Mr. J. W. Ramsden has also very kindly consented to attend our meetings whenever he is in town, and we are in communication with other well-known people in the cage-bird world whose attendance we hope to secure, in order to ensure the success of our scheme for the benefit of those who have so bravely fought on the side of humanity against Kultur.

We print a selection of letters received, and, as will be seen, all are anxious to do all possible to help.

A Suggestion that Should Mean a Lot.

Sir,—Don't you think a Shilling Fund would be a good thing? I think there are thousands of fanciers who would give their shillings to such a cause. If the secretaries of clubs would accept 1s. from each member who chose to support the scheme it would then go right ahead. If you start such a fund I shall be pleased to forward you mine, or hand it to our secretary.

Cheltenham C.B.S. Gives Suggestions and Promises Help.

Sir,—A discussion was held on "Helping disabled soldiers and capturing the German export trade in Canaries" the principal suggestions were:—

That two schemes are necessary—one to assist disabled soldiers in Canary breeding, and one for organising the sale and export of surplus birds bred by the soldiers and the Fancy generally.

That it is too late this season to do much in setting up wounded soldiers with breeding stock, but that things should be organised for next season.

Secretaries of Societies Please Note.

That all disabled soldiers who have taken up the Fancy be honorary members of local societies, the members of which will give them all the assistance and advice possible, providing they on their part do their best, and that classes for birds bred by these soldiers be given at local and open shows.

That all societies subscribe, either from their funds or a whip round, towards a fund for purchasing birds and accessories.

That each county forms a district, with a depot to help the soldiers locally. All applications for breeding pairs, etc., to be made through the depot selected; that no birds given to soldiers for breeding purposes be disposed of without the consent of the secretary of the depot; and that birds be given locally as much as possible.

That help should be given to soldiers returned from the front, who disposed of their stock on joining the Army, and who wish to take up the Fancy again.

That necessary steps be taken to prevent the importation of German birds into this country either directly or indirectly, and so help the sale of British productions.

That when the scheme is in working order secretaries of societies and depot managers write to their respective M.P.s on the subject.

Several members promised matched pairs, after this season, if they can be given locally.
A. S. TREASURE, hon. sec.

A Generous Offer.

Sir,—At the end of the season I will give one pair of Crests, matched for Crest breeding, to the value of £2, and also one pair of properly matched Plainheads, value 30s. to £2, carriage paid, to whatever applicant you may suggest. I am also prepared to help in any way I possibly can any disabled soldiers who may be living anywhere near my district. I might also state the birds I offer are from the best strains in the country. Wishing your scheme every success.

Whole-hearted Support from Leicester.

Sir,—At a meeting of the Leicester Hand-in-Hand C.B.S., on April 18, a discussion took place re the scheme put forward in your paper, CAGE BIRDS, with regard to the helping of our wounded soldiers and the capturing of the German trade, and we, as one of the oldest and strongest societies of the Midlands, are quite willing to give it our whole-hearted support, and think that every society should be approached, with a view to making it a success. The following resolution was passed:—"That this society subscribe the sum of ten shillings to the scheme opened in CAGE BIRDS for our wounded heroes, and that should the said scheme prove a success, further support would be forthcoming, and every help would be given from us for the welfare of the scheme." Carried unanimously. We enclose P.O. value 10s., and shall be glad to do anything in our power as secretaries to make it a success, and wish you the best of luck.

DAY AND ROBERTS,

Practical Help from Stoke-on-Trent.

Sir,—As referred to by Mr. Ousman, your scheme for providing incapacitated soldiers with the means of substantially augmenting their meagre allowance was thoroughly discussed at the meeting of the Stoke-on-Trent C.B.A. on April 3.

The consensus of opinion was decidedly in favour of the successful issue of the scheme, and in order to promote its prosperity it was decided to open a subscription list, the result of which I will forward so soon as I have heard from all our members.

The advent of the scheme should be heralded light heartedly, for it provides an opportunity for every fancier who has not yet subscribed to contribute towards a practical and permanent memento of our men who have done their bit.

Guaranteeing Classes.

Sir,—I would certainly take it for granted that if I guaranteed at any show I would guarantee to pay full prize-money offered regardless of the number of entries. Anyway this will be so in the classes I guarantee at Liverpool, as there is very little satisfaction on either side in the half prize money clause.

R. D. PARLETT.

The Germ in a New-laid Egg.

Sir,—In your issue of April 8, in "Queries Answered," Mr. Norman says that the fertile part of a new laid egg is not visible. I claim that it is just as visible in the egg of a Canary as it is in the common fowl, though I grant it is much more minute. I have pointed out to fanciers the part in question, and as no other fancier took the matter up, I have taken the liberty to do so.

An Open Young Bird Show for Wales.

Sir,—At the last general meeting, April 20, of the Porth and Rhondda Valleys C.B.S., it was unanimously decided to run an open young bird show in conjunction with our second show on July 27. I think this is the first young bird open show that any society in Wales has ventured to run, and we have decided to engage a specialist judge so as to give exhibitors satisfaction. We have engaged the Concert Hall of the Llynycelyn Hotel, Porth, a room absolutely free from draught, and with a splendid light and plenty of head room. Should any exhibitors be disposed to guarantee classes or offer special prizes I should be pleased to hear from them. Several specials have already been promised, and the society will not leave a single stone unturned to make this show a great success. I should be pleased if exhibitors would express their opinions through your columns, or make suggestions so as to give my society a chance to discuss them.

The Darvel Blackbird at it Again

A Straightforward Offer from its Owner.

Sir,—I have no doubt you will be interested to learn that my Blackbird hen mated to the Songthrush cock as last year has again gone to nest. I noticed her first seeking for building material on April 6, but as the weather was backward and I had little time she did not get a plentiful supply till a week later, when I gave her moss and fine dried grass in abundance. She then set about building in earnest, and soon had her nest plastered and lined inside nicely. She laid her first egg on Friday last, 21st (5 days later than last year) and has laid each day since, having 4 eggs now. I don't intend troubling her now for 14 days. If any of your readers has any doubt regarding this interesting pair of British Birds I will be glad to let them see her sitting. She is not a bit timid. I would be glad if Mr. Robson or any representative he may appoint could come down about the 14th day from now and watch the shells being thrown from the nest and so convince himself and the whole Fancy of the genuineness of the cross. I regret to say that all of the last three young are hens to all appearance; I have never seen one of them try to sing. I will be glad to report on further progress, if any, later.

Mischief in an Outdoor Aviary.

Sir,—I have been running an out-door aviary for two years for the amusement of my patrons. It consists of Canaries, cocks and hens, two cock Linnets, two cock Redpolls, one cock Chaffinch, and one Greenfinch. Last year I had also one hen Bullfinch and one cock Goldfinch, but the latter two birds died last year at the end of the season. I had quite a lot of nests of young Canaries, but was only successful in rearing two, which turned out to be two very fine cock birds. The remainder seemed either to be pecked and killed in the nests, or they would disappear in three or four days from time of hatching. On Sunday last I had a nest of one Canary and one egg unhatched. I looked at them on Monday, and it was still the same. On Tuesday I looked, but the young bird and egg had both gone, and no trace of bird or egg could be found. This was a repetition of last year's experience. Could any of your readers suggest the cause?

J. DANSBY.

Greenfinches for Novice Bird-keepers.

Sir,—I consider the best British seed-eater for a novice is the Greenfinch, because he is so easily steadied and will thrive on almost any mixture. I find the seed the Greenfinch likes best is hemp, but of course that is very fattening by itself, so I use 2 parts hemp, 1 part teazle, 1 part niger, 1 part rape as a stock mixture, and as occasional tit-bit I give a supply of sunflower seeds and dandelion heads, also bits of watercress, groundsel, etc., which they are very fond of.

A Norwich show size is very suitable for the keeping of a Greenfinch; there is plenty of room, and they are much better than the wire cage, especially when the birds are fresh caught, as they naturally fly about a lot when unaccustomed to cage life, and they are not so likely to injure themselves in a box cage as in an all-wire one.

I may say I have a very nice Greenfinch cock which I caught nearly two years ago. He had flown against the telephone wires and broken the tip of his right wing, which came right off. He has grown very tame, and will feed from the hand, and when I get home at night he jumps up and down his cage and utters a nice little note until I have a word with him, then he is all right. I intend trying to breed with him this year with a clear yellow Norwich hen, to which I shall pair him.

CORRESPONDENCE

The Song of the Canary. And Some Notes on the Cuckoo.

SIR.—Oh dear, oh dear! Has F. Carson suddenly awakened out of dreamland and found himself in the bird market listening to some common chopping Canaries? If so, let him go with all speed to some prominent breeder of up-to-date high-class Rollers, and if he does not change his mind about the song of the Canary, I shall be very much mistaken. I don't know anything about the Blackcap or the Nightingale, but everybody has a right to his own opinion as well as F. Carson, and my opinion is that the best place for the Song Thrush is in the fields. If he calls it music when the others are trying to beat the Song Thrush to see which can make the most noise, all I can say is that he is some judge.

A. ATKINSON.

SIR.—The letter of F. Carson has much interested me, for I have kept Nightingales for years, but the disadvantage with them is that they are silent for so many months in the year. I do not care for the ordinary Canary's song, nor do I care for that of the Roller, which to my mind is too artificial and can hardly be classed as bird music. I have tried to improve the song of the Canary by training young Canaries under a Nightingale, but have not succeeded to any great extent, as only having a cold room for breeding I could not get the young Canaries early enough to hear sufficient of the 'Gale's' song, though I have trained a Canary to sing the Skylark's song. I have a wild Canary from the Canary Isles, and his song is more pleasing than that of the domesticated bird, not being so loud and piercing.

C. HARRISON.

SIR.—I maintain that my letter on how birds got their separate songs, etc., is sound common sense, whether Mr. H. Napper agrees with it or not. Mr. Napper says, "One theory being quite as good as another." It seems that Mr. Napper has changed his opinion, as on a former occasion he quoted a writer on how birds were supposed to have originated. The same writer says: "It has been said, on what appears to be incontestable evidence, that the young Cuckoo, soon after it is hatched, ejects the young or eggs from the nest by hoisting them on its back, but one feels inclined to class these narratives with the equally well authenticated stories of ghosts and other apparitions which abound." Perhaps the above is one of the writers of repute which Mr. Napper refers to. I do not pin my faith to writers on the ground that they are writers of repute. I consider that accuracy is of the highest importance when writing upon any subject, whether he is a writer of repute or otherwise. I will give an instance to show the value of first-hand knowledge. When I saw the point disputed about the young Cuckoo ejecting eggs and young birds from the nest, I got a House Sparrow's egg and put it into a Meadow Pipit's nest beside a young Cuckoo about three days old, and watch the young Cuckoo climb up the side of the nest backwards with the egg on its back, and send it over the side of the nest. That is more than twenty-six years ago, and there have been other writers of repute who were in a similar position to myself, but they learnt nothing about the habits of the nestling Cuckoo; in fact, they did not even see the hollow back, while I solved the problem for myself. Like Mr. Napper, I have read a lot about the habits of the Cuckoo by various writers of repute, so I know a good deal from book knowledge, and I have a book in my possession, entitled "Our Common Cuckoo and other Cuckoos and Parasitical Birds," written by A. H. Jupp, F.R.S.E., which contains a vast amount of information about the habits of the Cuckoo, including some notes from myself, and photographs of a young Cuckoo ejecting a young bird from the nest taken by Mr. Peat Millar, of Beith, and I have a large actual experience myself as well, so Mr. Napper is still a long way behind in that respect. The remarks quoted by Mr. Napper from John Dryden respecting criticism look like Satan reproving sin.

JOHN CRAIG.

There seems to be more about the habits of the Cuckoo than the song of the Canary in the above letter, and we should be glad if our correspondents will kindly keep to the question rather than introduce other matter, however interesting such other matter may be in itself.—(Editor).

The Blackcap as a Songster.

SIR.—The letter in your current issue signed "F. Carson" interests me very much, because I keep Blackcaps, and no other kind of birds at present, and I wish he would say a little more about them. Do they acquire the notes of other species at any age, or is it only when they are very young that they can thus be taught? One of my own birds sings rather low and pleasantly, but the other we have to cover up at times, as he is too noisy, though this does not always quieten him. Mr. Carson does not say, on the other hand, whether 'Gales' will copy the notes of Blackcaps, or other birds kept in the same room, and it would, no doubt, be very interesting to know this. Personally I prefer the wild song of Philomel to that of any other bird, and cannot say I am much enamoured of the Blackcap's singing. If this noisy one of mine is about the average, I was assured when buying them that they were both caught when adults.

How Fanciers Help Fanciers.

SIR.—Would you, through your very valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, which we have taken for about ten years, kindly express our sincere thanks to Mr. Collinge, sec., and Mr. Farmer, Assist. Sec., of the Leyton C.B.A., also Mr. Onslow, Sec. of the East Ham C.B.A., for the way they worked on our behalf in the sad loss we sustained in losing our whole stock of Yorkshire Canaries through suffocation by the explosion of a lamp. I am pleased to say that through their exertions the President of the Leyton Society, on the evening of the Leyton Pair Show, handed to us a very substantial sum that has enabled us to make another good start. Also kindly tender our thanks and gratitude to the fellow fanciers and anonymous friends who sent us valuable stock birds, which, I am pleased to say, are doing well, and look like keeping us up to the position we have reached in the Fancy. I am sure I will do my best to keep it up, as I am left on my own, my son being called up on active service. I hope no other fancier will ever experience our misfortune, as I shall never forget seeing our whole stock of pets lying on the bottom of the cages.

A. J. AND A. S. WILKINS.

Colour in the Norwich Plainhead

SIR.—Of course, Mr. Frank Cole now knows that so far as I am concerned my last contribution was as fresh as the morn, full cream, and, I trust, well up to standard, thus rendering it quite unnecessary to upset the churn, and prevent readers arriving at its true value in the ungenerous manner he suggested.

I am fully aware that no suggestion of pairing buff green to buff green was made, and I also realise that little or no reference was indicated of the important bearing the yellow blood has upon colour. It is all very well to now say that everyone appreciated the need of pairing yellow to buff. The fact remains that his original letter left the impression that the only point that mattered was the crowding in of the green blood.

Upon the important matter of the relative values of the clears, resulting from the "shot in the dark," and the produce of a methodical cultivation which superficially removes all traces of green blood, my friend is as silent as the tomb. Under the happiest of circumstances the breeding of an ideal clear is an unusual event, and is perhaps far the best of many clears produced by the breeder during a season or so.

With the green blood introduced through both parents, and a potency that is absolutely uncontrollable, not forgetting its vagaries, is not the breeding of an outstanding clear by such a method just what I describe it—"a gift of the gods," and even then is not an ideal clear within the standard as outlined by the pioneers? I certainly am not a "whole hogger" for double yellowing, but as an occasional means to an end, I fully appreciate its value, even though its accomplishment is "penalising" for a while, which, by the way, is the word I actually wrote, not "paralysing."

My friend seems to doubt both the obtaining and efficacy of the buffs from double yellow mating, but I assure him he will not produce many double yellows without a percentage of buffs being included, and which are as likely to be cocks as hens, and, moreover, if suitable in other ways, are extremely valuable. In conclusion, and for the particular edification of the beginner, I will again point out that to rely more upon mere volume of green blood, without fully appreciating the advantages of the yellow, is to build your colour scheme upon an echo.

Exactly what is the minimum percentage of green blood necessary to secure the desired depth and brilliancy of yellow (when you get it) under the scheme of my friend I know not, but I am sure the adoption of the method as outlined by myself will ensure a good many more clears and ticks than "circus horses," and will in no manner suffer in colour, and this being so, I can only ask why accept the "shot in the dark" method?

Club Reports.

LONDON C.B.A.

Meeting, April 11, headquarters, Mr. Robson chair, owing to the absence of Mr. Crisp through illness. Mr. Watcham read a paper on the mating of Crests and Crestbreds, and during the discussion which followed a volume of information was gathered by the fortunate members present on how to become a successful Crest breeder.—A. Wallington.

WALKLEY C.B.S.

Meeting, April 13, Mr. Ridal chair. Balance-sheet for 1915 read, which showed the society to be in a good financial position, and it was decided to invest a portion of the balance in War Loan. The Pres. complimented the Sec. on his able management of affairs, and the latter suitably responded. Mr. A. Hobson, the auditor, was accorded a vote of thanks. The paper on breeding-room difficulties and how to overcome them, by the Sec., contained useful information, and was given at an appropriate time. Mr. F. Bagshaw elected a member. Next meeting is to decide as to F.F. show, and it is hoped that as many as can will be present.—E. Sisson, Assist. Sec.

LONDON AND COUNTIES A.C.B.

Meeting, April 15, Victoria Hotel, Charterhouse Street, E.C. Mr. W. Culliers presided over a good attendance. Mr. Fairman gave his promised lecture on the Yorkshire Canary. He spoke of all the points to avoid when starting in this variety, and went on to say what a good specimen should be. The cages he said should have plenty of head room, and the perches should be low down. He also stated how to pair for breeding, their feeding when paired, and with their young ones, and gave a few words on moulting and training for the show bench. Several questions were asked and the lecturer suitably answered. A hearty vote of thanks was then given Mr. Fairman and the meeting then terminated with a vote of thanks to chair.—W. Gilbert.

SOUTHERN BORDER F.C.

General meeting, headquarters, Ap. 3, Mr. H. Norman chair. Mr. D. H. Davies (Llanelli) was elected a member and four new members were nominated. Decided to again give the club's patronage to those societies who will give a fair classification for Borders at their annual show. Will secretaries who wish for our patronage write to me at 126, Lee Road, Lee Green, S.E., as soon as possible, or not later than May 15? List of specials to be offered was left over to another meeting, and I shall be glad to hear from members wishing to subscribe to the fund. Rule books will be printed as soon as possible. Date of next meeting will be announced in CAGE BIRDS.—Geo. Burton, Hon. Sec.

EAST HAM C.B.S.

Very well attended meeting, East Ham Town Hall, Ap. 13. The chief item was a lecture by Mr. G. Gardner on Canaries and how to manage them, and was thoroughly enjoyed. Mr. Gardner, as a prelude, gave his experiences of septic fever, and this was of especial interest, as one of our members had been losing his birds rapidly during the last week or two. Dealing with the principal part of his lecture, Mr. Gardner's general advice was to winter the birds in large aviaries and give them the most natural foods and seeds. There were several items of interest, and absent members missed a treat; those present expressed a desire to hear a further lecture from Mr. Gardner. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, and a very pleasant evening was terminated amid much applause. Members kindly send subs. to sec., as they are now overdue.—F. Onslow.

LEICESTER (Hand-in-Hand) C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, The White Swan, Market Place, April 18, Mr. Gibbs presiding, a large number being present. Questions were invited and were rather numerous, the Chairman being kept quite busy for some time, after which he put forward for discussion the scheme which was being inaugurated by CAGE BIRDS with a view to helping our wounded soldiers and capturing the German Canary trade, and a very lively debate ensued, and while it was admitted that it had excellent points in its favour, a few were open for conviction. It was unanimously agreed that if it had the whole-hearted support of the fanciers and societies it would be a great and valuable help both to the men and the country. It was proposed and seconded that the sum of 10s. be given out of the funds of the society, and that should the scheme prove a success, further support would be forthcoming in every possible way.

The Chairman said that he had noticed a lot of envious eyes at the trophies on the table, and no doubt they were aware that the presentation of trophies won at the night shows during the winter season was to take place. It gave him great pleasure in presenting them to the winners as follows:—Open section, Messrs. Day and Sturges, rose bowl; Novice section, Mr. Pearson, dinner culet; British section, Mr. Deakin, rose bowl. The recipients suitably replied and a very enjoyable and interesting meeting came to an end.—C. B. Day and Roberts, Joint Secs.

RICHMOND (Surrey) C.B.S.

Meeting, St. John's Hall, Ap. 17, Mr. W. Phipps chair, and a very good attendance. Decided that the society do not issue any rings this year. Three more new members were elected, and by the way they entered into the discussion they should be most helpful to the society. After business the rest of the evening was devoted to "Questions and Answers," the ladies joining in with questions and answers. The prize was awarded to Mr. Harris for his excellent explanation of colour-feeding. Members were so enthusiastic over the answers that time slipped by too rapidly. Fanciers should come and give us a look. We are always ready to learn something about birds, but I doubt if many societies can teach us much about being enthusiasts. Next meeting, a British bird expert will lecture. One of our lady members has promised medals for our cups when the cups are handed back to the society.

Annual general meeting, March 27, St. John's Hall, W. Phipps chair, and a good attendance. Messrs. Johns and Kerry were elected on the committee; also Mrs. Eagle and Miss Squire to act as M.C.'s at the society's shows. Two more members elected, making twelve new ones for this year, and we still have room for many more. Any fancier wishing to join, need only drop a line to me, and I am sure he will become a member. Everything is done to encourage the novice, and a hearty welcome is given to the old hands. Mr. Robson gave a most interesting lecture on "Breeding and Care of Young," showing clearly that no detail is too much trouble to a genuine fancier; and also that it was the details that counted, especially in these days when Canary breeding is carried to a fine art.—Colin Brown, Hon. Sec.

LOCHGELLY C.B.S.

Meeting, Ap. 3, Wilson's, Victoria Bar, Pres. Mr. Smith presiding over a good attendance. A discussion took place regarding our open show, and it was decided to delay decision till July; but if it is decided to hold same, it was agreed to hold it on our old date—second Saturday in Oct. Date of club show was also delayed. Delegates to Life League received instructions as to what to bring forward for discussion at next meeting. Decided to hold our annual ramble to Blairhall Estate this year, when it is hoped that there will again be a record turn-out. A pleasant meeting was brought to a close with a vote of thanks to the chair.—W. Grewar, Assist. Sec.

SWANSEA C.B.A.

Meeting, Ap. 22, at new headquarters, The Elysium, High Street, when all present were satisfied regarding the room and terms of same. Decided to hold annual F.F. show second Saturday in July, making it a radius show of 20 miles. Classification, judges, etc., next meeting. Decided to continue holding meetings on the second Saturday in the month. Next meeting, May 30, when business is important regarding open show. New members wishing to join will get all the information required by applying to Sec., Mr. J. H. Ford, 83, Norfolk Street, Swansea, to whom all further correspondence should be addressed.—Alf. Hitchings.

EDINBURGH O.S.

Meeting, Buchanan's Hotel, High-st., Mr. John Dalgleish presiding over a good attendance; booking of hens and election of judges were proceeded with. Mr. J. Lennan, Peirshill, and Mr. J. Carson, Dalkeith, were appointed for Scotch Fancy section, and Mr. J. F. Dewar for variety section; Messrs. J. Dalgleish, and A. Weston appointed to meet Western official re show arrangements. New members elected: A. Black, G. W. Brown, J. Hilson, W. Watt, Mr. J. Allen rejoined. Two classes for Border Fancy were added, cock any colour, hen any colour.—New members enrolled until end of May at 30, Easter-rd.—A. Weston, Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.C.

Meeting, Ap. 15, with a good attendance; Mr. J. Rieborough and Mr. J. Hands were elected judges for our annual show, Nov. 4. Decided to have a 15. pool for each section of young birds: 1. Nor.; 2. Crestbreds; 3. Borders; 4. Yorks.; 5. Linnet, H.-M. and F.-M. Greenf., Redpoll, Siskin or Twite; 6. Goldf. and Bullf., Chaffinch or Bramble, Bunting, and A.O. Hardhill, Brit. hen. 8s. first if 12 in pool, 4s. second if 14, and 2s. for third; after that it works on the sliding scale. Members may pool as many as they choose; young birds bred in 1916; British, any age. Names before May 12, the money to be paid before next meeting, May 27.—J. Stanger, Sec.

MANCHESTER AND N.C.O.S.

On April 17, at the Deansgate Hotel, Mr. Cutmore (Liverpool), gave an interesting lecture on the possibilities of Hybrid breeding, bringing with him a big variety of stuffed British birds and Mules for illustrating his subject, which made the lecture more profitable to a good attendance. Mr. Raynes presided. After a good discussion a hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Cutmore. Mr. J. Greaves (Bradford) was elected judge of Yorkshires at Oct. show. Next meeting, May 1. Business important. Will those members who have any ticket money or unsold tickets for Jan. show please return same at once, so as to save further correspondence.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, Crown Hotel, Hill Street, Ap. 5, Mr. Broadhurst chair, and about 40 present. New members elected: Messrs. Waldron, Smith, Jukes, Jones, Stevens, and Matthey. New members proposed: Messrs. Neville, Robinson, Berry, Harris, Barrow, and Carter. This brings the membership up to close upon 100. Decided to guarantee the usual show advert in CAGE BIRDS. The show will be held Dec. 6 and 7. Messrs. Norman and Roe judges. The remainder of the evening was spent in enjoying a lecture, entitled "Seasonable Hints," given by Mr. Weaver (Wolverhampton). Many valuable hints were given. We hope all members will make a special effort to be present on May 3, this being a question night, and Mr. Gastock has promised us a good time.—A. C. Shirley.

SHETTLESTON, CARNTYNE C.B.S.

Meeting, Co-operative Hall, Shettleston, April 15. Cups, medals and specials to be presented to members that had won them during the past show season made a handsome exhibition. The Vice-Pres., Mr. Mackay, assisted by Mr. Gray, carried out the presentations in a humorous but businesslike manner. Mr. R. S. Watt, cup, best bird in hall; Mr. Mackay, cup, best young Border; Mr. R. Gray, medal and cup, best Norwich; Messrs. Mackay, P. Thomson, Thomson, and Hartley, medals. Specials: Messrs. Dunnan (1), Gray (3), Watt (3), Drummond (2), P. Thomson (1), Dalling (1), Mackay (4), Hartley (2), M. Robertson (1), R. Forsyth (1), Shepherd (5), McLeod (3), Taylor (1), Rice (1), Irvine (3), £1 4s. 1d. was handed over to the Shettleston and Tollcross Nursing Association. Books were examined and found correct. Auditors, Mr. J. Thomson and Mr. Dalling. Mr. W. Robertson (Troon) presented to the club £1 15s. and seven specials. The first annual received a hearty vote of thanks. The first annual ramble will be on Saturday, May 30, from Chester Street at 2.30. Mr. Gray guide. Messrs. Waugh, Armstrong, Cameron, and Culbert were elected new members. Meeting closed with thanks to Chairman and to Messrs. Gray and Berry for the specials collected.—J. Irvine, Sec.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready).

Meeting, Mr. Hunt's shop, Ocean-rd., Ap. 19, Mr. J. S. Dixon presided over a good attendance. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Messrs. J. S. Dixon, J. P. Curry, and R. Barnes for their hand, which will hold about 750 birds. Mr. Rieborough, was elected to judge N.F. show, July 22, and Mr. J. Johnson, Wallsend, the annual show, Nov. 18. Mr. M. Woodhouse, of S. Shields, has offered to judge our British. New members elected: W. Duke, J. H. Brown, J. Parkins, J. Hands, G. Greenwell, H. Flech, G. Scott, W. Stephenson, J. Morgan, J. P. Milnerov, J. Morrison. Rules have been put in printer's hands and will be sent out as soon as we get them. Fanciers please note we have made a radius of 20 miles, which will give other fanciers a chance to join us. Remember our motto "Always ready" to accept new members. Amma subs. 2/6; entrance fee 1/-. We have added to the list of our Vice-Pres. Mr. O. P. Hutchinson, Ald. J. Taylor, Mayor Dr. E. Blair, J. S. Oliver, Dr. Turner and Mr. Thompson. Members please attend next meeting. N.F. show schedule to be drawn up. Members wish to thank the Editor for the way he has published our reports in CAGE BIRDS, through which we have received a large number of members. For full particulars apply J. W. Watson, 75, Leigh-ton Street.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

OVER-EATING (Edclair).—(1) Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only for a few weeks, and in addition give separately a small pinch of mixed seed once a week, and on one other day give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake. Give a liberal supply of green salad daily, especially dandelion, flower heads of groundsel and chickweed, in the order named. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and in the following week give instead four drops each tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. In the third and fourth weeks repeat the dosage of the first two in the same order. Let him have a good-sized cage for exercise, and keep the floor strewn with clean, gritty sand. (2) The cock sitting on the nest with the hen would not account for the death of the young. In fact, it would be rather an advantage than otherwise in the early part of the season, provided the young were properly attended to. The parents, one or both, were probably very negligent in the performance of their duties, and the youngster probably slowly starved to death. Should he repeat the performance when mated this year try removing him when the hen begins to sit, leaving her to hatch out and rear the young by herself. (3) This query is rather vague. If you mean how long should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Batty's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3/4); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

In each year will the birds continue to breed, I may say most pairs would, if allowed to do so, continue nesting more or less earnestly until stopped by the moult. If you mean to what age will they breed, then, as long as they remain in good, sound, vigorous health and retain a good amount of activity, but in the majority of cases their powers will begin to diminish after about the fourth year.

AILING LIZARD (Downhearted).—The symptoms are simply those of extreme nervousness which gives rise to fits of hysteria or mild epilepsy. Medicinal treatment is not of much use in such cases. The best course is to treat the bird always in a quiet and methodical manner, and avoid handling it at all, going about its cage cleaning operations, feeding, etc., in a cool manner, frequently speaking or "tweeting" to it, trying to gain its confidence and making it know that it has nothing to fear, and always leaving some little special dainty for it when you do anything at its cage, so that it will gradually come to associate your presence with some little treat and forget to behave in such an alarming manner. Once you have gained its confidence it may become quite exceptionally tame. You would do no harm by adding to the water every second day for a week six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and in the following week give instead six drops of tincture of gentian and four of dilute sulphuric acid every second day. The bird may breed successfully, but unless of some exceptional merit it is not wise to allow them to do so, and thereby perpetuate the temperament.

COVERED WITH SCURF (H.S.).—Unless the birds were of some especial value or typical excellence the best course to adopt would be to mercifully destroy them, thoroughly overhaul the cages, with a view to exterminating red mites, if troublesome, as seems not unlikely, disinfect, and repaint or distemper them, and start afresh with a healthier and more satisfactory class of birds. If you prefer treating them still, thoroughly cleanse and overhaul cages as frequently advised in these columns for getting rid of insects, transferring the birds to a clean temporary cage meanwhile, which must be treated in the same thorough manner afterwards. Whilst in this cage give a bath daily in which you have dissolved sufficient permanganate of potash crystals to give the water a faint pink colour—only a very little will be needed. Every second day for a fortnight, in addition to the staple seed diet, give a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut lightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and finally sprinkled with soft sugar, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water twelve drops of fluid magnesia. At the end of the fortnight stop the drugs for a week, then resume and give again for another fortnight. Give a little freshly-gathered green food in variety daily.

TICKING NOISE (Six Years' Reader, F.M.).—You have probably failed to relieve the bird because you have not sufficiently removed the exciting causes of the condition. Leave it in the room with a comfortable temperature, but see that it is in as equable a position as possible, not exposed to direct cold draughts, nor near or over the fumes of lights in the evenings. Then, in addition to its staple diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days add to the drinking water 20 drops of whisky, ten of lemon juice, and two of eucalyptus oil well shaken together. At the end of a fortnight stop the above mixture in the water and give instead twelve drops of glycerine and a crystal of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea every second day until the feathers have quite ceased dropping, continuing the remainder of the treatment as before until the moult is stopped.

WILL SHE BREED? (J. E. F.).—There is nothing whatever to worry about. The hen is only taking a little time to think over the matter, and will set to work in earnest one of these days. Have patience. You may give the pair three crisp young leaves of dandelion daily, and a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and gold of pleasure every second day, and sprinkle a little maw over the egg food.

CAGES FOR YORKSHIRES (E. E. F.).—With a long, upstanding bird in which a bold, upright carriage is essential like the Yorkshire, plenty of head room in the cages is a valuable adjunct to the proper training of the bird, tending to prevent squatting and crouching on the perch. But the full height of 18 inches is not absolutely indispensable, although always advisable when it can be given. Fifteen is rather low, but you might manage with it by placing the top perches at a little lower level than is usual, and training the birds well in show cages before showing them. For the rest, get a copy of "Yorkshire Canaries," which our manager will send you post free for 1s. 2d.

F.E.M., C.L., Mrs. F.C., and A.L.E.—Replied to by post.

NO EGGS (Bird Lover).—The hen was not quite in such good breeding condition as you thought. The best thing you can do now is to let matters take their own course, and wait patiently for a while. In addition to the ordinary diet give every second day for a week or two a small teaspoonful of egg food well sprinkled with a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame seed, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, linseed, teazle, and broken groats. Give also three or four crisp young leaves of dandelion daily. Leave the birds together, and do not interfere with them more than is absolutely unavoidable, and trust to the above treatment to set matters right.

ROLLERS IN AVIARY (C. O.).—You do not give any detail that enables me to tell whether there is really anything wrong with the birds or not, beyond the cocks not singing. It is quite possible for a cock to be in the best of health and yet not sing, though any self-respecting young Roller cock in breeding condition should now be in good song. I suppose you are sure about the sex? Possibly the "Annual," which is now ready, will help you out of the difficulty, failing which you may treat the birds for two or three weeks, the same as advised to "Bird Lover" in this issue, and see if that speeds them up any. But the best course would, doubtless, be to get two sturdy young cocks which you know are in good vigorous song, and thus do the best thing to prevent a possible disappointment for the best part of the season.

PLAYING ABOUT (Hope).—The hen was not quite so forward as you thought, and requires a little time to make a start. All you need is a little patience, and things will doubtless come right. Leave the birds together and treat them the same as advised to "Bird Lover" in this issue, and see they have three or four crisp young leaves of dandelion daily, and all will come right in the course of a week or two.

CLAWS FALLING OFF (Paddy).—Instead of the claws falling off they have probably been hooked around a wire or the perch and been wrenched out by the bird struggling to free itself. The birds are evidently old ones, and judging from your description the claws—i.e., the toe-nails—are considerably overgrown and curved round into hook-like shapes. If this is so, catch the birds and wash the feet quite clean in warm water, then dry and hold up the foot with one claw at a time projecting between the tips of the thumb and forefinger in front of a strong light. You will then notice a thin pink streak running part of the way down the centre of the horny part of the nail. This is the vein, and shows how far the "quick" extends beyond the toe. Have ready a small pair of sharp nail or embroidery scissors, and carefully nip off the claw just a little beyond the extremity of the pink streak. Trim each claw in this way that is overgrown, allowing only one at a time to be exposed to guard against accidents. The claws that have been torn out may be reproduced, but being old birds it will probably be a long time before much is seen of them.

SLOW PROGRESS (R. Easton).—The fact of this being the hen's third year would not necessarily account for her being slow to get away with nesting arrangements if she was otherwise in good, vigorous health. The trouble is that she was not quite in condition when you mated her, and will take a little time to get away with real business. Treat as advised to "Bird Lover" in this issue for a fortnight, or less, if the clutch is laid in less than that time, and let things take their own course. They will doubtless right themselves soon. Whether the cock going out of song has anything to do with it depends upon the cause of his silence. Should he commence to drop feathers your only course to prevent disappointment during the best part of the season is to replace him at once by one in good condition, and otherwise suited as a mate for the hen.

IS IT USUAL? (Novice, M. A. S.).—It is not usual for a hen to suffer from egg-binding with a third egg when the first two of the clutch have been laid without trouble, but at the same time it is by no means rare for such a thing to occur. A hen may, in fact, become egg bound with any egg in a clutch from first to last. The probability is that in your case, as you say the eggs were large for the size of the hen, that the third was somewhat abnormal in size and thus created this trouble which you discovered only when too late to assist.

MAKING A STRAIN (W. G.).—You cannot very well make up a new strain out of a single pair of birds without a rather considerable amount of in-breeding. It would be far better and more satisfactory in the future to work three pairs, and then you could follow the chart without any further difficulty. In the chart you send I take it 1 is the original hen; 2 the original cock; 3 the young hen bred from 1 and 2. If this is correct you will proceed now as follows. This season you will mate the original cock 2 with the young hen 3, and you may also mate him consecutively with the original hen 1 to increase the stock to go on working on the same lines next season. Next year mate the young cocks from hen 3, represented by 4 in diagram, to hen 1, and again the next season to a hen from this mating, 6 on chart. The hens from No. 3, represented by 5, to the cock No. 2, and in the next year also with a cock from the mating, shown by 8. The hens from No. 4 mated with cocks from No. 5, and vice versa, the progeny from which will reach the stage of No. 7, and so on to the end of your chart, being careful to note the different coloured lines connecting the figures denoting the stages of progress which indicate the sex you will use from any particular figure group in going on to the next stage. As it stands the chart shows five years breeding, by which time it will be most advisable to introduce some fresh blood by a distantly related bird from the same strains as the original 1 and 2. Unfortunately space is now far too precious to allow me to continue the details to the end of your chart, but after studying the above with your chart you will doubtless see quite clearly how to go on. If you encounter any particular difficulty with individual birds and will send along the chart of its breeding with the sex of the different stages marked I will do my best to clear up the difficulty for you.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

LINNET ROUGH IN PLUMAGE (F. A. V.).—I am inclined to think your bird is troubled with insects. You had better carefully examine him, and see if you can find any. If you hold him in the hand for a minute you will probably see some running on it; if not, blow up the feathers on the body and under the wings. To clear them you must either hand wash him or dust repeatedly with insect powder, working it well into the plumage, and wrapping him in a cloth for ten minutes or so, leaving the head free. Put a dessert spoonful of strong quassia solution in the bath, which give frequently. You do not say how you are feeding him, but stop heating seeds, and supply him liberally with green food, such as chickweed, young leaves of dandelion, shepherd's purse, etc. Give a little soft food if he will eat it. Have you our little Nutshell booklet on the Linnet? If not, you should procure it. (2) As regards the birds muling this year, it is all according to the condition he is in. If it is only insects that are troubling him, there is no reason why he should not be fit, as soon as you get rid of them.

WEAK ON LEGS (S. W., Yardley).—I fear there is something wrong in the treatment of your bird, but your information is so meagre that you do not even hint at this. Anyway, give him an aperient first; as much salts as will cover a threepenny piece dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of water, to which add three drops of syrup of rhubarb; repeat two days later. Catch the bird, and immerse the legs and thighs in warm water, well soak them, dry on a soft cloth, and paint daily with Old St. Jacob's oil. Give green food and a little soft food if he will eat it; if not, soak some rape and teazle, and offer a spoonful daily.

SAMPLE OF RAPE (Reading).—Your sample of rape seed is very good of the kind. The ordinary summer rape one cannot procure now, and English rape is larger, darker in colour, and stronger in flavour, consequently birds do not eat it quite so readily. This sample is quite a good one, and not particularly pungent to the taste. If your birds do not eat it as you would like them to, I would advise you to soak it, and offer a spoonful daily, or not so frequently if you are using green food.

LICE ON LINNET (Ches.).—These pests are a terrible nuisance when they once get established on birds. As you have only the one I think your best plan, if you can manage it, is to hand-wash him in soap and warm water, dry thoroughly clean before the fire, and return to a thoroughly clean cage. Another method is to feed him well so as to get him in good condition; let him bathe frequently and put a couple of spoonful of strong quassia solution in the bath water; also catch the bird about every third day and lightly paint the inside of the large wing feathers with oil of lavender. Get the cheapest kind, costing about sixpence for the half ounce. In addition to his present seed give a spoonful of cracked hemp about three days a week, also a little maw seed, and a few grains of cracked sunflower seeds daily. If he will not eat these chop up a few kernels and mix with his seed. Do not keep him in a warm room, the cooler you keep him the less rapidly the insects increase.

IS IT A MULE? (A. M. Jones).—It is very unfortunate that the mother of your bird died, as her identity would of course decide that of the young bird. You do not tell me if she was proenured from a fancier who would know if she was a genuine Mule, or simply a dark Canary. There are many people who think that no bird can be a Canary unless it is clear yellow or buff. In your description of your bird you fail to mention one very important point, that is, the shape of the beak. Does it resemble the Canary's? In most cases a Mule's beak is more like the British bird father than the Canary mother. I am inclined to think the mother of your bird was simply a dark Canary, because Linnets Mules show their Linnet parentage in the colour, particularly on the back; whereas your description is in every way just what a dark Canary would be. Perhaps some fancier in your district could identify it for you.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING PARROT (H. E. A.).—It is a Blue-fronted Amazon, and has been wrongly fed. Cease giving tea, coffee, or milk sops at once, also table scraps, or any animal food. The main dietary should consist of seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, piece of biscuit, plain cake, or stale crusts, with cuttlebone, grit, and water continually in the cage, also a chunk of wood for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon. As extras, unseasoned and ungreased boiled potato and other vegetables may be given, also raw carrot, turnip, etc. Castor oil or other oil may always be given by smearing it along the edges of the mandibles from a terebinth, when it will be sucked in. Put one teaspoonful of Bimford's magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days well colour the water with chemical food. If the bird appears at all weak give a little cod liver oil emulsion daily by spreading it thinly on biscuit, bread, or plain cake, which ever the bird takes most freely. Also give a little honey and borax daily by smearing same along the edges of its mandible with a feather. Report progress in about a month.

SWOLLEN FOOT, ETC. (W. B.).—As it is a new acquisition it will not be easy to treat the foot, which must be bathed with hot water; use a long-handled mop camel-hair brush, partly dry it, and then paint with neat whiskey. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intermediate days well colour the water with chemical food. Give it daily a little cod liver oil emulsion, either by smearing it along the edges of its mandibles and tongue, or spread thinly on biscuit, plain cake, or bread, whichever is most convenient; in exactly the same manner give honey and borax daily. The C.L.O.E. can be given in the morning, and the latter in the afternoon. If not too far gone, the bird should gradually recover health and strength. Report progress in two or three weeks, but if it becomes worse write again at once with full details. If you have the bird on approval, it would be better to return it at once to the vendor.

DEPOSITING EGGS ON FLOOR (R. A. B.).—It is most disappointing, yet I fear the only improvement you can hope for is the amended behaviour of the hens. As they are caged separately it would appear that they were emulating each other in this respect, otherwise it appears strange for both hens to take the same unnatural course. You appear to have fitted your cages up satisfactorily, and I can only ask you one or two suggestive questions. Have mice access to the hawks? Are the openings of the hawks towards the light? Are the hawks in a screened portion of the cage? The only definite remedy I can suggest is to get someone to change hens with you, especially if you can make an exchange with someone having an outdoor aviary.

BUDGERIGAR SHIVERING (G. Townsend).—It is never safe, even in hot weather, to keep birds of any kind in an open window. There is always a current of air between window and door or fireplace, and draught is fatal, sooner or later, even to such hardy birds as Budgerigars. While they must not be kept in a stagnant corner of the room away from light and air, their cage must not stand in the way of direct currents of air between window and other outlets of the room. We ourselves easily get chilled in very hot weather in consequence of sitting in a draught, often for the sake of the breeze, and birds must be kept out of draught. Put a few grains of Epsom salts in the drinking water once a week for a month, and on other days lightly colour the water with chemical food. Now that you can get it free from frost supply as much seedling and flowering grass as they will eat.

CAGES FOR BUDGERIGARS (Six Years' Reader, F.M.).—(1) Yes, the Budgerigars should breed in the C.P. cage; the partitions should be removed, and some kind of screen fitted over the dome to make it fairly private, and squares of opaque glass can be laid over the flat tops of the end sections. Fix up a hunk in each end section, and on the dome, near the top in each case—then you must simply wait for them to settle down. The only thing you can do to hasten matters is to give them daily fresh supplies of tufts of flowering and seedling grass. (2) I do not think you need fear any harmful results from the enamel, but any time the cage needs repainting, use Brunswick black for the wires, and French grey enamel for the other parts. (3) A box type cage is better than the C.P. type, but only fifteen inches high leaves no space for exercise when a couple of hawks are fixed up.

BUDGERIGARS IN A CAGE (A. G. H.).—It is quite correct that unless you have more nests than pairs of birds either in cage or aviary, there is certain to be quarrelling for a particular nest sooner or later, too often continuous squabbling nullifies all chance of breeding results, and therefore it is obvious that your cage is not large enough to provide accommodation for two breeding pairs. The minimum for two pairs should be 36in. long, 18in. deep, by 20 to 24in. high. In your present cage you could keep one pair, and though, being a gregarious species, they breed more freely where several pairs are kept together, nevertheless a single pair in the cage should ultimately settle down and reproduce their kind. As soon as you can get it free from frost supply flowering and seedling grass ad lib.

WHAT BIRD? (C. R., Constant Reader).—It is a Roseate Cockatoo; some individuals talk well, others only a little, and many not at all. Still if yours is a reasonably young bird it may talk in due course. It is no use attempting training till the bird is fairly tame and steady, and thoroughly accustomed to you. Keep it in the midst of your home life, yet not where it will get frequently scared by rushy movements, aim whenever it is quiet and restful talk to it and teach it by the constant repetition method, as well as at other times casual words; it should also pick up many words which it hears uttered in its vicinity, as well as mimic various sounds and calls.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept in contact with the dead bird. Send by letter post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

R. B. Nelson.—Inflammation of the bowels.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

A. C. H.—The so-called "Crystal Palace Aviary" is really nothing else but a large cage. Its floor area is only about six-and-a-half square feet, and half-a-dozen British Finches would be quite enough to keep in such a space. You might keep this number of such British birds as appeal to you, having regard, of course, to the fact that they would have access to the same stock food, and that some birds would take too much for their good of one particular kind of seed which would be necessary for the well-being of another species. If you decide upon British birds, our Mr. Norman will be pleased to advise you as to their keeping, but it would be much more satisfactory to have any number up to a dozen of the smaller foreign seed-eating birds. Many beautiful foreign birds require nothing in the way of seed but canary seed, white millet, and spray millet, and would all thrive alike on such a dietary, combined, of course, with the other necessities in the way of green food, etc. If you partition off the centre portion for Budgerigars as you suggest, you would have only a small cage at each end, and two Finches at the most could be kept in either of these.

Bird-keeping as a Livelihood (Interested).—A full list of books which would help you in bird-keeping was published on page 212 of last week's issue. There is no doubt whatever that bird-keeping can be made to show a profit, but to obtain a livelihood by its practice is rather a tall order. As you say you have no knowledge whatever of birds or bird-keeping, we fear that you would have to put in some years of practice before your profits would be sufficient to afford you a living. It is one thing to make a hobby pay for itself and a little bit over, but quite another thing to make a living out of it.

AIDS TO SUCCESS.

Our Books and a Common-sense Application of the Advice therein MUST bring you Profit as well as Pleasure.

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 1/1.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc. Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—By G. R. Weston. Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS. Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge; (associate editor, J. E. Weston and C. A. House). Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write to us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memoranda with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 2/6 5/-, 5/6 7/6, carriage paid.

A CHANCE OF TEN THOUSAND!

I have just completed the purchase of the entire stock of that highly successful and well known exhibitor and breeder, of this city. They include all his best, and the birds he had selected and put up for his own breeding. I shall offer every bird for sale, and it is a known fact that better blood is not in existence to-day. Stamped envelope for particulars. Besides these, I have birds as follows: Pairs, properly and judiciously matched to produce the best results, at 20/-, 25/-, 30/-, 40/-, 60/- upwards. A grand lot of guaranteed unfledged Hens of type and quality, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/-, 30/-. Cages for one 3d., two 4d. All on approval with pleasure. For others send for current price list. I have some good second-hand cages, with racks, etc., complete, and several two-compartment breeders, very cheap.

The following should abundantly prove the satisfaction I am still giving with high-class birds—they constitute but a very few out of the many hundreds RECENTLY received:—

Sandhurst.—Birds arrived to-day in good condition. I can honestly say that up to the present all birds we have received from you have been very satisfactory.—J. P. HENRY.

Forest Hill.—Received Norwich hen yesterday. I am very pleased indeed with the bird. Assuring you always of my warmest recommendation.—A. T. WHEELER.

North Kensington, W.—The buff Norwich hen arrived safely yesterday afternoon. I like the hen very much and will keep her.—B. W. R.

Warwick.—The two Norwich hens arrived quite safe this morning. I may say they are above my expectation, and should I require any more birds, I shall know where I can be suited, and at a reasonable price.—F. EDWARDS.

Westfield.—Everything arrived safely. The birds are quite up to your standard of excellence.—J. W. NEWSOME.

ARE YOU GOING TO COLOUR FEED this season? If so, I will send you sample of deepest and richest unadulterated Red Feed procurable, 3d., or golden yellow ditto.

"EGGERTINE."

The finest egg food the Fancy ever knew; made from new-laid English eggs and other valuable ingredients. Sold to analytical report. Tins, 1/6; sample box, 4d. Pears Canaries and Mules as no other food will.

Now read these:—

Barnard Castle.—Will you please send me another 20 tin of Eggertine; I must say it is good food—my birds have done well with it.—W. FORDYCE.

Hamstead, N.W.—You will be glad to know that, thanks to taking care, and your Tonic and Egg Food, our Canary, which we have had close upon two years, has thoroughly recovered from the soft moult. Please send us along another supply of Tonic and Egg Food, for which I enclose amount.—C. A. BOSTICK.

Mr. W. A. Harwood, hon. sec. East Ham F.S., writes that meetings of the society will in future be held at the new headquarters, Liberal Club, opposite the Town Hall.

Kindly correct report in last Saturday's CAGE BIRDS sent you by Mr. Hitchings re date of meeting of Swansea C.B.A., writes Mr. J. H. Ford, Sec. The meeting is on May 6, not May 30.

A general meeting of the Crested Canary Club will be held at the York Hotel, 2, York Street, Piccadilly, W., May 11, at 8 sharp. I trust all members will kindly make an effort to attend, writes Mr. T. Heath, hon. sec. and treas.

Sacriston's first great open show will be held on Oct. 7, writes Mr. Wm. Dodd, sec. Sacriston P.P., R., and C.B.S. Two first-class halls have been secured and four leading judges have been engaged. Mr. Thos. Dixon will judge cage birds.

Mr. Rudd, of Norwich, writes that he has purchased the entire stock of Mr. Ebbage, the well-known Norwich Canary exhibitor, among the birds being many that have been successful on the show bench or which are descended from notable prize winners.

By a printer's error the hatching table in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1916 allows two days too long. Eggs set on the dates in the Calendar are due to hatch two days earlier than stated in the hatching table. We thank the correspondents who have written pointing out the error.

We have received the 1916 Book of Rules of the London and Provincial Ornithological Society. Besides the rules of the society, it contains the fixtures for the season, lectures, shows, etc., the names of the winners of the various challenge cups and trophies, details of prize money under the sliding scale, and a list of members' names and addresses. The hon. sec. is Mr. H. L. Huggins, 130, Myddleton Road, Bowes Park, London, N.

The opening article in the April issue of "Bird Notes," the journal of the Foreign Bird Club, is "My Sunbirds," by the Hon. Mrs. Bourke. Mr. Wesley Page gives some notes on the British and Foreign birds at Holborn Hall Show. Mr. Theo. Stewart writes about his Bare-eyed Thrush, and Mr. F. Dawson-Smith chats pleasantly about his tame Herring Gull "Ari." Other articles are "The Endurance of Birds," by Mr. Wesley T. Page; "Some Colony Birds," etc.

OBITUARY.

MR. W. VOUTT, Newcastle.

I regret, writes Mr. W. Curry, to have to record the death of one of our most esteemed members, Mr. W. Voutt, of the Northern British, Mule and F.B.C., who passed away on April 18 after a serious illness, extending over four months. He was interred in Saint Andrew's Cemetery on April 20. Our Chairman, Mr. Petterson, represented our Club, and if more of us had known we would have made an effort to attend to pay our last respects to our departed brother. The fancy will be all the poorer by his death, and I am sure all the fanciers around here who knew him will extend their sympathy to his widow on the sad loss she has been called upon to bear.

MR. F. SPARKE.

London fanciers will hear with deep regret of the death of Mr. F. Sparke, who for over 30 years has been intimately connected with the fancy, writes Mr. F. Knight, Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S. He was well known as a breeder of first-class Norwich Canaries. He was Hon. Treas. of this Society for a considerable time, and was highly esteemed by all who were acquainted with him. Messrs. Dann, Hyde, Fisk and Mound attended the burial at Finchley Cemetery on April 25. A wreath was taken by them on behalf of the Society, which loses a good friend and fancier. R.I.P.

Membership cards have been sent out for the Glasgow and Dis. Derby O.A. Anyone caring to join should communicate with the Sec., Jas. Stewart, Jun., 21, Ormonde Park, Muirend. The radius is 7 miles, Paisley and Clydebank included.

The Cardiff C.B.S. Annual Open Show will be held on Nov. 17, 18 and 20, writes Mr. E. Thomas, Sec., and will be run in aid of one of the war charities. I have received a number of post-cards from our comrades who are prisoners of war in Germany, thanking us for the parcels we sent them.

The numerous friends of Mr. John S. Clarke will be glad to hear that his son Harold, whose intimate knowledge of the birds of Epping Forest has proved of such great value to the many parties of "ramblers," for whom he has acted as guide, is now having a good time in Australia after a time of quite another sort at Gallipoli. Young Harold Clarke was badly wounded at Quinn's Post, Gallipoli, and his wounds led to a lot of septic trouble. Then "the lacerated arteries came untied and hemorrhage nearly took him off," says Mr. Clarke in a letter to us, "but thank God he won through, and to-day, has a weak arm, is as well as ever. He was with the 16th Battn. A.I.F., and he is one of the very few left."

An Open Show for Hanley.

Mr. C. Beckett, hon. sec., writes that the show of the Hanley and Dist. C.B.S., fixed for Nov. 9, at the Angel Hotel, will be open to the United Kingdom. Mr. W. A. Cowgill, Bradford, will judge. The Society intends holding a N.F. show in June and in July.

What an Expert Thinks of Cage Birds Annual.

I consider your CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1916 a perfect guide to the Fancy, writes Mr. W. Connelly, Glasgow.

Our Front Page Drawings.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

Spare Books for Wounded Soldiers.

Sergt. R. Orton, R.A.M.C., now in the 6th General Hospital, British Expeditionary Force, in writing for some coloured plates, which we have forwarded to him, says: "If any readers of CAGE BIRDS have any books which they can spare, and would be good enough to send them, we should be very thankful."

"Circumstances Permitting."

Will you be good enough to announce, writes Mr. Arthur J. Watcham, Hon. Sec., L.C.B.A., that the joint show of the London C.B.A., National B.B. and M.C., and the Foreign Bird Exhibitors' League, will be held, circumstances permitting, at the Horticultural Hall, Westminster, on Dec. 8, 9, and 11 next.

Judges at Glasgow C.B.A. Show.

Mr. W. Hutchison, Sec., writes that at the show of the Glasgow C.B.A., on Nov. 10, 11, the judges will be as follows: Crests, C. Campbell, Glasgow; Norwich, W. Simpson, Airdrie; Borders, G. Hyslop, Stirling; Yorks, R. Heggie, Stepps; British and Foreign, H. Jameson, Glasgow; and J. Gentleman, Avonbridge.

A Wren's Nest in Khaki.

A correspondent to the "Westminster Gazette" writes that an officer at the front says in a letter: "In my hut I have rigged up a line to hang my towels, etc., on, and since the weather has been warmer I have discarded my khaki sweater, and it hangs upon the line. I always sleep in all weathers with my windows open, and one morning I awoke to find a little wren chirping away on the line, and watched it make several journeys. Each time it brought back a stick almost as big as its tiny self, and placed it in a fold in the sweater. Now, after about a fortnight, it has made a beautiful nest. It doesn't a bit mind us going in and out, and is quite tame. All the Generals, who frequently come here, come in with the O.C. now to see how the wren is getting on."

The Breeding Season

NEXT come the vexed questions of sweating hens and bad feeders, after young are hatched. Sweating is generally caused by the hens failing to keep the nest clean. A good dose of salts or greenfood should help in such cases. Bad feeders, if not of much value, are best dispensed with, but where they are valuable birds their eggs or young should be transferred to other hens to rear. The first food for the newly-hatched young should be bread and milk (not sloppy), and plenty of green food and crushed hemp seed for the hen to feed with. Very rich egg food is not recommended for young birds, as it is often the cause of trouble.

When young are about three weeks old they may be removed from the parents and placed in a nursery cage. They may then receive a little weak eggfood, together with greenfood, and cracked canary seed in the hopper. The parents will also give them a certain amount through the wires.

An Alternative to Ringing.

This is the best time to put rings on if it is intended to do so, and although it may cause swelling of the foot for a time, they will soon go down. As an alternative to ringing, nicks can be cut in one of the outer flight feathers to correspond with notes which the fancier wishes to keep respecting the bird's pedigree.

The parent birds will be getting ready now for the second nest, and frequently show signs of this before the first nest of young are ready to leave. In this case place the pan containing the young on the floor of cage, introduce a fresh one for the second nest, and provide a constant and plentiful supply of nesting material.

When eggs or young are in the nest always glance in the cages when visiting the birds to see if any eggs or young have been pushed out on to the floor. In the case of eggs, before putting them back in the nest see that they are not cracked. In case of a slight crack, cover same with a small piece of adhesive paper, and it will be quite safe. In case of young found on floor, place them in the palm of the hand and breathe on them. If not too far gone, they will soon revive. When the young birds are about six weeks old they can be removed to the flight cage for moulting, which usually starts about August.

Greens Going Strong.

Mr. F. Handley, 23, Coventry Road, Waver-tree, Liverpool, writes that he has again taken over the secretaryship of the Green Canary Association. Societies desiring patronage should apply accordingly (see club report).

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Cardiff C.B.S., Nov. 17, 18, 20; Provincial Roller C.C., Dec. 1, 2; Sacriston P.P.R. and C.B.S., Oct. 7; Horticultural Hall, Dec. 8, 9, 11; Glasgow C.B.A., Nov. 10, 11. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

Thanks.

We have to thank many readers for their kindness in supplying our need expressed last week for a copy of "Profitable Canary Breeding." The first copy, all the way from Edinburgh, reached us on Saturday morning, the date of our issue. We are especially gratified by the kind expressions which in all cases have accompanied the offers of the book. Mr. Hughes, who sent the first copy as above, says in his letter: "I am very pleased to have this opportunity of showing in a small way my appreciation of CAGE BIRDS, over whose contents I have spent many happy hours, and from which I have received much instruction."

SEEDS OF COMMERCE AS USED FOR CAGE BIRDS.

Their Sources of Origin, and Feeding Values.

In this instructive article, which was given as a lecture to the members of the Walton and Everton C.B.S., the author, Mr. A. G. Hunt, of the Sterling Seed Co., Liverpool, tells in easily understood terms all about the seeds generally used by bird-keepers, and gives valuable advice as to their combination in mixture.

WHEN looking for a suitable subject to interest bird fanciers it was only natural I should decide upon something connected with seeds as being in keeping with the whole of my experience, for, apart from my profession as a seed merchant, it may interest you to know I was brought up in the very heart of the Fen country—Lincolnshire—which is admitted to be the most important seed growing district in England.

I can call to mind the times when I have seen growing crops of many of the seeds used by bird fanciers, including canary, rape, hemp, maw, linseed, teazle, etc., so am quite familiar with these in their green state.

The Eight Seeds that Matter.

It is, of course, impossible in the course of a short lecture to touch upon all the seeds given to birds, and I have therefore made a selection comprising eight of the principal varieties best known to fanciers. These are: Canary, rape, hemp, niger, maw, linseed, millet, teazle, arranged as near as possible in their order of importance.

I do not doubt for one moment that fanciers will agree that these eight seeds represent those most generally in use, and those which have become more or less indispensable, but I often wonder what the average fancier would say if he were suddenly asked the question, "Why do bird-keepers use these seeds?"

Some would probably say because they are the proper seeds to use, while others might answer because there are no others to take their place. Others, again, might answer in different ways, but very few, I venture to say, would drop upon the correct explanation, which is embodied in the title of this lecture, and is simply because they are seeds of commerce. They are commercial commodities, which appear regularly upon the market, and which, in normal times, being easily procurable, have, in course of time, been adapted to the use of cage birds.

This, I think, more than anything else, is responsible for the fact that these seeds are now accepted and used by fanciers who rarely, if ever, pause to consider the why and the wherefore of their origin or introduction.

Some of these seeds are as important from a commercial point of view as the very wheat from which we make our bread; in fact, some of them provide a very important addition to the diet of the peoples in the countries where they are produced.

and also provide heat. They are therefore fat formers and heat givers.

Carbo-hydrates, starch and other matter of a rather dry nature, which generate heat and energy, but do not as a rule form any great amount of flesh or fat. They are therefore principally heat givers.

Mineral matter comprises the various kinds of mineral salts extracted by plants from the soil, including lime, soda, potash, phosphates, magnesia, etc., and which go to form bone and blood. They are also very valuable, almost indispensable, in aiding the digestion, as they help to dissolve the other ingredients, and by so doing render them fit for assimilation. These, then, are the constituent parts of seeds, and we will now pass on to the first one on our list.

About Canary Seed.

CANARY SEED (Phalaris canariensis) can best be described as a cereal grass of an annual nature which, when growing very much resembles wheat or rye, except that the ears are not quite so long, being more round or egg shaped.

It is a native grass of the Canary Islands, from which the name canary seed is derived, and not, as is so often thought, from its use as food for Canaries.

It is grown extensively in the south of Europe, especially in France, and in some districts of Germany and Austria. Large crops are also grown in the Canary Islands and the Island of Madeira, also in Morocco, Egypt, Turkey, and South America, principally in California, and the district of the River Plate, also in Spain and Portugal.

It is sold under many different names, which are, more or less, trade terms relating more directly to the quality of the seed, and not intended to convey any idea of the sources of origin or the country in which the seed was produced.

We have it offered as "Spanish," "Turkish," "Egyptian," "Plate," etc., but it is quite possible the actual sample offered has never seen either of these places.

So much can be done now with machinery that in the process of screening two or even three entirely different samples can be obtained from the same bulk. Needless to say, samples from different sources vary considerably, but this is due to the direct influence of environment, conditions of soil, and climate.

Generally speaking, the fanciers of to-day have a craze for very large seed, but I ques-

I am not going to attempt to tell you what you should do with these seeds, as most fanciers have their own ideas, and hardly any two treat their birds exactly alike. My intention here is to give you a few particulars as to where these seeds come from, and for what reason they find their place upon the market, and consequently come to be included in the diet of our feathered pets. I shall also try to illustrate to you the feeding values of these seeds, as related one to the other.

Constituents, and their Properties.

First of all, however, in order to understand the illustrations, it is necessary to find out what bird seeds are composed of. According to the analyst, we find that all products of the soil contain a percentage of water, or moisture, which, although of no value as nutriment, is useful in aiding digestion, and acts as a means of conveyance for the other ingredients.

Next we have albuminoids. These are the flesh-formers, and represent nitrogenous matter, which also goes to repair the wear and tear of certain tissues and provides energy.

Oils and fats act principally upon the lungs, being consumed in the process of respiration, tion if there is any great advantage in this. Large specimens of almost anything often prove to be hollow or have a very thick husk or skin, and so from the point of view of their feeding quality are no more valuable than a good medium sample.

It is only necessary to see that the seed is clean and free from impurities, plump in appearance, bright looking, and sweet to the taste, and providing it fulfils these conditions any fancier may accept it with the assurance that it will meet his requirements. Of course, to procure a good sample you must pay a fair price, as good seed cannot be bought at the price of rubbish.

Regarding the uses for which canary seed is grown other than for feeding birds, I find that in some of the countries where it is grown it forms a considerable addition to the diet of the natives, being mixed with wheat flour for making bread. This is especially so in the Canary Islands and in Egypt, also in Austria and Germany, as was proved during the early part of the present war, when it was stated that all the canary seed in those countries had been commandeered in order to increase the supply of flour for making bread.

Difficulties of the Breeding Season, and How to Overcome Them.

A paper read before the members of the Walkley C.B.S. by the Secretary, Mr. C. Tomlinson.

THE first on the list is that of cocks not pairing with the hen provided for them.

In this case I hang the cock bird in a show cage on to the breeder (single) for a day or two, and this generally puts matters right. Of course if double breeders are used the partition answers the purpose.

To overcome the propensities of hens for nesting on the bottom of the cage is somewhat difficult, but I put the nest pan where the hen is attempting to build, let her lay her eggs in it, and then gradually raise it until in proper position.

Squatting hens, i.e. hens nesting and not laying. Unfledged hens are prone to this. It may be classed under two heads—internal derangement or out of condition. Hens of this kind will in some cases rear a nest of young if eggs are placed under them.

Hens not sitting. This also is often caused by internal derangement. Your hens may all have been fed in the same way during the winter, but some get more forward than others, and it is these that do the silly trick. The only remedy in these cases is to put the eggs under other hens and put the cock back as often they are ready to lay in two or three days. The second nest often corrects this.

Eggs failing to hatch may be due to various causes; weakness of the embryo, chill to the eggs through the hen coming off too often, etc. The eggs should hatch 14 days after sitting, but do not despair if the first round do not hatch to time. I have had some go two days over.

Non-feeding hens. This difficulty takes a bit of solving. You may use a "Filip" feeder, or what you like, but young birds without the aid of a hen take some rearing. I have been in my bird-room at all times after daylight hand-feeding. Try your hens with a variety of foods, and put a good pinch of sulphate of soda in the water. This has the effect of removing the broodiness, but I have come to the conclusion if they won't feed nothing will make them.

Hens sweating young in my opinion is due solely to nervousness. As a preventive I cover all my cages with a piece of cardboard 12 inches square. Young making no progress is often caused by hens giving them too much canary seed, which sets up inflammation. If I find that to be the case I soak the seed and add to the soft food a good pinch of Subnitrate of Bismuth. It is sometimes caused by the pen not having sufficient moisture to break through the quill. If this is so I gently spray them with aired water, but if the hen will bathe it answers the same purpose. Hens plucking young in nursery cages can be obviated by a small piece of cardboard about an inch high in front of the nursery cage.

Young birds going light. This is a serious trouble with fanciers. It may be through diarrhoea or inflammation. I have only been troubled one season, but the two ailments were not in evidence. A pathologist at the University examined one of my birds and said it was a form of consumption and recommended that liquid malt be added to the soft food, one teaspoonful to an egg and biscuit, and in the drinking-water 12 drops of syrup of hypophosphites. Too many baths are also likely to upset young birds.

Birds not moulting. This trouble is often caused by a too stimulating diet prior to moulting, chills, etc. I give my birds a grain or two of cochineal in the water, and this generally gives them a start. It is also good for a bird stuck in the moult. The most successful moulting season I had I fed my birds with as much green wheat as they would eat.

Hens for Mule Breeding and Their Treatment.

BEST of all, however, I think, is dandelion, which has wonderful medicinal properties, acting chiefly on the liver. I keep a supply of this during winter and early spring by putting roots in boxes in December. If placed in the house, down in the cellar, long succulent leaves are drawn up. To see my hen Canaries, and two older hands (a house-moulded Greenfinch and Goldfinch) knowingly come to take their share from my fingers, is a sight too dainty to describe.

I also give my hens a great amount of that early flowering plant, the coltsfoot. I believe it is a wonderful medicinal plant. Rape seedlings also help out the above-mentioned plants until groundsel and other greenfoods appear. Groundsel, I notice, is too purging for Canaries, so I do not give much of it to them, but use chickweed instead.

I know many fanciers say give no greenfood at all during the incubation period, but I am convinced that a little is beneficial. If during incubation the hen has no greenfood, and only dried plain seed, she becomes constipated. Then when incubation is over, and she is supplied to the point of surfeit with greenfood, mixed seeds, egg-food, etc., the violent change sets up diarrhoea and feverishness, and then the fancier wonders why he has sweating hens and bad feeders.

Speaking of egg-food reminds me that I give as little as possible of this commodity. The Canary is a seed-eating bird, and I try to treat it as such. About March I give a little egg and breadcrumbs to develop in the Canary a liking for it, so that she will feed it to the young when hatched.

To Push on the laggards.

Treated as described, she will be fit to pair with any Finch when April arrives. Should the hen be ready before the Finch or vice versa, give the backward bird a spot or two of tincture of steel in the drinking-water on three alternate days, and on the intervening days give a laxative such as syrup of buckthorn to prevent constipation. This will cause the laggard to bound into tip-top condition.

I suppose more disappointments are caused through ill-timed mating than through all other causes. It is quite as important to put the birds together when ready as it is to keep them apart until ready. We all know that Canaries will lay eggs whether a cock bird be introduced or not. But, if the cock bird is not introduced some days before the hen lays, the eggs will be unfertile. This is because the egg is developed to such an extent in the ovary of the hen that the spermatozoa from the male bird has no effect upon the living cells of the female ovum.

If the novice follows the advice given below

he will not make the mistake of premature or belated matings. Sit quietly in front of the cage, and if the hen bounds from perch to perch with a restless flapping of the wings, calling frequently, and picking up nesting material or feathers, no time is to be lost, so mate at once by withdrawing the partition.

As I have not previously mentioned this fact, I may say that for novices the best plan is to use a double breeding cage with hen on one side of the partition and Finch on the other. In this way they become very friendly if allowed to see each other all through the winter, and will be feeding each other by the end of February. I have proved to my own sorrow the difficulties of trying to breed in an ordinary one-compartment cage.

The Finches are ready for mating when on full song, and when the Goldie is "swaggering" and showing a clear or almost clear beak, or the Linnet a beak of slate-blue colour. When paired up give the Finch mixture to the Canary and Finch, until the hen goes to nest, then give her plain canary only. Shut the Finch off by himself, or he is almost certain to cause trouble.

When the Young Birds Arrive.

The period of incubation is fourteen days. On the evening of the thirteenth day give a little egg-food, yolk and breadcrumbs, say about a quarter of a spoonful. If this has gone by the next morning, put another quarter of a teaspoonful there again. Supply only when needed, and never make the mistake of surfeiting the hen with numerous tempting dishes after her comparatively short rations. After the third day give the Finch mixture again, with soaked or scalded rape, and a little chickweed, which I consider the mildest laxative among greenfoods.

In about sixteen days the young will leave the nest, and if the hen plucks them, put them on the other side of the partition, and if the cock feeds them the course of treatment is quite obvious. If he illtreats them, reintroduce him to the hen and she will continue to feed them until they are old enough to look after themselves, even while she is going to nest again.

When about twenty-eight days old cage the young off separately, and gradually wean them on to hard seed. If the advice here laid down is followed, the fancier will soon have a nice stock of youngsters caged off when next he tries this absorbing hobby. As this article deals chiefly with the treatment of hens, I cannot enter into the question of colour-feeding the young mules for exhibition, except to say that I prefer an outdoor flight and natural wild seeds to enhance the colour rather than a small cage and artificial colouring pigments.

CANARIES FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS AND GERMAN TRADE FOR BRITISHERS.

The Committee Gets to Work.—The Schemes Going Strong.

BY the time this issue is in the hands of our readers a Committee appointed by the Cage Bird Societies of London, and those of our provincial societies who are able to send delegates, will have met at our offices, 154, Fleet Street, London.

This Committee will have two separate and distinct functions. The first and more immediate one will be to assist those fanciers who gave up their hobby in order to fight for their country, and who have been by their injuries incapacitated from ever again earning a living as in times before the war.

The second object is to so organise the Canary industry of our own country that never again will it be possible for our enemies the Germans to export a quarter of a million Canaries annually, as they have been doing for the past twenty years.

The 250,000 birds which have come out of Germany annually have represented the surplus stock of her breeders, just as the dumped goods of recent years have represented surplus manufacture, and there is no reason whatever why British breeders should not supply more birds, and better birds, to satisfy the demands of our own home and Colonial trade.

We have a large number of applications from soldier fanciers who have served their country and have suffered in her defence. In aid of these we have the offers which have been already published, and it will be the first duty of the Committee to deal with the cases now in hand. That there will be many more admits of no doubt, and we hope that the good example set by those CAGE BIRDS readers who have been the first to come forward will be widely followed.

Amongst the letters we have selected for publication is one from Mr. Best, who offers a very fine and generous suggestion, of which, no doubt, we shall take full advantage.

How the Committee Is Being Strengthened.

Since our last issue we have received nominations as follows for the Committee, and we are sure that our schemes will benefit by the advice and experience of these gentlemen who have been elected by their respective societies.

Metropolitan C.B.A.—Mr. Jeffreys.
Leyton C.B.A.—Mr. W. T. East.
East Ham C.B.S.—Mr. H. J. Kybert.

We are sure that readers all over the country will be pleased to learn that Mr. R. L. Crisp, the President of the London Cage Bird Association, and Mr. Geo. Crabb, the President of the London and Provincial Ornithological Association, have also agreed to serve on the Committee. If permanent good does not result to the Canary-breeding industry of Great Britain, it will not be because the proper people did not have the job in hand.

Offers Coming In.

We have received offers for birds mentioned last week, but are still open to receive more; we want all we can get for our wounded heroes. We should like to draw special attention to the letter from Mrs. Wolferstan; separate prices are quoted, and we shall be pleased to receive offers for all or either.

Besides Mrs. Wolferstan's birds and appliances, other bargains were offered last week, among them being Mr. Rossignol's green Yorkshires and the Pile Game Bantam offered by Mr. Hughes. We shall be glad to turn this lot into coin of the realm.

A Green Roller Hen Offered.

We also invite offers for the bird generously presented by Mr. Stephens, or if it would be useful to any wounded soldier having a suitable mate for same application should be made to us.

Local Advisor Idea Being Taken Up.

We have received a letter from Mr. J. Bastock in which he very kindly places his name on the list of local advisors. We shall be very glad to have others volunteer for this good work.

Discharge Papers Wanted.

We should be glad if all those who have applied for birds or cages under our scheme would send their discharge papers to the secretary of the CAGE BIRDS' Fund, at the offices, 154, Fleet Street, London, in order to enable us to hurry up matters; we make enquiries officially, but like to have papers as well. We are expecting many more applicants, and hoping for the continued support of our generous readers.

Disabled soldiers who send applications should in every case send some proof of their statements. We have obviously to be careful in according help, and it may save time if each case is substantiated at the time of asking for assistance.

Another Valuable Hint from Leeds.

SIR,—You are aware from my previous letter that our committee promises to do all in their power to help your scheme, and to give birds at the end of the season. Well, I was thinking that if, by the aid of your valuable paper, we could get offers of Rollers from unconnected breeders up here in the North they could be sent to the exhibition at Leeds in November, and sold for the benefit of your fund. Of course, I don't know how this strikes you, but myself I think it would be "It." I would willingly attend to any birds sent, and the fact of your putting it in CAGE BIRDS would certainly make it a success. I am confident that our members would do anything to forward your scheme, and I expect to get a good assortment of Rollers for your scheme from the Leeds members.

H. BEST (Sec.).

Leeds Roller C.C.

First Pair to Change Hands.

SIR,—Pleased to hear you have got a fair price for birds, which I have dispatched to-night (Friday), and I hope they will do well. Wishing your scheme every success. Please put me on the list of local advisors.

J. BASTOCK.

Moseley, Birmingham.

For Lovers of Green Rollers.

SIR,—Your scheme for the wounded soldiers is a just one, and bird fanciers cannot do too much for it. I am willing to send one 1914 Green Roller hen, carriage paid, to any applicant you may name. I may say that the hen is a good strain, being bred from contest stock.

W. STEPHENS.

Swinton.

Birds, Cages, and Accessories.

SIR,—I have enough cage fronts, etc., to begin a small aviary, including flight cage, two breeding cages, nest boxes, china feeders, baths, grinding mill, etc., and a large flight front with sides and top which we had on the mantelpiece. I will part with the lot for £1, but they should make a lot more for the fund.

The young Crest-bred hen I offered has had one nest of three eggs; she is a good sitter, and is ready to nest again. I will part with her for your fund for 3s. 6d., but I know she is worth more.

The pair I want £1 for have a nest due to hatch next Thursday, May 4, and there is also the cock Crest-bred, for which I will accept 10s. 6d., the surplus in all cases to go to the fund.

(Mrs.) F. H. WOLFERSTAN.

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE.

Where is CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE? What is it doing? Why doesn't it step forward on this "wounded soldier as a Canary breeder" idea? These are questions that have assailed me several times in the last month, and I hasten to say that CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE is ready to do its little bit towards the war, and is now calling on its members to rally round the flag, and associate itself with the new movement.

We are all of us ready and willing to do what we can for others. Especially is this the case with cage bird fanciers. CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE has for its main object the forming of a bond of good-fellowship between bird-keepers all over the world. It wishes to spread information on the keeping of our pets in health and happiness. It claims the privilege of defending our hobby against those who have plenty to say against keeping birds, but who know very little about the right and the wrong of it.

During the last two years cases have arisen which have been dealt with by the League, with satisfactory results to the cage bird Fancy. The public have not heard much about them, nevertheless the League has been silently but effectively working, and, like a special constable, on the alert for wrongdoers, it has acted as a watch dog ready to give warning to the Fancy at any sign of danger.

Will all those birdkeepers who are not members assist by joining. The annual subscription is 2s. 6d., and badges are issued to members free of charge. Leaflets explaining the aims and objects of the League will be forwarded with pleasure on receipt of address at the offices of the League, 154, Fleet Street, London.

Some attempt will be made to link up the work of the League with that of the proposed new association for reorganising the Canary Fancy.

Correspondence.

Early Canaries.

SIR,—Referring to early Canaries, I have a nest that were hatched on February 8; this beats Mr. Robinson's February 14. The same hen has now another nest three weeks old. This is my first year at Canary breeding, and I don't think such a bad start.

M. HUGILL.

How to Catch Hawfinches.

SIR,—Would you kindly oblige a very old subscriber to CAGE BIRDS by asking for information on the following subject? Would any bird expert kindly favour with advice as to the best method of catching Hawfinches; also as to best way of using birdlime? I have frequently tried birdlime, but scarcely ever met with success. Any information would greatly oblige.

R. V. W.

The Germ in a New-laid Egg.

SIR, I fear Mr. G. Parker has misunderstood my remarks about the fertility of a new-laid egg. I wrote: "You cannot tell if a new-laid egg is fertile," but I made no mention of the germ not being visible, as he suggests. The germ may exist in an egg, and yet it may not prove a fertile one. For various reasons it may fail to develop, and until it has been incubated it is impossible to say if a live chick is likely to result from it.

My object in writing as I did was to prevent novices being too hasty in interfering with clutches of eggs just commencing incubation.

H. NORMAN.

Guaranteeing Classes at Liverpool British Bird Shows.

SIR,—I am sure that intending exhibitors will welcome Mr. Parlett's letter stating that the classes which he has guaranteed at Liverpool show will receive full prize money, and the very fact that this will be so will doubtless mean that the entry will be such that he will not be called upon to fulfil his guarantee.

It would be well, however, if those who have guaranteed other classes would state if in their cases the same state of affairs will prevail. There is no doubt that if exhibitors generally know that full money is to be won the entry will be sufficiently large to pay the full prize money without calling on the guarantors.

EXHIBITOR.

Out of the Wet.

SIR,—I am enclosing a cutting from the "People's Journal," which I am sure will interest your readers.

"A Nairn gentleman had a somewhat unique experience the other day. He was accustomed to hang his umbrella on the back of an outer door, which in the daytime was generally left open. Leaving the other day on special business, and the day looking showery like, he went for the umbrella. Noticing straw about the 'gamp,' he shouted to his 'better-half' as to whether she had been packing straw in the umbrella. Investigation showed that a Robin had built its nest within the umbrella, and was quietly sitting on four eggs. Needless to say, the nest was not interfered with."

J. B. FRASER.

"Cuckoo-Cuckoo."

SIR,—Mr. Craig is personal, and has ceased to be polite. He says that I have changed my opinion as to the origin of birds. Perhaps he refers to about twenty years ago when the controversy between Dr. Butler and the late Dr. Greene on the breeding of hybrid birds, etc., was at white heat. I then let fall the remark that everyone took it for granted that Redpolls, for instance, had always been Redpolls, and that hybrids did not exist in Nature at all. I was called upon to explain such a daring statement by Dr. Butler, in his usual courteous manner, whereupon I quoted that departed eminent ornithologist "Seebohm" in his work on British birds, wherein he suggests that all our feathered friends might have descended from one common ancestral species, or perhaps from several ancestral bird reptiles. This is my only other allusion to the origin of birds. We can, therefore, forthwith dismiss this part of the subject. One of my reputable writers on birds says that a whole volume could easily be written on Cuckoos, and I am in agreement. Only yesterday I stood in the shadow of a large tree at Iyer, Bucks, and watched and mocked a Cuckoo which had perched on the topmost branch. He evidently was there for a particular purpose, for there is a Chaffinch's nest in that ivy-covered tree or the next. I noticed the distress of the little birds during his stay of many minutes, and when he triumphantly flew away on the other side of the tall hedge I was unable to see the female Cuckoo; neither did I hear her distinct and peculiar call, still I believe she was there and dropped an egg. I am too heavy and too old to climb trees as of yore, but a boy friend of mine, very fond of bird nesting, has promised to find the nest by next week-end, and to see if my surmise is a correct one.

About fifty years ago, when I was a school-boy at Exeter, I obtained a baby Cuckoo from Nadder Water, near that city, and, in my boyish ignorance of birds, tried to rear it in company with a baby Sparrow Hawk. After a few days the kind-hearted old lady next door interfered, and clouted me for my cruelty, and took away my Cuckoo. I, however, stuck to my Hawk, and reared him. For some years, with one wing clipped, he was a great pet, and kept away the small birds in the kitchen garden. My brief experience of the Cuckoo as a cage bird is that he is greedy, and very filthy, only fit to exist over the hills and dales in a state of natural liberty. This reminds me that I was perhaps a little too severe on the Cuckoo in my last letter. I have spent forty years of my long life in commercial horticulture, and I ought to have remembered that the Cuckoo is a great friend of gardeners and farmers on account of his keen appetite for the larvae of the tiger moth, or woolly bear, which other birds decline to eat.

Dr. Jenner, of vaccination fame, was, I believe, the first to place on record the fact that the young Cuckoo in the nest ejects the rightful occupants over the side of the nest, and a lady artist (Mrs. Blackburn) sketched the operation. Moreover, there is the evidence of the late Mr. J. Hancock as to the method of ejection by the young Cuckoo (Durham Nat. Hist. Soc., 1886). This, on the face of it, would make the work of the photographer of Beith mentioned by Mr. Craig duck's news. It was common knowledge in the Exeter district when I was a small boy that the young Cuckoo in the nest chucked the others out, and the old country folks of these days used to tell us vivid stories relating thereto. There must be, I think, some of your readers as brimful of personal experiences of the Cuckoo as Mr. Craig, but too modest to appear in print, or even to say much about it.

Mischief in an Outdoor Aviary.

SIR,—If Mr. J. Dansby, who in CAGE BIRDS, of April 29 date, asks for an explanation of the trouble in his outdoor aviary would give some particulars of the size of the structure, I have no doubt that help would be forthcoming from some of your many readers. The trouble may be due to overcrowding, and to resultant mischief by the cock British birds, or it may be that mice or rats are the culprits. From the fact that the young birds and eggs sometimes disappear entirely, it would seem that rats are causing the mischief at present. The cock Goldfinch of last year was probably responsible for the picking of the eggs which was then to be noticed, and the cock Chaffinch which is now in the aviary would also be likely to be mischievous if the structure is on the small side. Anyway, no one is likely to be able to make more than a guess at the cause of the trouble without further particulars from the owner of the birds.

AVIARIST.

The Grand National British Bird Show.

SIR,—I should like, through your valuable paper, to offer my sincere thanks to Mr. E. Bunner (of Bunner and Sons, Liverpool) for his kind offer of providing, erecting, and taking down all staging in connection with above show, entirely free. Mr. Bunner has been very patriotic in other ways; he sent his three sons to the front, one has been killed and two wounded.

A well-known fancier has written asking me to provide a good gold medal for most points gained by the six highest birds shown by any exhibitor. Will exhibitors who care to go in for such a medal kindly write me at once, so that I can fix the value; each exhibitor who enters must pool a share in buying medal.

The following specials have been promised:—Mr. V. H. Deacon, 21s. for most entries; Mr. F. C. Minoprio, handsome special; Mr. F. Lloyd James, 10s. 6d.; Mr. H. J. Chick, two silver medals for novices; Sterling Seed Coy., special value 21s.; Mr. Scarsbrook Taylor, silver medal for group of British; Mr. W. C. Robinson, 5s.; Mr. F. Cockerill, 7s. 6d.; North Liverpool C.B.S., 30s. cash for points gained by their members. I am making up schedule next week, so will intending donors rally round by sending me an extra special or two? All intending exhibitors, please let me have addresses. Paper and stamps are scarce, and schedules will not be sent out indiscriminately.

A Fancier in the Desert.

SIR,—I still receive your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, weekly from my wife while on active service, and I take great interest in it, as I have been a fancier for many years. I have been reading about your scheme for helping wounded soldiers to start in the fancy, and I think this would be a grand hobby for those who are disabled for life. I am sure they would all be willing to do their utmost to crush the German Canary trade. I had to dispose of nearly all of my stock through being on active service. I was called up at the beginning of the war, and served eleven months in France before getting wounded with the Leicester Regt., and then I was transferred to my present regiment for Colonial service. I am now on the deserts of Egypt, and am always ready to receive CAGE BIRDS with the weekly news from home. We do not see many birds on the desert, only a few Wheatears and Kingfishers, which are much larger than those at home, and they have a splendid plumage. I have had 16 years in the service, and while I was in India I caught birds of every description, including Mynahs and Bulbuls and Java Sparrows. I am pleased to see that there are so many fanciers willing to help you in your scheme, which I hope will prove a success and destroy the Germans' trade in Canaries. I am looking forward for the end of the war, so that I can get back and start in the hobby again. I wish your paper every success.

The Song of the Canary.

SIR,—Mr. Carson, in CAGE BIRDS of May 22, mentions that a Mr. Hoxten has a unique method of training Blackcaps and Nightingales. I am sure it would be most interesting to Softbill fanciers if Mr. Hoxten would kindly tell us his method.

The discussion which has been going on as to how far a bird's song is inherited I have found very interesting. My opinion is that the song is only inherited to a certain extent, and in the wild state, where, for instance, Blackbirds' and Thrushes' nests are contiguous, the young have a natural tendency to copy the song of their own species, but when taken from the nest, and kept out of hearing of their own species, they will copy the notes of other birds. Some species are, of course, more imitative than others. I have a hand-reared Thrush which has picked up some of the notes of my Nightingale and Linnet, and he has also a note, or rather a double one, which I think must be his own composition, as I have not noticed any wild Thrush having it.

The song of the Roller Canary shows how the tendency of inheritance can be overcome by tuition for generations. I have no doubt that the song of the Canary could be greatly improved and made worth listening to by tuition under a Nightingale or by the gramophone record of the 'Gale's' song. A friend of mine trained one of my young Canaries last year with such a record, and the bird picked up some of the notes, and has a very nice song. He would, I think, have picked up more of the 'Gale's' song if his tuition had been begun earlier.

Some time ago I asked your readers if they could tell me of their experience in training a Canary by a bird organ, as I would like to know how many times a day it would be advisable to let a bird hear the gramophone record. I did not get any reply on this point, I suppose because it is unusual for a Roller to be trained exclusively by a bird organ.

C. HARRISON.

SIR,—Many people with sensitive ears will agree with those of your correspondents who cannot find any music in the untrained song of the ordinary Yorkshire or Norwich Canary, and some may agree that even the song of the highly trained Roller is too artificial. Whether it is artificial or not, it is very musical, and a really accomplished Roller Canary is a living musical box.

It would be waste of effort to train an English Canary as now bred; he simply has not the organs necessary to produce really musical sounds. The Roller Canary, on the other hand, whether it be an English-bred bird, or of enemy origin, is the outcome of generations of effort directed to the improvement of the vocal organs, and perhaps it is true that this has been somewhat overdue, and that one needs to be a Roller fancier to appreciate the artificial perfection to which they have been brought, just as one needs to be a Canary fancier to appreciate the high-shouldered Belgian, or colour-fed Norwich, or the mop-headed Crest.

Is it not palpable, however, that we Englishmen have in our birds which have been bred for outward properties the material to combine with the highly trained excellency of the Roller songster to produce birds which will be beautiful in appearance and will be sufficiently musical to delight the ear of the ordinary bird-keeper?

I have been reading with great interest the article in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1916 entitled "How to Breed English Song Canaries," and this article not only gives an affirmative answer to my question, but tells how the end may be accomplished. I would commend this illuminative article to the many who are interested in the question which has been discussed in your columns.

Open Shows for Young Birds.

SIR,—It has often been a matter of surprise that officials of our important bird societies have not run open young bird shows. Such shows would seem certain of support; in the early part of the season at least, for intending exhibitors would not be deterred by the fear that they would have to meet birds which had already made a name for themselves. By the time the ordinary open shows come round, the old hands can generally foresee the kind of opposition they may have to encounter, and they are able to dodge their entries accordingly, and less experienced exhibitors are left to fill the classes. This would not be the case in the early open young bird shows, and I am sure that the example of the Porth and Rhondda Valleys C.B.S. as published in CAGE BIRDS of April 29 is one that should be extensively followed by societies in general. At least, it would be an interesting experiment.

FIRST FEATHER.

Club Reports.

CODNOR PARK & EASTWOOD.

Meeting and table show, Three Tuns, Eastwood, April 15, with a splendid attendance. A few nice Siskins, Redpolls, and Twites were staged; 1, Lees; 2, 3, Smith. Mr. C. H. Martin, Mansfield, judged. A judging competition was afterwards held, and Mr. Hill won the cash prize for best judgment. Classes for next table show are: Greenfinch, Brambling, and Chaffinch.—Smith and Lees, Sec.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, Old Boar's Head, Manchester, April 29, Mr. Massey presiding. Messrs. W. Bumby, W. Halsall and R. Beckett were elected members. Decided to hold open show on Dec. 1 and 2. Secs. please note to avoid clashing. A fourth lot of rings were ordered. Intending members please send names early to get name printed in rule books.—J. T. Smith, Hon. Sec., 11, Disley St., Sudden, Rochdale.

HIGHGATE & HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, April 17. Members elected: Messrs. Bell, Thurley, Cornell, Wales, Tew, Tyerman and Halford. Mr. P. Johnston took the chair, and we were pleased to hear he has almost recovered from his indisposition. Mr. G. E. Weston gave a lecture on "The Cage Bird Fancy 100 years ago." Comparing methods of bird-keeping, ancient and modern, in these we found an astonishing similarity. Considerable amusement was caused by the reading of the rules of an old C.B.S., and a vote of thanks concluded a fine meeting.—F. C. Knight.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Meeting, Ap. 13, Oldham Hall, Mr. Ewan chair. Five new members enrolled. Mr. C. A. House was elected judge for annual show, Nov. 25. Treasurer reported having received many specials for our N.F. shows, June 3 and July 15; also he reported that the financial condition of the Association is now on the right side. The energy of the Treasurer is much appreciated by members. Mr. Bunner told some reminiscences of his early days in the Fancy, and with some of Mr. Handley's tit-bits the members enjoyed one of the most pleasant meetings ever held in the Oldham Hall.—T. R. Jones.

BRIGHTON AND HOVE C.B.A.

In place of the usual monthly table show a whistle drive for fanciers was held at Headquarters, April 12, when over 50 fanciers and friends sat down to a pleasant evening's enjoyment. 24 games were played, the Club offering some good prizes. Mr. C. Pearson, chairman, acted as M.C. Results were:—Ladies: 1, Mrs. Robinson, 180; 2, Mrs. Simmonds, 174; highest half time, Mrs. Absolon, 88; consolation, Mrs. Ridge, 136. Gents: 1, Mr. Whillier, 170; 2, Mr. Smith, 169; highest half time, Mr. A. Fellows, 90; consolation, Mr. W. H. Gibb, 139.—W. H. Gibb, Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Meeting, Carlton Hotel, Mr. E. J. Banks presided. The recommendations of the committee were adopted and it was agreed that in future we hold our meetings on the third Tuesday in each month. Resolved to hold our open show Nov. 17, 18 and 20. Judges elected: R. L. Crisp, H. C. Smith, J. H. Payne, A. Maggs, and H. Norman. The show will be run in aid of one of the War Charities. We shall hold two young bird shows, the first on June 21; Mr. F. S. Whetton judges Yorks, Mr. A. Maggs Norwich, Mr. H. C. Smith Borders, Mr. D. J. Lewis Mules and British. The following specials were promised: A. Ball, 7s. 6d.; E. J. Banks, 7s. 6d.; D. J. Lewis, 7s. 6d.; H. C. Smith, 5s.; F. Howard, 2s. 6d. P. Braili, salad bowl for best young bird. I am short of specials in the novice classes; will some member please oblige? Agreed to ask Rev. C. B. Jolliffe to give a paper at the next meeting. New members enrolled: Rev. P. E. Yeomans, Messrs. J. Harrison, J. Wells, H. Thomson, J. H. Bevan, T. J. Pugh. Sec. reported he had received letters from Mr. Dugmore, also from Lance-Corporal Charles, who is still in France. I trust all will attend next meeting, as we have an ideal room at the Carlton Hotel; subs. due.—E. Thomas, Sec.

NORTH-WEST GLASGOW C.B.C.

Meeting, Amalgamated Musicians' Hall, Napier's Hall Street, April 25, Mr. W. Loan presiding over a good attendance. Decided to again have specialist judges for each variety at the annual show, Nov. 16; names will be published as soon as possible. Nominated for membership, A. Sloan, D. Eachan, J. Crawford and Steel.—P. Houston, Sec.

PORTH AND RHONDDA VALLEY.

General meeting, April 20, Llawncelyn Hotel, Porth, Mr. T. James chair. Mr. H. C. Smith (Cardiff) was elected to judge show, June 8. Decided to run an open young bird show on July 27 in conjunction with our 2nd F.F. show, and to engage a specialist judge. Birds for June 8 show must be staged not later than 4.30 on afternoon of show. Admission to show, 3d. The CAGE BIRDS scheme for wounded soldiers will be discussed next meeting, May 4.—A. H. C. Legg, Assist. Sec.

WEST BROMWICH C.B.S.

Meeting, April 22, Ivy House, Handsworth. It was heard with deep regret that owing to the war our worthy Sec., Mr. Andrews, was obliged to resign, and members present felt that they could not do better than give him a small donation, which was heartily subscribed. After some discussion Messrs. Collier and Cowley agreed to take over the duties during the war, Mr. Collier doing show work and Mr. Cowley general.—W. Cowley, Holmdene, Zinemore Road, Little Bromwich, Birmingham.

FIFE C.B.L.

Meeting, April 29, Bay Horse Tavern, Lochgelly. Mr. Smith presiding. Decided that the League still go on; meetings to be held every three months. Business of show dates to be carried forward. Agreed that each member of the League pay sixpence. Mr. Storrar brought up some business for discussion, which was left over till some further date. Next meeting, Coalton of Wemyss, last Saturday in July, at 6. A pleasant meeting was brought to a close with a vote of thanks to the chair.—J. Sneddon, Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Meeting April 27, Balance-sheet passed. Mr. T. R. Jones resigned the secretaryship, and Mr. Fred. Handley has again taken over the job. He hopes to be given the support of the Fancy, especially those at a distance. We feel after the clouds roll over things will again bloom for the old society. We have a strong committee of good young fanciers, and greens are going strong in the breeding rooms. We ask all desiring patronage to apply at once; subscriptions, 5s. No caddling for specials. Join at once. Mr. R. Bratherton is treasurer, and will make a good one.—F. Handley.

WALTON AND EVERTON C.B.S.

Meeting, Mission Hall, Kilshaw Street, April 12. The lecture entitled "Seeds of Commerce," as used for cage birds, was ably delivered by Mr. A. G. Hunt, and, being illustrated with some very interesting lantern slides, was warmly appreciated by an audience which exhibited a keen interest in the points brought forward. Together with some of the leading members of the club, were noticed visitors from Wallasey and other districts, who subsequently made known the pleasure they had derived from the visit. The lecturer was warmly thanked by the members, and the lecture was followed by an open discussion on several points. Next meeting, May 10; show business.—A. G. Hunt, Hon. Sec.

EDINBURGH C.B.S.

Meeting, Cairn's Memorial Hall, Gorgie Road, April 16, with a good attendance, Mr. W. Thomson chair. Members elected:—Messrs. A. Bell, Crosbie, and Mercer. Correspondence in connection with a suggested War League in East of Scotland was read, but received very little support, but it was agreed that we fall into line with any suggestion such as a Red Cross show. Sec. was instructed to get into communication with other secs regarding same. It was left to sec. to arrange for a ramble some Saturday afternoon, and to write to Mr. Napier, sec. of Colinton and Currie O.S., asking if any grounds were available in Colinton District. A pleasant hour was spent in questions and answers relating to treating young birds in the nest, cures for sweating hens, etc. Next meeting, May 16.—J. C. Charlton, Sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, April 27, headquarters, "Seven Stars," St. John Street, Wolverhampton, Mr. Willows presiding, and a large number present. New members elected: Messrs. Dalby, Collingswood, Lucas, J. T. Glover. Presentation of gold medal to late Hon. Treasurer, Mr. Cadman, for services to the club since its formation, was made by the Chairman; Mr. Cadman responded. A very interesting paper from Mr. H. G. Hill, of Birmingham, on the breeding and troubles connected with the Roller Canary was read, as unfortunately Mr. Hill was unable to attend. His paper was brimful of interest, and much appreciated and enjoyed. An interesting and varied discussion followed. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Hill for his paper, also in anticipation of his next paper on the "Training" of the Roller Canary, to be given at the June meeting. Next meeting, May 25, Mr. Willows will give a paper on the Roller Canary. Roller fanciers wishing to join the Club should apply to J. W. Thomson, 9, Gorsebrook Road, Wolverhampton.

PLYMOUTH W. COUNTIES O.S.

Presentation to the ex-sec., Mr. T. Pope.

At the meeting on April 18, at the Oddfellows Hall, Morley Street, with a fine muster of members, after general business the Chairman (Mr. W. French) reviewed the great work Mr. Pope had done for the society and for the Fancy in general during his 10 years of office as secretary, and asked him to accept a beautifully illuminated address which contained the names of 69 subscribers, and the balance in cash for himself, and to accept on behalf of Mrs. Pope a silver rose bowl with the subscribers' best wishes. Friend Tom, on rising to receive the presents, was received with musical honours, and "three times three." He thanked the subscribers for their kind appreciation of his services, and also for the present to Mrs. Pope, and said it would be a pleasure to give all his services to the society. Mr. W. Spillman, as the oldest member, also paid a fine tribute to the work Mr. Pope has done, and congratulated the members on securing Mr. Pope's first lieutenant as his successor. The fund sec. having read the many kind letters received expressing the donors' best wishes for Mr. Pope's speedy recovery to his usually good health, a hearty vote of thanks was given to the following friends for their support in helping to make the presentation such a great success: Messrs. C. Baker (Coves), Evans Bros. (Exeter), C. A. House, J. Robson, G. Williams (Torquay), and Symons Bros. (Liskeard). A vote of thanks to the fund sec. brought a most interesting meeting to a close.—J. E. Rowe, Press Correspondent.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Table show of British, April 4; Judge, J. Mace. Redpoll: 1, 2, Walsh; 3, Woodall. Goldfinch, etc.: 1, 2, Fletcher; 3, Walsh. Hardbill, A.O.V.: 1, 2, 3, Walsh. Softbill: 1, 2, Dulong; 3, Walsh. Amat. Classes.—Redpoll, etc.: 1, Buck; 2, Lindley. Goldfinch, etc.: 1, 2, Lindley; 3, Forrester. Hardbill, A.O.V.: 1, 2, 3, Green.—E. C. Job, hon. Sec.

NEWCASTLE (East End) C.B.S.

Meeting Blue Bell Hotel, Shields Road, Newcastle, April 26, Mr. G. W. MacParting presided. In the absence of the sec., Mr. Coutts, on active service, Mr. Hutchinson read the minutes of the previous meeting, which were confirmed, with the exception of the proposition respecting the establishing a 25 miles radius for judges for our future shows. It was decided to let this stand over for the present. Mr. Ed. Colman was elected sec. The chairman made some very pleasing remarks about our new secretary, which were endorsed by all present. Proposed as members, Messrs. J. W. Coulthard and Lawson. It was suggested to have a vacation for three months after our next meeting, and the election of judges will take place then, so it is to be hoped that as many members will be present as possible. As subs. are now due perhaps members will facilitate the work of the new secretary by forwarding the same to his address: 109, Heaton Park-road, Newcastle-on-Tyne.—J. G. Hutchinson, Vice-Chairman.

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Meeting in Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Eglinton Toll, April 26, Mr. R. B. Cairns in the chair, and a good attendance. New members elected: Messrs. Cuthbert, Govanhill; Dobbin, Baillieston; Teviotdale, Govan; and Brown. Decided to hold F.F. show, July 1, in Y.M.C.A. Rooms, at 3. 4 classes Nov. 3, 3 Bords, 3 Yorks, C. or C.B., A.O.V., Mule or Byd. Fee, 3d. per bird. The following gentlemen promised specials: Messrs. McClymont, McClenahan, Hardie, Keelings, E. Steel, Cairns, and Secretary. The club also gives 6s. for best young bird. Judges were selected and will be published as soon as acceptances are to hand. Decided to hold a ramble on June 3. Particulars will be given out at next meeting. Mr. Walter Connelly gave a paper on Canary management of such an instructive nature that it was decided to send a copy to CAGE BIRDS for publication. The discussion which followed became so interesting that it was decided to continue the subject at next meeting, May 24, at 7.45. The club is still open to receive new members. Full particulars from Sec., A. K. Hunter, 142, Aitkenhead Road, Govanhill.

NORTHAMPTON (Hand-in-Hand).

Adjourned annual meeting, April 25, Mr. C. Gray, chair. Balance sheet presented; after holding two most successful shows, and all accounts being paid, a balance was left in hand of £2 19s. 7d. Vote of thanks was accorded the Sec. and Committee for the manner in which they had carried out their work. Election of officers: Mr. W. Allen, chair; Mr. W. Stockwin, vice-chair; Mr. A. W. Law, Sec. and Collector; Committee, Messrs. F. Martin, C. Gray, G. Foster, and R. H. Tipping. A hearty vote of thanks was given to Pres., Mr. W. H. Butlin, Hon. Vice-Consul for Spain, and to the Vice-presidents and subscribers who had so kindly helped to make the Society so prosperous. Some of the members took advantage of the annual meeting to make the Treasurer, Mr. A. E. Dunkley, a presentation of an address, and a beautiful gold pin, for the kindness and interest which he has always taken in the Society. The Treasurer suitably acknowledged the gift. Decided, that we support our own members now gone to the front, and make provision for them to start again in the fancy when they return. Vote of thanks to retiring officers brought a most successful year to its close.—A. W. Law, Sec.

OPEN NORWICH P.C.

General meeting on April 30, Oddfellows' Hall. Only a few turned up, but we got through with a lot of business. Mr. J. W. Kaberry chair. Balance-sheet was read, and we had a little deficit to the bad, but we are hoping to have a little to the good this year. Decided to ask Mr. C. Partington, M.P., to become President for this year, seeing that our late President, Mr. E. Hattersley, of Leeds, is at the front on active service. Vice-presidents elected: Messrs. E. Hattersley, W. A. Cowgill, J. Thomas, A. Humphries, W. Crawshaw, Geo. Harland, A. Hirst, J. W. Ramsden, and F. Carl; Mr. W. A. Wilson was elected chairman; Mr. J. W. Kaberry vice-chairman; Mr. Sam Wilcock was elected sec. and treas. Committee: Messrs. H. Clegg, H. Lord, H. J. Chittenden, W. A. Cowgill, J. Chambers, A. Haigh, S. Heap, H. W. Battye, D. Hunter, F. Hammond, F. Hodgson, J. Wilcock jun., H. H. Towers, P. Mason, F. J. Sykes, A. Humphries, W. Crawshaw, A. Hurst, J. Thomas, H. Gledhill. Sub-committee: Messrs. W. A. Cowgill, A. Haigh, B. Airtion, F. Hammond, F. Hodgson, H. J. Chittenden, G. A. Simonett, J. W. Kaberry, W. A. Wilson, J. Wilcock, jun.; Auditors, Messrs. G. A. Simonett and B. Airtion; new members, Messrs. H. H. Towers, Peterson, F. Hammond, and H. Rushton. We have a few members still owing their subs. for 1915 and 1916, and if only these would pay up we should have a nice balance in hand. But, never mind, I think the C.N.P.C. will clog again if we could only get a little more support from our members, etc. Mr. W. Crawshaw has promised a fancy electroplated teapot for amateurs. It was decided also to give Mr. E. Hattersley's cup to the amateur section again, and this time to be competed for in the open classes, to be won outright in 1916 and 1917. In case of a tie the person receiving the most money prizes to take the cup. So now is a chance for amateurs.—S. Wilcock, Sec.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

W. D. and H. S.—Replied to by post.

TROUBLE WITH HEN (J. R.).—One can only hazard a guess in such a case without so much as seeing the body. In all probability the bird was suffering from anal prolapse when you found her, which may have arisen from an attempt to pass an abnormally large egg, or from obstinate egg-binding. Such a case could not have been very amenable to treatment, and you probably did the best thing under the circumstances.

REFUSES TO SING (E. A.).—If the other bird has been hung beside him since he ceased to sing, it is just possible that his silence now is due to sulkeness more than anything else. Stop giving apple and banana, and give instead a little fresh green salad daily, dandelion, chickweed, or flower heads of groundsel for preference, in the order named. Every second day for a fortnight or so give also in addition to the usual seed diet a piece of bread the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, and sprinkled with soft sugar; and on the alternate days add to the drinking water 20 drops of whisky, ten of lemon juice, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. It would also help to keep a small cube of hard common salt stuck in the wires for a week or two for him to peck at when he likes.

FED UP (J. W. M.).—Don't despair. After all, the whole trouble may be due to some weak point in your management, but as you give me no particulars on this occasion, I cannot say definitely what it is. Try what the following course will do in two or three weeks. First of all see that it is not exposed to direct cold draughts or sudden extremes of heat and cold. By the way, it would have been helpful had you said whether the bird is, or has been, dropping feathers since the proper moulting season. Give a staple diet of three parts Canary to one part summer rape. In addition, give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion added, and about the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed with it. On the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give also two crisp young leaves of dandelion daily. If the birds remain together—which you may allow if the cock has not been dropping feathers—double these quantities of extras. In the drinking water, two days in every three for a week, add ten drops of lemon juice, six of glycerine, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence.

BARE HEAD, ETC. (Mrs. B. Taylor).—I think it not unlikely that your fear about the bird's eyes being affected may be well founded. Catch the bird and look carefully into the eyes in a good light, and if you find the appearance of a milky-white disc in the centre of each eye you may know that the bird is suffering from cataract, and, in that event, nothing you can do will be of the least avail towards a cure. Neither should you use the bird for breeding under any circumstances. The loss of feathers may be due to its generally weak condition. Altogether, I should regard it as a very undesirable bird to breed with this season. Treat as follows: Every second day for two or three weeks, in addition to its staple seed diet, give a piece of bread, the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days during the first week add to the drinking water 20 drops of fluid magnesia, and after that give instead six drops each of tincture of gentian and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. Allow it to bathe quite freely, but it would be most advisable not to change it about to other cages which other birds have to occupy. Give a fair amount of fresh green salad daily. You may slightly moisten the bare place twice a week with sulphur ointment, and then dust liberally with dry boric acid.

WON'T SIT AT NIGHT (W. W.).—It is certainly a strange idiosyncrasy that the hen will not sit on the nest between 3 p.m. and 6 a.m. You should have tried quietly placing a light cover over the front of the cage in the early evening. Possibly there is an altered aspect of something in the vicinity of the cage after the lights are lit in the evening which disturbs her. Still, do not be too sure that the eggs are spoilt. Let them sit the full period, and possibly you may be agreeably surprised at the result. There is no explaining these idiosyncrasies.

EGG-BINDING (J. Hale).—You seem to be doing all that is possible to tend towards preventing this trouble, and as it is so persistent with your birds it really seems as if it must be due to some inherent weakness in the strain, or, possibly, the birds being in an overfat condition, or with very limited exercise. Continue your present treatment, but instead of giving a pinch of inga only when the hens are going to nest, give half a teaspoonful, or a small teaspoonful if the cocks are with them, of a mixture of equal parts niger, white millet, and broken groats, every second day, and on the alternate days add to the water 20 drops of whisky and ten of glycerine. Let them have as much space for exercise as possible, and every second day for the next week add to the water of all the affected birds six drops of syrup of buckthorn and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. Give a little fresh green food daily—flower heads of groundsel, chickweed, or watercress, in the order named—but do not give these birds any dandelion at all.

WHAT IS WRONG? (W. A.).—I'm afraid I cannot tell from your description what is wrong with the bird with any certainty. It may be some fungoid growth on the skin, or merely the consequence of some friction, or other slight injury. Try the following treatment for a week or two, and if the bird is in good health otherwise, nothing else should be necessary. If it is not effectual, write again and repeat particulars, and I will advise you further. In addition to the staple seed diet give every second day for a week or fortnight, as may seem necessary, a piece of bread, the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, dusted with flowers of sulphur, and then sprinkled with soft sugar; and on the alternate days give in the water ten drops of lemon juice and fifteen of fluid magnesia. Give a little fresh, crisp, young dandelion daily, and allow the bird to bathe quite freely. You may slightly moisten the scurvy bare parts once each week with sulphur ointment, and then dust well with dry boric acid to dry it.

CURLED FEATHER IN WING (F. J.).—You omit to say whether the curled feather is one of the smaller ones or a "right" feather; that is, one of the larger quill feathers. But in either case you may gently pluck it out, and whilst it is being replaced, keep a morsel of cuttlefish, or a cube of lump sugar, or hard common salt, stuck in the wires for the bird to peck at and thus help to divert its attention from its plumage, in case the feather has been curled by the bird itself nibbling at it and drawing it through its beak, as some birds have a habit of doing. If this is not the real cause in your case, the above treatment will probably result in the new feather growing in the proper shape. As the bird does not seem to be in very good breeding condition, I should not expect much of the clutch of eggs by him, but the feather abnormality will not necessarily have anything whatever to do with the fertility of the eggs.

A SECOND CLUTCH (S. K. R.).—The proper thing to have done when the young left the nest and you saw the hen was coming forward rapidly for a second brood, was to have placed the young in a nursery cage and hung it on the front of the breeder, where the parents could have fed them through the wires, or, if they were in a double breeding cage with the other end unoccupied, to have put the young there with the wire slide between them, and then in either of these cases at once returned the cock to the hen and given a clean nest pan and material. The cock would then probably have taken over the feeding of the young, or at least have assisted the hen in completing their rearing. It will probably be too late to do anything by the time this reply reaches you, but if the full clutch has been laid and the hen recommenced sitting, let her go on and sit the full time. It is not quite impossible for them to be fertile, but is certainly very improbable.

WHAT TO DO (Mrs. F. Walker).—Sorry, but you can do nothing at all to force the hen to sit which refuses to do so voluntarily after being egg-bound. The only rational way out of the difficulty is to get the eggs hatched under a foster hen or hens, if any such are available. If no other hen is quite ready to sit, you may keep the eggs in good condition for a week or ten days by keeping well covered with bran in a small box, keeping the box in a cool dry place and giving it a half-turn every morning and evening. Leave the pair together until they go to nest again in the usual course, and meantime give the hen a small pinch of inga seed daily. If I understand you correctly that the birds are in the same cage as Britishers, you must not expect to be free from troubles of various kinds in the nesting of the Canaries. They should be in a cage by themselves.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

HAND-REARING (D. L.).—I fancy you will be more successful with your birds as pets if you hand-rear them yourself, taking them just as they begin to open their eyes, and the quills begin to shoot. The majority reared from this age make delightful pets, and can be kept as tame as possible with a little trouble. Almost all young birds can be reared with the usual egg and biscuit mixture, but for the softbills I like to add a few good ants' eggs and a little stale sponge cake, making it moist with fresh new milk. The best plan is to mix it dry, and at each feeding time moisten just as much as is required. Occasionally a pinch of fine grit should be added to aid digestion. The secret in successful hand-rearing is to see that all food given is perfectly sweet, and the babies kept cosy and warm. For this purpose a piece of flannel over them answers admirably. They should be fed as early as possible in the morning, and a little given every hour (when first taken) during the day until sunset. The time between the feeds can be lengthened as they grow. Young Finches should have a little steeped rape added to their food after the first week. If in doubt about any particular species I shall be pleased to advise you. (2) I have occasionally seen the bird-calls you require, in some of the bird-dealers' windows. If you are near London you might try Selator Street, Bishopsgate.

SUFFERING FROM CONSTIPATION (W. G. Tucker).—The food that you are giving your birds is liable to affect them in the way you say, because it is composed almost entirely of meat. Your best plan is to mix with it some scraped raw carrot or chopped green food, or occasionally a little boiled potato. A few ordinary grocer's currants will also assist. Before making this change I would advise you to give them an aperient of salts. Dissolve in an ounce of water as much as will cover a sixpence, and let them have it to drink for one day only. If your birds are healthy they will not over-feed, but birds suffering from certain complaints will sometimes gorge themselves, and this generally increases the trouble.

BULLFINCH AILING (M. A. Pike).—It is a great mistake to keep such a robust bird as a Bullfinch in a heated room during the winter months. You have done quite right in moving her to cooler quarters, but you must not expect any improvement at once. I would advise the following treatment. First an aperient of Glauber salts, as much as will cover a threepenny-piece, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of water, with 3 drops of syrup of rhubarb added. Give this for one day, then miss a couple of days and repeat. Offer a cube of stale bread soaked in hot milk, with a dusting of powdered bismuth on it. This can be given daily for a time, and then at intervals as the bird gets better a little soaked rape and teazle would also be advisable, and of course green food, wild seeds, and fruit, as they come in season. Give the bath on fine days.

FIGHTING GOLDFINCH (F. James).—I fear you can only breed from your bird with a little management. Such birds if left with the hen will sometimes cause permanent injury. Run him and the hen into a cage with a sliding partition, putting one bird in each compartment. Feed the hen well and when she is quite fit for nesting introduce a good stout cock Canary into the room, and then call to the cock, when the Goldie will probably mate with her. You may have to repeat the operation a few times before it is successful. I am afraid you neglected to let the Goldfinch and the hen Canaries fly together during the winter.

MULE NOT SINGING (Started).—Your bird should certainly be in full song now, and I fear there is something wrong in your treatment. Make a change in his diet. Instead of the seed mixture you are now giving, procure the following (best quality): 3 parts canary, 1 part rape, 1 part teazle. Give this as a staple diet. Make another mixture of niger, maw, hemp, gold of pleasure, and dandelion, and give a spoonful twice a week. Also offer twice a week a little soft food, either egg-food or bread and milk. Collect dandelion heads and supply pretty freely. These should be gathered just as the seeds commence to ripen. Before making this change put 5 drops of syrup of buckthorn in his drinking water, let him have this to drink for six hours, and repeat two days later. Keep him in a large cage and let him bathe frequently.

GOLDFINCH AND LINNET (T. McCulloch).—These two birds should not be together, as they require different treatment, and you will get more song out of them if kept separately. Discontinue the linseed just now in the mixture for the Goldie, and give half the quantity of canary, but you would do well to send for our Nutsell booklets, No. 1 and No. 2, on the Goldfinch and Linnet; our manager would send you these post free for a shilling, and you will find in them full details as to feeding, etc. (2) A small aviary as you suggest would do admirably for a few British; see that it is somewhat sheltered from wind and rain.

AGE OF A LINNET (A Beginner).—It is impossible to tell the exact age of a bird, but there are certain signs that the bird fancier with experience can detect that assist him in making a shrewd guess at a bird's age. The most pronounced of these is the state of the legs and feet. As birds age in captivity the feet and legs get lighter in colour and rough and scaly in appearance, the beak is frequently overgrown, and there is a look of age about the bird generally. Quite young birds can be detected before they moult, the plumage generally being streaked, soft and downy looking.

MULE HOARSE (I.I.A.B.C.).—Your feeding appears to be fairly correct, although you say nothing of green food, which he should have three or four times a week. Give him a mild aperient, and make up a mixture of equal parts of glycerine and honey, and give half a teaspoonful in two tablespoonful of water. Be careful not to hang him in a draughty position.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

KEEPING BUDGERIGARS WITH CANARIES (Anxious).—The only deleterious effect the Budgerigars could have on your Canaries is that some of the young birds might mark their song by embodying in it some of the Budgie's notes. Budgerigars are not screechers; nevertheless, they certainly do not belong to the Quaker community. One of their popular names (not much used now) is Warbling Grass Parakeet, and they well deserve this title—the chattering is not by any means unpleasant nor unmusical.

ARE SEVEN TOO MANY? (T. T. Sunderland).—No, providing none of them are larger than Avadavats, and the cage is kept strictly clean. Also a couple of twiggy branches should be fixed on the back of the cage for the birds to disport upon, or perhaps one bushy branch fixed horizontally across the back would be best, but in either case it must be twiggy, not merely to supply perching accommodation, but dense enough for the birds to slip into the thick of it and imagine themselves screened from the vulgar gaze.

CAGE FOR BUDGERIGARS (A. G. H.).—You are quite correct; I do recommend a semi-box cage for these birds. Granting all you say in favour of an all-wire cage, the fact remains that such a cage leaves its occupants exposed to every current of wind that occurs in its vicinity, and that is the ground of my objection to an all-wire cage, for the hardest of birds soon succumb to draught. By semi-box cage I mean one in which the back, one end, and half the top are wood and the front, one end and front half of the top are wire. A movable front is an advantage. Of course, for ordinary purposes the cage is exactly the same as one with a fixed front, but when the time comes for the half-yearly "spring clean" the value of a detachable front is at once apparent, for with the front removed it is easy to get at every part of the interior for the thorough cleaning and distemping that is required. Give them twiggy branches fastened to the back and end of cage with a little binding wire, to climb about upon, and they will not lack exercise.

GREEN AMAZON DROWSY (Green Amazon).—While you must not allow the bird to be on really "short commons," some effort should be made to compel it to take such as safflower and hemp seed and oats, as well as the sunflower seeds. It also should get some ripe fruit daily, as well as nuts in variety. Pieces of biscuit, plain cake, and crusts of stale household bread are all wholesome extras for it. Grit, cuttlebone, water, and a piece of wood to exercise its mandibles upon should always be in the cage. For a couple of months put it upon the following treatment. Every fourth day put into the drinking water one teaspoonful of Binnford's Magnesia, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Get a box of honey and borax, and as long as it lasts give the bird a little daily, either by putting it into its mouth from the end of a small stick or feather, or by smearing it along the edges of its mandibles. To make sure, administer it both ways.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

G. H. and W. E. T.—Your letters have been addressed and forwarded as desired.

About a Points Competition (J. Davies).—I think it would have been better had you sent me a copy of your rules governing this competition, but perhaps no special rules were printed, and in the absence of any rule affecting my opinion, I can only declare it to be as follows:—

As far as I can understand the case, from your statement of it, the prizes were to go to the winners of most points in the Norwich and Yorkshire classes. The Yorkshire classes filled, but in the Norwich classes there were only two or three entries in each class, with four in one class.

You say that owing to this difference in the entry the Yorkshire men counted full points, whilst in the Norwich section it was impossible for anyone to count more than nine or ten points. I take it from this that some of the prizes were withheld, and that you counted upwards from the commended cards, instead of downward from the highest bird.

If this is so, the point competition was, in my opinion, distinctly unfair, as an exhibitor should not be handicapped by circumstances over which he has no control. A show executive can by its rules with hold prizes in the event of insufficient competition, but that does not entitle it to say that in a points competition an exhibitor who would, in the case of the classes being properly filled, receive the first prize, but who, owing to scarcity of entries, takes only a second or third, shall be handicapped.

If, however, my presumption is wrong, and no prizes were withheld, and the Norwich men merely suffered by reason of their scarcity of numbers, then in my opinion the competition was perfectly fair. Moreover, you tell me that the Norwich members were not for showing at first, but only did so in order to make the show look more respectable. It is an arguable point whether by their very creditable action in trying to make the show look respectable they have not prejudiced their rights to make a protest.

I do not like to venture this opinion without hearing the other side of the case, and with only the insufficient material that you provide. But I have done my best in the face of these difficulties to help you and the society in a matter which I can see is one of considerable difficulty.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

G. E. Pretty.—Your bird had died as the result of an injury. There was extensive bruising with hemorrhage over the left side, which was only discernible upon removing the skin.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it. It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, and a leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all are considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

STANTON, 33, Bohnfield WINTON, PATRICROFT,

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each 1/-, or fraction of 1/-, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

HOW BRITISH BIRDS CHANGE THEIR PLUMAGE.

We are indebted to Mr. H. F. Witherby, the Editor, for permission to extract from an exhaustive article entitled: "THE MOULTS OF THE BRITISH PASSERES, WITH NOTES ON THE SEQUENCE OF THEIR PLUMAGE," which is appearing monthly in the magazine "British Birds," the portions which refer to such birds as are generally kept in cages or aviaries. Readers are referred to the magazine mentioned for the complete account.

JUVENILE.—Very much like a juvenile Yellow Bunting, but the edgings of the feathers of the upper-parts paler, and the rump buff without the chestnut tinge. Sexes alike.

FIRST WINTER AND SUMMER.—The juvenile body-feathers and wing-coverts are moulted in the first autumn, but not the primary-coverts, wing or tail feathers. The birds then become like the adults, and cannot be distinguished with certainty, though females with browner and more streaked upper-breasts and browner crowns (more noticeable in summer) are probably first winter or summer birds.

REED-BUNTING (Emberiza s. schneidleri).

ADULTS.—Complete moult from September to November. From March to May a partial moult takes place and this is confined to the chin, upper throat, lores, ear-coverts and usually the forehead. Before this moult takes place abrasion has made in the male the crown, throat and ear-coverts much blacker than in fresh plumage, but the lores never become black before the moult. The new feathers in the male are entirely black except those of the malar stripes, which are white. Abrasion gradually causes the crown to become black, the back of the neck white forming a collar, the mantle blacker, the rump greyer and the under-parts whiter. The female moults the same parts as the male, but apparently less completely, and the new feathers are coloured much as the winter ones. Abrasion makes the crown darker but never uniform black as in the male; in much worn females a narrow greyish-white collar appears, and the rump becomes greyish but not so grey as in the male.

JUVENILE.—Much like the female, but more boldly streaked on the upper-parts and the feather-edges paler, the sides of the throat, breast and flanks with short streaks and spots of black. Sexes alike.

FIRST WINTER AND SUMMER.—The juvenile body-feathers and wing-coverts are moulted in August and September, but not the primary-coverts, wing or tail-feathers. After this moult the male becomes like the adult male, but the feathers of the crown and throat have longer buff tips, there is less white on the feathers at the back of the neck, the ear-coverts are browner and the feathers of the chin usually have no black. After the spring moult and when abraded the first summer male becomes difficult to distinguish from the adult, but the white collar is narrower and more spotted and the black does not extend so far down the breast. The first winter and summer female is rather browner on the crown and more streaked on the breast and flanks than the adult female, and has no white on the back of the neck.

LAPLAND BUNTING (Calcurus l. lapponicus).

ADULTS.—Complete moult in August. In April a partial moult takes place, this being confined to the lores, forehead, ear-coverts, chin and upper throat. In the male the new feathers in these parts are jet black, while abrasion gradually makes the rest of the crown and the base of the throat uniform black, the band at the back of the neck uniform bright orange-chestnut, and the mantle and rump much darker. The female in winter has much less black on the crown than in the male, and the chestnut collar is scarcely noticeable, the black on the upper breast and side of the throat is almost concealed by the buff fringes of the feathers and the streaks on the flanks are much narrower and chestnut-brown. The female moults in the spring in the same parts as the male, but less completely. The new feathers on the sides of the head and throat have more black than the winter ones, but even when much abraded the crown is always streaked, and the black feathers of the base and sides of the throat have some whitish tips.

JUVENILE.—The upper parts are much like those of the adult summer female, but there is no trace of a chestnut band at the back of the neck, the throat is spotted with brown-black, and the lower throat and upper breast are buffish-yellow with narrow streaks.

FIRST WINTER AND SUMMER.—The juvenile body-feathers, lesser and median wing-coverts are moulted in August and September, but not the other wing-coverts nor the wing and tail feathers. The male then becomes like the adult male, but the chestnut neck-band has minute black spots, and in summer the crown and throat never become so uniform black as in the adult. The first winter female has very little black on the feathers of the sides of the head, and malar stripe, and the feathers of the upper-breast and lower throat have streaks of black and tawny instead of large dark centres as in the adult. After the spring moult the bird is like the adult except for these streaks on the breast.

BLACK-HEADED BUNTING (Emberiza melanocephala).

CORRECTION.—The juvenile plumage is completely moulted, including the wing and tail feathers, at the first autumn moult. Dr. C. B. Ticehurst has very kindly pointed out to me that a specimen in the British Museum collection which has still some juvenile feathers upon it, is moulting its wings and tail. I have examined this specimen, as well as a female which is certainly in first winter plumage and has still remains of sheaths on the primaries, so that specimens in moult in other collections which I had examined were probably not in a sufficiently advanced stage to show the wing and tail moult which certainly occurs. I am much indebted to Dr. Ticehurst for enabling me to make this correction.

FAMILY ALAUDIDE.

Although the British species in this family belong to six genera, they all have the same moults. The adults have a complete autumn moult, and the young also all have a complete moult in the first autumn. There is no spring moult at any age. It is not therefore necessary to describe the moults of each species separately, but the sequences of plumage may be briefly referred to.

Before proceeding to do so, I should like to mention an interesting point which concerns all the species. This is that in the juvenile plumage the first (broad) primary is considerably larger, i.e., longer and usually broader and less pointed, than in the first winter and subsequent plumages.

The only other species of the British Passeres which, so far as I know, moult their juvenile wing and tail feathers in the first autumn are: Sturnus vulgaris, Pastor roseus, Montifringilla nivalis, Passer domesticus, P. montanus, Emberiza calandra, E. melanocephala, E. cioides, Agithalos caudatus, Panurus biarmicus. In these the first primary is markedly larger in the juvenile of Panurus biarmicus than in the adult, as Dr. Hartert has already pointed out (Vog. pal. Fauna, Vol. 1, pp. 403-4). I find a similar but less marked difference in Passer domesticus, P. montanus, and Agithalos caudatus; there is a slight difference in Sturnus vulgaris and Montifringilla nivalis, but I can find none in Pastor roseus and the three species of Emberiza.

SHORE LARK (Eremophila a. flava).

ADULTS.—The female has less yellow on the forehead than the male and the yellow of the chin and throat is duller, the black on the crown and throat is more restricted, the feathers of the "horns" are shorter, the nape and hind-neck are less pink and the rest of the upper-parts are more prominently streaked. The difference in the sexes becomes more marked in summer when abrasion of the tips and fringes of the feathers has made the yellow and black in the male purer and more uniform, while the crown of the female becomes only spotted with black, the nape of the male becomes a purer pink, while that of the female is much browner as well as being streaked.

JUVENILE.—Differs markedly from adults, whole upper parts being blackish-brown, each feather with a buffish or yellowish-white spot at the tip, the wing-coverts are the same with a broader margin of buffish-white, the wing and tail are evenly margined with buffish white, the chin and throat are pale yellow somewhat faintly spotted with dusky, the breast and flanks are dusky black-brown, the feathers being fringed and tipped with yellowish or buffish white.

LIFE'S LITTLE IRONIES.

Infertile Eggs and Bad Feeding Hens.

A LECTURE BY MR. W. CONNELLY, BEFORE THE MEMBERS OF GLASGOW (QUEEN'S PARK) C.B.S.

In this instructive lecture, which was forwarded to us by express wish of the members of the Glasgow Queen's Park C.B.S. for publication for the benefit of our readers in general, a well-known authority tells how to combat two of the principal troubles which beset the inexperienced Canary breeder.

I HAVE taken for the subject of my paper to-night two points which are important to all Canary breeders, and I should like to hear the opinions of other members upon these two important matters.

There are, unfortunately, few fanciers who have not experienced difficulties in the way of clear eggs or bad feeding hens. During the breeding season, even in the best conducted bird room, all is not plain sailing. There are always ups and downs, sometimes more downs than ups, in connection with our hobby. How to overcome some of these difficulties we will discuss to-night.

To deal first with the question of clear eggs. I will attempt to name a few of the causes and suggest a few of the remedies which I myself adopt. In many cases the cock bird is to blame, sometimes the hen, and sometimes, in my opinion, the principal responsibility for the trouble falls on the breeder himself.

The male bird must be in the best possible condition, and to get him forward the method I adopt is to put as soon as possible in the New Year all cocks intended for breeding into single cages. This is with the object of being able to treat them individually.

Birds vary in their dispositions and requirements, and some need more feeding up than others. When the birds are separated, if it is desired to bring one along in extra quick time, it may, of course, be treated with that object in view.

I like the male birds to come into condition quite naturally without any forcing, but if any appear to be backward in condition they may have a little extra egg food, with a pinch of maw seed, a few young dandelion leaves, and a little chemical food in the water.

Look to the Cock Bird.

I am very particular in getting the cock birds forward before the hens are ready. In a great many cases the hens come earlier into condition than the cock birds, and many mistakes are made because of this. A fancier sees that the hen is flapping her wings and calling to the cock bird, and he makes the mistake of mating up a pair before the cock bird is ready. The result of this is unfertile eggs, besides a very considerable loss of stamina being taken out of the hen bird.

One has only to remember that there are always more clear eggs in the first round than in the remaining rounds to see at once the necessity of this reminder.

Besides the cock bird which may not be ready, we have the kind which is shy or nervous, although in full condition. When he has such birds as these, the Fancier should spend all his spare moments among his stock, not necessarily fussing about the cages and disturbing the birds, but in order to make sure of the disposition of the birds he is about to use in the breeding season.

Get Rid of the Nervous Ones.

Nervous birds are unreliable in the breeding room, and it is by far the better plan to do away with these altogether, and introduce more satisfactory specimens. There can be no mistake whatever as to whether the cock bird is in proper condition, for he will show it by every attitude. He will dance about the perch with his wings down, singing all the time, and you may then rely upon full eggs every time.

On the hen's side, we may find also the cause of unfertile eggs. The hen, for instance, may have slipped claws, so that she cannot get a proper grip of the perch, and a hen of this sort is better discarded altogether. If, however, she is really a typical bird, and it is a matter of considerable importance to produce some young from her, then of course a chance must be taken that the pairing may take place on the bottom of the cage.

The nest should never be put into the cage until the fancier is certain that breeding operations have commenced. Otherwise there is the danger of the hen sitting on her nest and calling from that position. If, however, there is any particular reason why the nest should be put in before actual pairing up, it should be filled with sand up to within half an inch of the top to give a better chance to the cock bird.

Some hens also will crouch in the seed box, and when I see this I put a small egg-feeding dish upside down in the corner of the seed box. This generally has the effect of scaring her away, and the same plan may be used in the case of hens building their nests in the seed box.

In this instructive article, which was given as a lecture to the members of the Walton and Everton C.B.S., the author, Mr. A. G. Hunt, of the Sterling Seed Co., Liverpool, tells in easily understood terms all about the seeds generally used by bird-keepers, and gives valuable advice as to their combination in mixture.

LARGE quantities are also imported into England for feeding racehorses, and for this reason growers have attempted to raise it in this country. Canary seed grows quite well here, the difficulty, however, being in the ripening of the seed, which matures very late in the autumn and is spoilt by early frosts and autumn rains. Were it not for this I have no doubt it would be grown very extensively in England.

This, then, gives you a general idea of its origin and uses, and we now come to the part most interesting to fanciers, viz., its feeding value.

We see at once from the illustration that it is principally composed of starch (carbohydrates), which is represented by 52 per cent., and that it also contains a fair share of albuminoids, 13½ per cent., but, on the other hand, is very short of oil and mineral matter. It follows, then, that this seed is of a rather dry nature, and on account of the large proportion of starchy matter is used more in the production of heat and energy than in any other direction.

It forms a good basis for a staple diet, but I do not agree with feeding birds upon this seed alone, a method which is favoured by some fanciers. I believe that too much canary seed given by itself is liable to cause indigestion, as there is far too small an amount of fat or oil and too little mineral matter to effect solution of the over-dose of carbohydrates.

I am quite aware that some fanciers claim to be able to keep both Canaries and British birds in the pink of condition on this seed alone, but it remains to be seen if their condition could not be improved by the introduction of small quantities of other seeds into the diet. I shall not deal with this seed further just now, as I may bring it up again later in conjunction with others.

RAPE (Brassica napus) is an annual plant growing to a height of about 4 feet, belonging to the cabbage family, and bearing a yellow flower which turns to a dark brown as the pods are formed. It is a native of Europe, and naturalised in England.

Rape is cultivated very extensively in France, Russia, and the Central Empires for the production of rape oil, which is extracted from the seeds and used in large quantities for machinery and for burning in lamps. The kind generally grown for this purpose is the red or summer rape.

In England the large black seeded variety known as cole seed is grown by sheep farmers as a "catch crop," being sown about May (either by itself or mixed with mustard), so that it is in full growth when pasturage is scarce.

The sheep are then turned on to the ground where the rape is growing, and they trample the plants under foot, eating the green parts and leaving the stems to be ploughed in in the autumn. This forms one of the finest preparations for a crop of wheat or other cereal. A certain amount, of course, has to be saved for seed in order to keep up the supply, which fluctuates considerably from year to year.

A Seed Rich in Oil.

I do not think that English rape or cole seed is cultivated much for oil, if at all, as this is practically all imported. Rape oil, better known as colza oil, is a very valuable commercial product, and after the requirements in this respect have been met we find a surplus of seed upon the market from which the dealers obtain their stocks for bird feeding.

The first thing which strikes one on looking at the analysis of rape seed is the large proportion of oil, 40 per cent., and while we are considering this it is well to point out that although the red and black rape seeds are and seed cannot be obtained from the same plant without detriment to either one or both, as the seed is not ripe until the fibre is past its best, and so we often find unripe samples on the market which are the outcome of growers trying to obtain a double crop from the same plants.

The Danger of Crushed Hemp.

There is another item of great importance to fanciers which is well worthy of mention. In some tropical countries hemp is cultivated for the production of what is known as hashish, which has somewhat of the same narcotic effects as opium, and is used by the natives for the same purpose. It is extracted from the leaves and the husks of the seed, and so fanciers might do well to avoid crushing their hemp too small when giving it to birds, as if the husk is ground up with the kernel the birds are bound to eat some of it. This may result in ill effects to the birds because of the narcotic contained in the portions of husk consumed. This, I believe, is the reason why some fanciers condemn hemp for feeding young birds, although, perhaps, they are not aware of the real cause of the ill effects thus produced.

It will be seen that, like rape, it contains a good proportion of oil, 32 per cent., and has also a fair amount of albuminoids, 16 per cent., while the carbohydrates are represented by a further 16 per cent. It is well known that the oil contained in hemp is of a very fattening nature, and also produces heat, so that this seed forms a suitable addition to the diet in winter.

A great deal of difference of opinion prevails regarding the use of hemp, but I fail to see how it can do any harm if used with discretion. I should consider it a very valuable seed to use, as its composition proves it to be very nutritious, and it is especially valuable where size is required, because it is

Now we come to the breeder himself, and many faults rest with him.

I am not endeavouring to dictate to those who think they have nothing to learn—if they have discovered methods which fully suit them they should by all means stick to them—still I am sure none of us are too old to learn, and any of us may hear of something new one from the other.

A very frequent fault with the breeder himself is that he is too anxious and in too big a hurry to get eggs and young birds. He feeds up his birds all too soon, and rushes them together before the proper season. There are some fanciers who believe in pairing up all their stock on some particular day, some March 1, others on St. Patrick's Day, and other special days, as may be favoured.

Be Guided by the Weather.

Those who adopt these methods are asking for trouble. The fancier should study each individual bird, and see that both birds are in thorough breeding condition. He should also keep his eye on the weather, for on all dates you may get hard frosts at night or in the early morning, and this would interfere considerably with breeding operations.

There is an old saying that "When the wind is in the East it's neither good for man nor beast." This saying is a very true one, and no Canary breeder can afford to ignore it. Never mind about Mr. So-and-So having already paired up his birds, study your own birds and the weather.

A matter of great importance is the proper kind of perches and their fixing. They should be very securely fixed in their positions. They should be about 5th of an inch broad, slightly rounded on the top. The surface should not be too smooth, and a good way to ensure a proper surface is to lightly draw a rasp over them so that the birds can get a good hold. Some perches I have seen have been as smooth as glass and birds could be seen sliding off them.

One caution I would give in particular, and that is do not have any birds flying loose about the room during the breeding season.

How to Treat the Bad Feeders.

Now we come to the bad feeding hens, and this is a very difficult question. Hens may feed very well during the first round and never give the young the slightest attention on the second. A hen may have been perfectly all right during a whole season, but the next year she may be off it altogether.

You cannot really make a hen feed when she declines to do so. They will have their own way in spite of their owners. It is very annoying to the novice to lose brood after brood in this way and have to say to himself as I did many times "Better luck next time." However, the fancier who is troubled with such hens should use all his wits in the endeavour to get some at least of the young ones reared.

If the case is not absolutely hopeless, I find there is nothing to beat giving the hens plenty of green food, such as dandelion heads, lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or whatever green food they prefer. I like the first two myself.

The birds are very fond of dandelion heads and lettuce, and either of these should be given to them in plenty, seeing of course that it is perfectly fresh. A little and often is better than a large supply left in the cage to go stale. The hens are so fond of these two green stuffs that they will fill their crops so full as to be glad to get rid of it in feeding the young.

It is very important to take a run round the room at night and remove any green stuff that is left. Withered green meat is rank poison, and many fanciers have lost birds through leaving green food in the cages. Some hens do much better if the cock bird is left with them while they are rearing the young. This method I always use myself when possible. I think it is more natural that the cock bird should be allowed to assist in the duties, and he very seldom fails to do so; in fact I have seen the cock bird so anxious to perform his share that he will push the hen off the nest to feed the young.

If the cock bird will not assist, or is otherwise mischievous, he should be removed at night-time, and the hen should be allowed to rear the brood herself.

Some hens may go off feeding at some particular stage. In such cases I find a small dose of Rochelle salts works wonders. Another hen which I find occasionally is the one which will rear one or two of her youngsters but allow the rest to die. In such cases I add a little steeped rape or a little maw seed to the egg food. This coaxes them to feed, and I often do this with hens that are poor feeders.

The oftener the hen comes off the nest the better. They usually give the youngsters a pick every time they approach the nest, and their frequent absence allows the air to get into the young ones and helps them to thrive.

Then again we have the hen that will scarcely come off her young at all. She sits continually, and never gives them any food whatever until they are smothered. This is often due to too early pairing. The young are hatched during cold weather, and the hen is afraid to come off. I have proved it to be much more profitable to be three or four weeks later in starting, for even though you may be a bit later in finishing the season's results you will find you have more young at the end of the period.

Don't Hurry in Pairing.

The system I have followed for a great many years is not to pair up until about the middle of April, and even then only when I am certain that both birds are in breeding condition. A point of great importance is to set two or three birds at the same time. I have often kept back the setting of a hen only because I had not another one ready at the moment.

If you know you have a reliable feeder in your stock upon which you can depend, it is well to transfer to her care any eggs upon which you set special store. The eggs may be marked with ink so that you may know the defaulter if any eggs are clear, but never mind if you do get a little mixed with regard to the youngsters, so long as you get them reared, you will soon find out the cup winner or the ten guinea bird.

A point of importance is to be sure that just before roosting time all the crops of the birds are full. You will often find a small youngster in a nest, and such weaklings are those that generally go to the wall. Those that hold their heads the highest get the most, and it is necessary to look after any that are being neglected. In such cases these birds must be fed by hand to make up for the neglect of the parents.

In conclusion if anything that I have said is new to some, and proves of any service, my object will have been attained, and I shall feel repaid for the trouble.

about equal in their proportion of oil, there is a great difference in the nature of the two varieties.

The oil in the red seed is of a much milder nature, while the black seed contains a rather rank oil which, when given to birds in anything like a quantity, invariably causes looseness of the bowels. The red seed, therefore, is the best for birds, as you all know. We find that rape is also rich in albuminoids, which are very feeding, and also that it contains a good percentage of mineral matter, which is very valuable indeed.

The small percentage of starch (carbohydrates) in comparison with the other ingredients makes it one of the best seeds to mix with canary as a staple diet, but this is another matter I shall deal with in due course.

HEMP (Cannabis sativa) is a tall herb, growing to a height of anything from 4 to 12 or 15 feet, according to soil and climate, having male and female plants, and belonging to the same family as the common nettle.

Where Hemp Comes From.

The whole plant strongly resembles a wild nettle on a very large scale. It is a native of Asia (probably Persia), but, like flax, it is very adaptable, and grows equally well under the hot tropical sun or in the cold climate of Russia. It has also become naturalised in Europe and America, and is cultivated to some extent in England and Ireland. The principal sources of supply are Russian Poland, and Manchuria, while a considerable quantity comes to us from the United States and from our own Colonies.

Hemp is cultivated for two very important reasons, for the production of fibre used in the manufacture of ropes, and coarse sackcloth, and also for the large amount of oil to be obtained from the seed, which is used in the manufacture of paints, varnishes, and soft soap.

We can all realise the importance of hemp fibre for making ropes, twine, and sacks, and can, perhaps, form some slight idea of the vast quantities which must be produced in order to keep up the world's supply of these articles. It is interesting to note that fibre both a flesh and fat former, and at the same time contains sufficient of the bone-forming elements to develop the frame in comparison with the increase in flesh and fat. I hope I have made this quite clear, as it is a point which is well worth the consideration of Norwich breeders.

One of the Most Useful.

MAW SEED is the seed of the Opium Poppy (Papaver somniferum album), a native of China, but grown in many different parts of the world. It is cultivated extensively in India, Persia, China, Turkey, Egypt, and in some parts of Europe, notably in France and Belgium, and also in England.

From what I have seen of the plant when growing I can say that it is of a strong, robust habit, growing up to 6 feet high, and bearing large white flowers, which are followed by huge seed pods, some of which are almost as large as a man's head. The plant is cultivated in some countries especially for opium, which is the dried juice found in the stems, capsules, and flowers, the finest opium being extracted from the petals. In Europe it is cultivated almost entirely for the oil obtained from the seeds, and is used for many different purposes, chiefly domestic or culinary.

In France one half of the oil used for cooking and salads is derived from maw seed, and large quantities are brought into this country for the same purpose, and for diluting almond and olive oils.

The seeds are also used as a spice for sprinkling on cakes and bread, and for flavouring soups, etc. In some foreign countries a kind of bread or cake is made from the pulp which is left after the oil has been extracted from the seed, and this bread is considered quite a luxury. The commercial value of maw seed, therefore, lies chiefly in the oil, which is produced and utilised in enormous quantities and various ways as described.

Maw seed is without doubt one of the most valuable seeds used by bird fanciers, inasmuch as it is equally good for correcting both constipation and looseness of the bowels.

The Swedish Board of Trade at Stockholm have included live birds in the list of prohibited exports from Sweden.

I should be glad, writes Mr. Geo. Burton, Hon. Sec., 126, Lee Road, Lee Green, S.E., if you would remind Secretaries that the last day for applying for the Southern Border F.C. patronage is May 18, as I feel sure several have overlooked it.

Private H. Moore, 5, 106, D. Co., 3rd Battn. 23rd London Regt., late of the Lambeth Aviaries, and now at Winnall Down Camp, Winchester, would like to hear from any fancier in the neighbourhood with a view of exchanging visits.

At the monthly meeting of the London and Provincial O.S. on May 18, at the Raglan Hotel, Aldersgate Street, adjoining the old G.P.O., at 8, a debate on the Yorkshire Canary will be held, writes Mr. H. L. Huggins, hon. sec. All fanciers welcome.

Rules have been sent to all members of the South Shields "Always Ready" C.B.S. Any one wishing to join should communicate with the Sec., J. W. Watson, 75, Leighton-st. The radius is 20 miles. Subs. 2s. 6d.; entrance fee 1s. Show dates: N.E., July 22; Annual, Nov. 18.

The members of the Clapham C.B.A. will have their annual outing on Sunday, May 28, to Effingham Common, and a special meeting will be held, May 16, to arrange final details. It is to be hoped that members and friends will keep the 28th free from other engagements, if possible, writes Mr. A. R. Cae, and that a good muster of fanciers will take part in the outing.

The members of Glasgow and W. of Scotland Bird Club will hold one of their rambles on May 13, writes Mr. M. Craig, Sec., and all bird-lovers who care to join will be made heartily welcome. The ramble starts from Tollcross car terminus at 3.30. Cars leaving Union Street at 3 are in time. Permission has been granted to visit Mr. Scott Millar's grounds at Broomhouse, to see his wild animals, and his extensive aviaries of foreign birds, which will be very interesting and worth going a long way to see.

Any Roller Fanciers in Walthamstow?

I should very much like to know, writes Mr. H. E. Nicholls, 22, Countess-rd., Walthamstow, if there are sufficient fanciers in the Walthamstow District interested in the Roller Canary to form a club, and I should be pleased to hear from anyone with that object in view.

I am delighted with this year's CAGE BIRDS'S ANNUAL, writes Mr. T. McMillan, Belfast, it is better than ever. I am going to make a drying cage after the principle adopted by Mr. Moule, but would respectfully suggest one improvement, i.e., a small door at side to introduce the birds by. The lifting up of the glass to get at the wire door would greatly reduce the heat, but with this exception the "Climax" is perfect.

"British Birds" for May, Messrs. Witherby and Co., High Holborn, W.C., one shilling monthly, opens with a further instalment of "Wait and See Photography," by Miss E. L. Turner, accompanied by some fine photographs by the author. Mr. Witherby continues his "Moult of the British Passeres." There is an obituary notice of the late Chas. Stonham, best known as the author of "Birds of the British Islands." The usual interesting "Notes," and a copious index to Vol. 9 complete a good issue.

Thank you for the honour you have conferred upon me in portraying my Border on the front page of your valuable journal, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. W. Cooper. I have often spoken about the sketches appearing in CAGE BIRDS, and what a fine artist you have. Reading Show was my bird's first time on the bench in open contest; he had taken first and special at young bird show, and is one of the deepest colored yellows I have yet seen. Many have offered to buy him, but I hope to send him out again yet.

"CAGE BIRDS" ROLL OF HONOUR.

We regret to hear from Mr. W. Furnandiz, hon. sec. of Hull C.B.S., of the death in action of Mr. J. L. Heseltine, ex-sec. of the society. Mr. Heseltine was Pioneer Sergeant of a local battalion, and was killed in France on April 16.

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. J. W. Reed, Sec. Newcastle C.B.S., that I have to announce the death of Private James Craig, Cameron Highlanders, in France, on April 21, from wounds received in action.

Private Craig was a reservist and was called up August, 1914. He was at the battle of Mons, was injured in November 1914, sent back to Scotland, and returned to France only a few months ago.

He was Assistant Sec. Newcastle C.B.S., and a hardworking one he was, his services being very valuable to me, especially in connection with our open shows, Jimmy giving of his best and never sparing himself. As a colleague no one could wish for a better; he was a keen fancier and a sportsman. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his loss, and our heartfelt sympathy goes out to them in their sad bereavement.

Dates of 1916 Bird Shows.

Further shows for which dates have been fixed are: Sheffield P.S., Nov. 3, 4; Clapham C.B.A., Oct. 11, 12; Aberdare C.B.S., Nov. 23. Secretaries should make a note of these and other dates as they are published, so that clashing may be avoided as far as possible.

Advertisers, Kindly Note THIS.

Much avoidable trouble is caused each week by the failure of advertisers to state under which heading they wish their advertisements to appear. Sometimes our advertisement manager has to guess at this, and sometimes he does not guess rightly. Then we get letters of complaint, and we have the trouble to answer these letters. We shall be obliged, therefore, if advertisers will kindly put a heading to their advertisements according to the section in which they wish them to appear. They will help us and benefit themselves by doing this.

Another Scare Settled.

On April 19, Mr. Dickinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his attention had been called to the fact that British song birds are being killed and sold for food in West End shops in London; and if so whether he will take measures to enforce the observance of the law and to prevent this destruction of bird life. Mr. Samuel replied that careful inquiries have been made by the Metropolitan police, and they have found no reason to think that, except in rare cases, song birds are being sold for food in contravention of the law.

Country Rambles.

The following rambles have been arranged and friends who may not be members of the respective societies will be welcome to join: Poplar C.B.S., May 14, to Laindon; train from Fenchurch Street 9.45, East Ham 10.10; tea at Laindon Hotel 4. Leyton C.B.A., May 20, to Epping Forest; meet at Loughton Station 3.25; train from Liverpool Street 2.44; Stratford 2.55; tea at "The Owl," Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., May 14, to Dorking and Boshill; train from Peckham Rye 9.30, E. Dulwich 9.32; tea at Temperance Hotel, Dorking. Glasgow and W. of Scotland, May 13, to Broomhouse, from Tollcross car terminus at 3.30 (see Twitterings).

Veteran Show Bird Dead.

I am sorry to have to record the death of one of my African Coleys, writes Mr. J. Dewhurst. I have had the pair 15 years, come October, which is a record, I believe.

Just So.

May we add to the list of things we are ready to believe without further notice, says the "Cambrian Daily Leader" (1) that the Cuckoo HAS been heard; (2) that the Swallow HAS been seen?

The Cuckoo Comes to Town.

When I awoke at 4.30 this morning, May 4, I was surprised to hear the call of a very welcome visitor, the Cuckoo, writes Mr. J. G. Taylor. I thought perhaps someone close at hand had a new alarm clock, but upon going out into my back yard I was surprised to see the bird in a tree. It called a few more times, and then flew off. I have never heard one so close as this, as my house is close to the High-st., Camberwell.

The Blackbird and Its Keeping.

By C. BURROWS (Stratford-on-Avon).

THERE is not a more suitable bird for a novice to start with in the way of soft-bills than a hand-reared cock Blackbird. It is easy to manage, costs but little to keep, and in return it has a nice mellow song, not nearly so harsh as that of most Song Thrushes, Ring Ousels, etc. In appearance, if treated as follows, it is hard to beat.

To cage it properly get a few grooved and tongued boards, say 2-in. thick, and make a cage to remain outside winter and summer, about 3 feet long, 2 feet high, and 18 inches deep; there is no need to have a gable-top.

Get a strong wire front, and in ordering this say it is for outdoor use and must be cat-proof. Fix this on a wood frame to fit the whole of the front of cage, fastening it on with two hinges, and so making it easy to clean out the cage. The frame at the bottom should be four inches deep to prevent the bird from kicking out the cage bottoms into the yard.

The front must have one sliding door in the middle, and a wire-holder must be fixed inside the frame just under the door to hold a little round dish for food. The dish must not be placed on the bottom of cage, or it will soon get the cage bottoms mixed up with the food and spoil it.

The Importance of the Bath.

Blackbirds are very fond of bathing, so at the end of cage, about half-way up it, cut a half-round hole and fix on the outside over this hole a catch box with a wire bottom and front. Let it be the whole depth of the cage, and wide enough to hold a good-sized enamel dish to hold the water. This also will want a wooden door at the front to get the dish in and out, and to cover up the hole leading from the cage to the catch box a sliding door made of wood will be wanted worked from the outside with a spring in the centre of the lid. At the top screw in a small eye, and in the end of cage above this eye screw in another one for the string to work through, taking care to have it high enough to pull lid from over the hole. A screw or nail in the end of cage is all that is wanted to twist the string round to hold the lid up.

The wire bottom in the catch box allows all waste water to get away, and keeps it clean and dry. When the cage wants cleaning out you have only to run the bird into the catch box, drop the lid, and there he is while you clean out his cage. No need to handle the bird, a thing to be avoided as much as possible.

Mind the Cats.

The cage itself would want fixing against a wall and under a suitable covering to carry off the rain. A shutter should be placed over the front every night all the year round to guard against cats, owls, and rough weather: this shutter to be used on rough days as well as at night.

Britishers caged outside can stand a lot of crisp, clear, cold weather, but cold winds and wet they cannot stand for long if not sheltered up from it. The bottom of cage should be covered with nice white sawdust; this is far better than sand.

This appears to be a lot in writing, but any ordinary man could make it in a short time, and once it is done you have a cage that will stand all weathers and make it possible to keep your bird in the best of health, feather and song.

To feed a Blackbird is not a very expensive job. You can buy a threepenny packet of Thrush food, and this with barley flour mixed with boiled potato or scraped raw carrot will keep him going nicely, provided you keep up a plentiful supply of small worms, beetles, maggots and mealworms.

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

AMERICA WILL HAVE CANARIES!

NORWICH UNABLE TO SATISFY THE DEMAND.

The Norwich Canary-breeding industry, says "The Daily Mail," is in the vexatious position of being unable to take advantage of an almost unprecedented boom.

America is prospering, and Americans will have Canaries as pets. German birds are out of the market, with the result that Norwich Plainheads and Cresteds are in greater demand than ever. Double pre-war prices are being offered.

A member of one of the oldest families in the Fancy, Mr. R. G. Mackley, informed a "Daily Mail" representative that hundreds of successful Canary breeders have either joined the Colours or are engaged in war work away from Norwich, and he did not believe that half the usual number of good Canaries would be bred this year.

"There are," he continued, "advertisements for a thousand good ordinary pairs at 13s. a pair. We reckon that when all expenses have been paid it costs 6s. a pair to get the birds to New York and another 2s. before they reach the shops. Thus there is a cost of at least a guinea a pair before the ultimate sale is made."

Jackdaws Among the Pigeons.

The Jackdaws of Regent's Park have found that the eggs of the British Museum Pigeons make good eating, and are now making frequent raids on the Pigeon's nests over the south portico.

Our Front Page Drawings.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

The Inevitable Blackbird.

A Blackbird has built her nest on a siege gun at the front, which is daily in action, and has laid four eggs in it. The artillery sergeant who sends the news to his home in Hitehu, says "She is as fancy as she is confident of our protection."

A Tale of a Double-tailed Swallow.

The Isle of Man cats are noted as being tailless, but the peculiarity evidently does not extend to the Manx Swallows, for Mr. Tom Dipper, of Castleton, Isle of Man, writes that he has just observed distinctly a Swallow with two separate tails. He says naively: "This is the first rarity among Swallows ever seen in this locality, or even heard of in the Isle of Man."

THE PRICE OF PAPER AND THE PRICE OF OUR PAPER.

I GREATLY regret to have to inform my readers that I am compelled, very much against my will, to increase the price of CAGE BIRDS until further notice to 2d. per week.

I have not arrived at this decision without considerable anxiety, but the extraordinary, and to my way of thinking utterly unreasonable, rise in the price of paper leaves me no other alternative beyond the cutting down of the size to a meagre 8 pages, and such a reduction seems to me suicidal. I have therefore decided that the better plan is to increase the number of pages and increase the price.

This is only a temporary measure designed to last only as long as the paper situation remains in its present difficult position.

The fact is, that the Government, with its customary habit of muddling through somehow, seems to have also very completely muddled the paper question, and, whilst restricting the consumption of paper, to have provided no safeguard in the matter of price, allowing those people who can obtain paper to charge just what they think fit to charge.

Consequently a paper bill that before the war would have run to £20 a week will now amount to £60.

I am compelled by force of circumstances and by law to purchase my paper from the same firm which supplied me in 1914, or I must run the risk of not getting any paper at all.

It will be obvious to my readers that I cannot endure, as I have done, a material rise in the price of labour to produce the paper, and such an abnormal rise in the price of paper, without looking for some additional revenue wherewith to meet these abnormal expenses.

Either the public must pay more for their CAGE BIRDS, as they have to pay more for everything else just now, or I must be ruined; and the fruit of years of hard work thrown away.

I am fully aware that a large number of my readers are people who can ill afford the additional penny, but on the other hand they cannot expect me to give them an article for a penny that costs me more than twopence a copy to produce.

The alternative of closing one's business until after the war is one that faces a good many of us nowadays, and it is a fate which, if it does come, I certainly am not going to squeal over. Indeed, were my personal welfare only concerned I should simply shoulder a rifle and join those of my employees who are now giving their services to their country in the fighting line. Unfortunately, I have a number of other people dependent upon me, and I cannot shelve my responsibilities in this way.

Should the paper situation become easier, I will most certainly return to the old price, as I am a firm believer in the policy of giving as good value in newspapers for as little money as possible. I certainly think newspaper proprietors are going against the best interests of their livelihood in cutting down the size of their papers unless they are absolutely forced to do so. Lack of paper in a paper means lack of interest, and lack of interest in a paper can only mean death.

There is no doubt that we are all being compelled to pay far too much for everything we have to purchase at the present time, and especially is this true of food. In war time a lot of profit-mongering goes on, and the only consoling factor about it is that the major portion of all war profits will find its way ultimately into the pockets of the Government for the prosecution of the war, and indeed in my opinion it will not be very long before wealth will have to be commandeered in the same remorseless way as human life if we are to continue the struggle for a very much longer period. To bring the war to a successful issue the Government should compel the services of everybody, men, women and children, and it is nothing short of criminal that some men should be allowed to make money in the way they are doing out of war conditions, whilst other men have to sell up their homes and leave their families without that reasonable measure of protection for these which the Government ought, and I hope will, immediately announce.

F. CARL.

A Fine Hen Bantam which won First Prize at Watford Show for Mr. J. C. Wilmot of Bedford.

Cuckoo ejecting the young birds from the nest from the beginning to the end.

Charles Waterton, the naturalist, has written of the Jennerian Cuckoo story: "No bird in the Creation could perform such an astounding feat under such embarrassing circumstances. The young Cuckoo cannot by any means support its own weight during the first day of its existence. Of course then it is utterly incapable of clambering rump foremost up the steep side of a Hedge Sparrow's nest with the additional weight of a young Hedge Sparrow on its back. Add to this that an old bird, the young of which are born blind, always remains on the nest during the whole of the day on which the chick is excluded from the shell, in order to protect it. . . . The account carries its own condemnation, no matter by whom related or by whom received. I had much rather believe the story of baby Hercules throttling two snakes in its cradle."

And the subject was discussed at intervals in a contemporary for about two years. Dr. Greene rejected Dr. Jenner's account, and also my plain matter-of-fact statement, but after the snapshots were taken he published my article on the young Cuckoo in a paper of which he was Editor, and admitted that my statement was correct. Dr. Butler also opposed me, and he quoted Mr. Seeborn's remarks against me, which I referred to in your issue of April 29, but the photographs made short work of the quotation. Mr. Blackburn's sketch of the operation was also rejected by other opponents, which conclusively proves that it required the photographs to settle the question, so Mr. Napper is farther behind than I thought he was. His latter remarks are merely surmise, and prove nothing.

JOHN CRAIG.

A Magic Canary's Egg.

SIR,—I have a green Crested hen sitting on five eggs, and when I examined them, after she had been sitting a week, I noticed one egg standing perpendicular on its narrow end. I took it out of the nest, and put in on the table, and it immediately stood straight up again. I then put it the thick end down, and when I let go it immediately turned over on to the small end again, and it always stands up in the nest. I have handled hundreds of Canary eggs, but never saw one do that before. Can you give me any explanation, or has anyone seen or heard of one like it? The egg looks to be fertile.

RICHARD JACKSON.

Six Eggs in Five Days from a Border Canary Hen in Canada.

SIR,—I am a novice in the Fancy, and a Canadian at that. I mention my nationality because we are not so plentiful in the Fancy here as our good English relations are, but if I can boost Canary breeding among my friends I sure will do so. I am greatly interested, and am becoming more so each day, although I have had some hard luck caused through not knowing how or when, and lots of other things, but I'm learning, and I have two wee ones on the stick out of about seven nests. Now, don't laugh; Am I down hearted? I guess not, I just live in hopes of more knowledge, and a larger crop next year. Wish me luck? Thank you.

I have among my stock a pair of plain yellow Borders, and I have already had three nests of eggs from this pair. The first two nests had four eggs each, and the third nest has six eggs, which were laid one day after the other, as is, of course, quite proper, but the day of the second egg she laid two. I was quite sober, and had removed the egg laid the previous day. She did not miss a day until the sixth egg, and she started to sit.

I might say the extra egg was a little smaller and had no brown spots like the others. Do you often have a case just like this in England, or is it uncommon? I am a subscriber to CAGE BIRDS, and take great pleasure reading it, and I am looking forward to receiving my next mail.

I will be on the look out for an answer to the above, and thank you in advance.

WALLACE C. JONES.

Toronto, Canada.

[We have sent a copy of this enquiry to our expert, Mr. St. John, and his reply appears in the query columns this week, and we are publishing the letter as a matter of general interest. Perhaps our readers will have something to add for the benefit of their fellow fancier in Canada.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.]

Roller Judge Wanted for South Africa.

SIR,—There are quite a number of Roller Canary fanciers within the Union of South Africa, and some valuable birds are imported from time to time, but, nevertheless, singing (quality) competitions are never held. The reason is that no competent judge has ever made himself known to the Fancy, and I am penning these few lines on behalf of myself and others to ask if any of your readers are aware of any prominent Roller breeder being in South Africa, particularly in Natal. Perhaps some of the secretaries of the Roller Clubs could supply the information through CAGE BIRDS, for which I would be most grateful.

An Open Young Bird Show for Wales.

SIR,—I think, like "F. F.," that officials of our large shows would do well to follow the example of the Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S. by running an open young bird show. Such shows, I am sure, would have plenty of support. I hope the Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S. will have a record entry at their venture. I am very pleased to see the old society wake up; there seems to be more reports, etc., this last week or two than there used to be. The officials and members seem to be alive to the fact that to put a society to the front you need to push all you can, but I am sure with Mr. T. James at the head and Messrs. Challenger and Legg as secretaries, the old society is going to be bang to the top, in Wales, at any rate. Well, to come back to the show itself, I will enter as many birds as I can; also I will give a special to value of 5s., in birds or cages, to the member who shows the best young Yorkshire Canary, providing I am at home at time of show. Should I have to join my Group, if Sec. will let me know the winner I will forward the special as soon as I come home. I hope some of my old friends of the Porth and Rhondda Valley C.B.S. will drop me a line and let me know how everybody is getting on, as I have written Mr. Legg several times, but have received no answer up to now.

An Exemplary Sire.

SIR,—I have a green cock Canary which has taken a share with the hen in the duties of incubation, and is now busily engaged helping to rear the young birds. I have friends who have been interested in birds for years, and they have never heard of a similar case. I should like to know myself if it is usual, and it may also interest other readers of CAGE BIRDS.

Early Canaries.

A Bold Bid for the Record.

SIR,—There seem to be many claiming to be the first to have early Canaries, and I would like to settle this argument. I had a nest of three birds hatched out on Jan. 2 this year, and they were on show at East Ham Pair Show. They are now moulted, and colour-fed ready for the Bench. I have had three clutches from this pair and all on hard seed.

Why Not Bird Pictures at the Royal Academy?

SIR,—In going round the Royal Academy I kept an eye open, hoping to find some pictures of birds, but in the whole R.A. I could only find two small works which had birds for their subject; a quaint etching of an Owl by Winifred Austen, and a very good miniature of Madagascar Love-birds by Alice M. Cook (I do not count Frank Brangwyn's grand picture, for his birds were dead ones). It surprises me that artists do not paint birds; they are so beautiful.

F. FERING.

Postponement of the Liverpool Grand National British Bird Show.

SIR,—At a special meeting of guarantors and supporters of above show in Liverpool and district it was unanimously decided, owing to the Compulsion Bill coming into force, and Groups up to the age of 41 being called up just prior to the date of show, it would not be to the interest of the charity, for which it was being held to run the show at present. To those kind fanciers from a distance who had promised me all the help in their power I beg to tender my sincere thanks.

J. W. METCALFE.

Will Bird Shows be Taxed?

SIR,—At a meeting of the Sheffield C.B.S. the question as to whether the Amusement Tax would affect bird shows cropped up.

As many societies may be disturbed on the same subject, I thought if you inserted a note in CAGE BIRDS, it might be a guidance as to whether they are liable or not.

E. SISSONS.

SIR,—At the general meeting of the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.A. the subject of the tax on amusements was brought up, and it was suggested that I write you re same. Shall we be liable to a tax on the charge for entry fees at our shows? We shall be glad if you will kindly answer this question through the medium of CAGE BIRDS.

A. E. THORPE, Hon. Sec.

Seeing that it has been decided that a tax will be levied on admission tickets to Zoological Gardens, it is to be concluded that bird shows will also come under the heading of amusements, and that tickets for admission will be subject to the tax.

"Cuckoo-Cuckoo."

SIR,—Mr. Napper says, "Mr. Craig is personal, and has ceased to be polite." Much depends on what one considers polite. I might accuse him of the same thing, but I do not want to take up too much space. It would be much better if Mr. Napper would stick to facts. I did not say he had changed his opinion as to the origin of birds. What I said was, "It seems that Mr. Napper has changed his opinion," which is quite different, and it refers to one theory being quite as good as another, and not as to the origin of birds. I do not believe that one theory is quite as good as another. What would be the use of quoting one theory against another if that was the case? Much depends on the observations and the side issues which go to support the theory. A gentleman in Glasgow sent a pamphlet to me about the nesting Cuckoo during a discussion in the "Glasgow Evening Times" on that bird to prove that I was wrong, but I had the problem solved for myself, and this again shows the value of first-hand knowledge. The pamphlet referred to was headed, "The Bird that Laid the Vaccination Egg." It was very amusing, but it showed that the writer knew nothing about the subject. In fact, he ridiculed Dr. Jenner's account of the young

The Constituent Parts of Bird Seed.

SIR,—I have read with great interest the commencement of the article "Bird Seeds at a Glance," and am looking forward for a continuation. Such an article as this is, I think, just what is wanted, especially in these times when one has to consider the utmost value to be got out of one's money, for there is no doubt that much money is thoughtlessly spent in the indiscriminate purchase of food which is either wasted by the birds or does them no good if they eat it.

At the same time, it would add to the value of the article if the author, Mr. Hunt, would kindly say how he accounts for the balance between the total of his percentages and the full hundred points. I find that his totals add up to aggregates varying between 80½ in the case of hemp seed, and 97 in millet. An analysis is not complete if the different items do not add up to 100 exactly, and I hope Mr. Hunt will kindly enlighten us accordingly.

PER CENTAGE.

"Ever Been 'Ad'?"

SIR,—I attended a public meeting a few days ago, and one of the speakers opened his remarks with the question, "Ever bin 'ad'?" As a novice in the bird fancy, I have to admit that I have been "ad" more than once.

Now, sir, would it not be possible for fanciers to form some kind of protection society? If it was possible for a novice, when he thinks he is speculating a little through some tempting advert., to write to the secretary of the C.B.S. in that particular district, or a scheme could be formulated by which he could get to know whether the seller was a member of a society or not, good might result.

I think it would help the novice a great deal, and also the genuine fancier who has birds for sale, if each year, in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL, besides the directory of societies, the names of all members of each separate society were given. It would cost more, no doubt, but no one, I think, would object to that. If a man had a letter then from someone desiring to buy or sell a bird, he could look up the directory to see if the name of the man was entered in the directory. He would then know if the man was in the fancy, and my experience of the genuine fancier is that he would not willingly take advantage of the ignorance of a novice. No doubt many novices, like myself, would like to hear the views of older fanciers on this subject.

NOVICE.

Our correspondent seems to have overlooked the fact that most traders in birds are not members of bird societies. Members of bird societies, as a rule, are fanciers who keep birds as a hobby, not as a means of livelihood, and the birds they have for sale, if any, are just the surplus from their stock. The inference that a man must be a member of a society to be an honest trader would be unjust and misleading.—EDITOR.

About a Points Competition.

SIR,—I expect many readers of CAGE BIRDS have noted with interest your reply to J. Davies, under "General," in your issue of May 6.

Points competitions seem to have a knack of resulting in disputes, and many would like to see them abolished altogether. In the present case it seems to have been stated by your inquirer that the Norwich men could only score at the most nine or ten points, while the Yorkshire fanciers counted full points. It seems to me that these conclusions are not a certainty.

The Yorkshire classes are stated to have filled satisfactorily. How then could it not happen that one man should score points in one class, and another in another class, or even that somebody who was not in the competition at all should win a prize or two to the exclusion of those competing for the points prize?

If either lot could be said to be certain of getting points, surely it was the Norwich, where there was the limited competition of three in a class. Then, again, suppose the positions had been reversed. Would not the Norwich men then have said that the sections had equal chances when the birds were first entered, and that the accident of small entries in the Yorkshire classes was just the fortune of war.

In any case, the Norwich men left their birds in the competition, and the birds of any one of them had at least the chance of getting more points than the birds of any one of the Yorkshire fanciers. By leaving their birds in they tacitly accepted the position, and, as you very rightly point out in your reply they forfeited their rights of making a protest. They had a possibility of winning, poor though the possibility may have been, and they must in justice stand by their defeat.

NON-COMPETITOR.

ORGANISING THE CANARY TRADE

THE COMMITTEE GETS TO WORK.

Grand Progress with the Wounded Soldiers' Scheme

PERHAPS the most representative assembly ever got together on any matter connected with the hobby of cage bird keeping attended at the offices of CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, on Wednesday, May 3, in support of our two schemes for affording help to disabled soldiers in re-starting their hobby, and for capturing for our own country the trade in Canaries which has so long been a monopoly of our enemies the Germans.

There were present: Messrs. G. Crabbe, President of the London and Provincial C.B.S.; R. L. Crisp, President, London C.B.A.; T. R. Trower, of Trower and Co., seed and appliance merchants, Caledonian Road, London; the following representatives of London societies: Mr. Gutierrez, British Roller C.C.,

Macellan, Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S.

East, Leyton C.B.A.,

Robson, London C.B.A.,

Vale, Clapham C.B.A.,

Kybert, East Ham C.B.S.,

Last, Crystal Palace and Penge C.B.S.,

Fulljames, Cage Birds League,

and the organising secretary, A. G. Filby.

Messrs. J. W. Ramsden and T. Heath wrote regretting their inability to attend the first meeting, and promising their help at future meetings, and Mr. F. Carl, proprietor of CAGE BIRDS, was at the last moment prevented from attending.

Mr. Fulljames was unanimously voted to the chair, and explained the objects of the organisation, after which the various suggestions which had been published in CAGE BIRDS were considered and commented upon with a view to future action.

As was to be expected from such an eminently practical assembly, a point which received considerable attention was the actual cost of producing and feeding a Canary up to the time of its being ready for the market, and nearly everyone present gave his views on the matter.

Mr. Vale said that many years ago he had bred Canaries flying loose together in a room, and he found that he could sell the produce at a very low price; in fact, two shillings per bird would amply cover the cost of rearing and feeding for six months. Mr. Last thought that his birds each cost him about three farthings per week, and other members of the committee pointed out that the cost of rearing would entirely depend upon the kind of birds produced. Exhibition birds would naturally cost more per head than birds bred for the public market.

Mr. Trower asked how many young might be expected per pair of Canaries in the season, and it was the general opinion that the number could be fairly reckoned as eight, though Mr. Robson said that, so far at least as high class birds were concerned, the average would not be more than four per hen. The Germans certainly produced more than this number, but they took all they possibly could out of the hen, and dumped her into this country and to America when she was of no further use.

The German method of breeding Canaries loose in a room, with only a few cocks to a number of hens, came in for considerable discussion, and it was generally agreed that this was by far the most profitable way of breeding Canaries, and the method which involved the minimum of trouble. Mr. Crisp thought that if we could provide people in country districts with breeding birds at from 5s. 6d. to 6s. 6d. per pair, which was generally the price paid by London dealers, Canary breeding could be made a profitable industry.

Mr. Last said that it was within his knowledge that Canaries had long been bred in this country at a cost which would allow of them being sold to London dealers, who in their turn made a profit in selling them to German traders for re-export to America. The two intermediate profits could go to the producer if the hobby of rearing Canaries were properly organised.

Mr. Crisp suggested that the organising secretary should write Mr. Norris, the hon. sec. of the British Roller C.C., asking if he knew of any member of his club who bred birds on the colony system as practised in Germany, and, if so, whether he would let the committee have the benefit of his experience.

After a general discussion upon the practicality of bringing to a successful issue the organising of an English trade in Canary rearing, in which there was agreement that the matter was perfectly possible, and was only a question of detail, a sub-committee, Messrs. Trower, Gutierrez, Vale, and Fulljames, was appointed to make full enquiries as to the questions which had arisen, especially the cost of production of Canaries for sale, and to draft a scheme for the next meeting of the full committee. The sub-committee will meet at CAGE BIRDS Offices, 154, Fleet Street, May 15, at 8. The meeting closed with the customary vote of thanks to the chair.

This week we have been further strengthened in our belief that there are sufficient kind hearts in what is known as "the bird fancy" to supply whatever may be needed by their fellow fanciers who have been disabled in fighting for their country.

We have to acknowledge the fine subscription of twenty-five shillings from the members of the Leicester C.B.S., per the sec., Mr. J. Hardbottle, and a guinea from our old friend Mr. Thomas Heath, one of the "old school" still happily with us. The lucky fancier who is able to take advantage of Mr. Heath's offer of advice will be favoured indeed. Mr. Heath's name in the Canary world was "a household word" before many of the present-day fanciers were thought about, and what he does not know about Canary breeding may very well be done without.

But perhaps the letter which will appeal most of all to the feelings of our readers, as it has done to our own, is the one coming from a nine-years-old reader, J. W. Campbell, of Kelvedon. If there are many more like this lad in the fancy there need be no fears as to its future. We publish this little worker's letter with very special pleasure and many thanks.

Our fund now stands, therefore, as follows:

Distribution Begun.

By the time this issue is in the hands of our readers we shall have put many applicants for birds under our scheme into touch with those who have generously offered birds to our wounded soldiers. Amongst them are the following:—Mr. Rossignol's Yorkshires go to ex-Sgt. Nott, Gloster Regt., with 17 years' service to his credit, served in the S.A. campaign, and through shock and exposure in the present one is unfit for further service. He is now living at Bristol. Mr. Lucas, late of the 1st King's Liverpool, a Reservist called up at outbreak of war, crippled for life, now living at Ilkeston; and Mr. Batchelor, now in S. Wales, a late Cpl. in the 2nd Border Regt., who was discharged after being wounded the second time going out to France. These two each take one of the pairs offered by Mr. Pyman, of Southampton. Mr. Dunkley, who was discharged after serving seven months in France with the 2nd East Surrey Regt., receives a pair of Norwich presented by Mr. Trapnell, of Weston-Super-Mare. A pair of Mrs. Wolferstan's birds go to Ite. H. G. Anderson, A.S.C., who sold all his birds to join and was discharged with a small pension in July last, and the other pair to Pte. R. Smith, 1st/4th Batt. Linc. Regt., T.F., whose right arm is useless, who resides at Grantham, Lincs.; F. Fleetwood, blinded by gunshot, receives the Yorkshires and cage offered by "Anon." There are still some whose requirements we are unable to fill just at present.

Birds Wanted.

We have requests from two wounded soldiers, who have established their bona fides. One wants a pair of Green Rollers, and the other a pair of Yorkshires. Can any of our readers supply these? If so, will they please let us hear from them, stating the lowest price they are willing to take, and we will forward the cash out of the funds.

Can any reader assist our Dartford correspondent, Bandsman P. Brown? If so, please write us.

How Much for a Green Roller?

We have received a bid of five shillings for the green Roller hen offered last week by Mr. Stephens, and it will go for this small sum unless we get a better offer by Tuesday morning next, May 16.

We have still on hand several generous offers of cages and fittings, and these are ready for allocation to any wounded soldiers who will let us have their applications, accompanied by a certified copy of their discharge paper.

Other letters which we have the pleasure of publishing this week will speak for themselves, and we need only thank the kind donors for their generosity, and hope their example will be widely followed.

There may be some among our readers who, while they may not be able to give valuable

This is the type of Canary favoured by our friends and Allies, the Belgians. It is to be feared that we shall not for a long while see "Belgian" Canaries other than those bred in England by British fanciers.

birds right out, may yet be willing to accept something less than their monetary value when they know that the purchase money is coming from a disabled soldier, and to these we commend the letter of J. W. Gibbon, published this week. This soldier is willing to pay £1 for a good pair of Norwich Canaries, and we know that any of our readers who accepts this money from him will send more than the value in the birds.

Our Committee has been further strengthened by the appointment of Mr. F. Chappell, who will represent the West London Fanciers' Association, and our list of local advisers by the names of Mr. Thos. Heath, of Putney, and Mr. W. B. Groves, of Grimsby.

A Chance to Show Your Patriotism.

In our Twitterings columns will be seen an extract from the "Daily Mail" headed "America will have Canaries." Now, Canary breeders, put your backs into it, and breed all the birds you can this season. The country will want all we can possibly get next autumn to supply the demands of home and foreign markets. Every assistance will be given by our experts and local advisers in different centres; show what you can do for your country and, incidentally, for yourselves. There is an opportunity; it only needs grasping.

A soldier's wife offers to take 10s. for a breeding cage with sliding partition in centre and two sliding partitions which make a nursery cage at each end, all in zinc, made by a professional. The cost of packing would be about 1s., so all over 11s. goes to our wounded soldiers' fund. A cage of this kind should appeal to many bird-keepers, and should fetch quite a good surplus over the nominal price.

The Leicester C.B.S. to the Front.

SIR,—Enclosed please find P.O.s value 25s. as the subscription from the Leicester C.B.S. for the disabled soldiers' fund, as promised in my previous letter. I am sorry I am late in sending, but I wished to give all the members the chance of joining in. I should like to see more societies coming in with us in this, as not only would they be helping others, but it would possibly be to their own advantage as well.

CANARIES FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

Another offer we would draw attention to is contained in a letter from Mr. H. A. Tutt, which will interest those of our readers who are fond of animals. It is that of a Great Dane bitch with good pedigree; the owner will take £3 3s. for her, and all over that amount will go to the benefit of the Fund. Now, canine fanciers, don't all speak at once, but speak quickly. Other offers are wanted for birds and cages offered last week, notably Mr. Rossignol's green Yorkshires, Mrs. Wolfert's birds and appliances, and the Pile Game Bantam offered by Mr. Hughes. We shall be glad to turn this lot into coin of the realm.

Offer of a Cock Bullfinch.

We have received a very kind offer of a house-moulted Bullfinch, which our reader will give to any wounded soldier if he is willing to pay carriage. If unclaimed, he would sell it for the benefit of our fund. Now, fanciers, offers, please.—The Bullfinch would suit many of our readers better than it would a wounded soldier.

A Gift Good Value at £2 10s.

SIR,—I have received Mr. Bastock's pair of Norwich, and I am very pleased with them. Wishing your scheme success.

A Touching Letter from a Nine-years-old Reader.

SIR,—I have a little paper called "Bird News," from the sale of which amongst my friends I have been able to collect 13s. for your fund, "Canaries for Wounded Soldiers," and I send this with best wishes for your scheme.

A Fine Offer from Eastbourne.

SIR,—If I am accepted for Military Service I am willing to give to any wounded soldier in this district one pair of prize-bred Yorkshires or Norwich, with breeding cage, and all accessories. If not accepted, I will give one pair of this year's youngsters, with breeding cage and accessories, also 12 cock Goldfinches, for 12 soldiers, for Mule breeding, at the end of season.

Hen Rollers Offered from Grimsby.

SIR,—I should be pleased to help you in your scheme for wounded soldiers if I could be of use. I will give, at the end of this breeding season, three or four hen rollers, and all advice I can, to any soldier who wishes to start in the Roller Fancy. These hens are bred from winners at most of the shows in England, so that the recipients will get a fair start.

SIR,—I enclose cheque value one guinea for your scheme to help the wounded and disabled to take up Canary breeding. Am sorry I cannot attend the meeting on Wednesday evening, but you have my best wishes, and I trust your scheme will meet with every support, and that it may be a great success. If I can help in any way in this district by giving advice to those about to commence I shall be pleased to do so.

For a Soldier in Hospital.

SIR,—I was, until invalided home, in the good old 29th Division; landed with them at the Dardanelles, April 25, 1915. I was rather unlucky out there, was invalided home to England, and eventually sent down to this hospital, where I have been for some time, unfit for active service. They have given me a light job, and I am also a member of the hospital military band and string band. I have been much interested in birds since I have been here. I wanted to go in for Canary breeding, but as I am only on half-pay, I found that a pair of Canaries was rather beyond my means. However, I got a cock Linnet and hen Canary cheap, and started muling. I had a bit of trouble with them at first, and wrote to Mr. H. Best, of Leeds, for a few tips. He recommended me to write to you. (I had previously seen your announcement of Canary breeding for wounded soldiers in CAGE BIRDS, which I have regularly.) I am glad to say my Linnet and Canary are doing well now, and have nearly finished their nest. As I am likely to remain here for duration of war, or longer, perhaps you could help me as regards Canaries for breeding. If you have not any in stock that have been subscribed to your scheme, perhaps you could put me in the way of a cheap pair. If I could, I would willingly pay good money for good birds, but as I am only on half-pay I cannot do it.

P. BROWN.

A Disabled Soldier Offers £1 for a Pair of Norwich.

SIR,—I notice in CAGE BIRDS that you are starting wounded soldiers with Canaries. I should very much like a pair of Norwich Canaries, Plainheads, and would be willing to pay £1 for a good pair, as I am very much interested in Canaries. I have a breeding cage.

How Doggy Fanciers Can Help.

SIR,—Re your fund for Canaries for wounded soldiers. I have a Great Dane bitch, brindle colour, age 2½ years, with good pedigree containing 17 champions, height 29 inches at shoulder, weight 97 lbs., good guard, but quiet with ladies, children, poultry, etc. She cost me £3 3s. at 8 weeks old; if you can sell her for anything over this figure I will give surplus to your fund. She is due in season this month. I enclose copy of pedigree; purchaser can have original.

A Complete Fit-up, Including Books and Expert Advice.

SIR,—I shall be pleased to give one pair of exhibition Yorkshires, value £2, one double breeder (complete), one single ditto, one show cage, and seeds enough to last for some considerable time. If they are not required until after the breeding season, then I should give two pairs instead. Also if the recipient be a novice, I should be delighted to give him all the advice that lies in my power, and lend him all the latest books on the subject. Should he prefer some other variety, then I will sell these, and do my best to get whatever variety he wishes.

W. H. HAMLYN.

Harrogate.

A Generous Offer from a Reader Who Wishes to Remain Anonymous.

SIR,—I will send the following carriage paid to any disabled soldier in the U.K. as a small contribution to your fund, on an assurance from the recipient that the birds will be well cared for:—

One yellow Yorkshire cock, cost 30s.

Three buff, green, variegated Yorkshire hens, cost 35s.

One double breeding cage, cost 6s. 6d.

I had the birds a short time ago from one of our best dealers. My reason for parting with them is that I have decided to keep Rollers exclusively. The birds, as far as I know, are reliable breeders, and are in first class condition. The cock, in my opinion, is a specially fine bird, rather young for breeding, but a good songster. He will probably need feeding up for breeding.

Wishing the fund every success.

ANON.

SEEDS OF COMMERCE FOR 'CAGE BIRDS.

It is about the first seed young birds eat, and is also relished by birds in the final stages of old age. We find it contains oil to the extent of 40 per cent., and this oil is of a mild and soothing nature. The albuminoids are represented by 17½ per cent., so that it has considerable nutritious properties, and is fairly rich in mineral matter, which again adds to its value as a food for birds. The amount of carbo-hydrates (starch) is quite normal, so that it is principally a heat giving and flesh forming food.

NIGER (Guizotia oleifera) is an annual plant, native of West Equatorial Africa, belonging to the daisy family, and having a yellow flower shaped like a daisy or marguerite. It grows about 2 feet high, the seed being formed in a mass in the centre of the flower exactly as in the case of a sunflower, to which plant niger is related. It is cultivated in Africa, India, and Abyssinia for the sake of the oil to be obtained from the seed. This oil is used by the natives for food and for burning in lamps, and is known to them as ram-til or black-til oil.

I might mention here that it is sometimes called "inga" instead of niger, but the names indicate one and the same thing, the name niger being the proper one to use.

It contains a considerable quantity of oil, 33 per cent., which is of a bland or sweet nature, and on this account it is given to hen Canaries to prevent egg binding. It is also relished by finches, especially Goldfinches, as it strongly resembles thistle in flavour and character.

Many different opinions prevail regarding niger seed, some fanciers relying upon it for certain purposes, while others believe that it is harmful in its effect. One thing is certain, on account of the high percentage of mineral matter it is bound to be beneficial in aiding the digestion, and effecting the solution of other ingredients. It is also rich in albuminoids, and is, therefore, like all other oily seeds, a flesh former and heat giver.

LINSEED, OR FLAX (Linum usitatissimum) is an annual plant bearing a pretty blue flower, and is a native of Egypt. It is cultivated chiefly in America, Canada, Russia, Egypt, and India, also in the south of Europe.

Green Border Canary, winner of 1st prize at Holborn Hall Show, for Mr. T. Goyner, of Wandsworth.

including England and Ireland. The chief commercial value of this plant lies in the fibre which is contained in the stems, and from which linen is made.

Flax is one of the oldest of cultivated plants, as is proved by the fact that the linen found on Egyptian mummies thousands of years old was made from flax.

Some of the coarser fibre is used for the manufacture of twine and coarse matting. The seeds form a valuable commercial product because of the oil they contain, which is largely used for paints, varnishes, and soap, the residue or pulp being utilised in the manufacture of oil cake for cattle. It is, therefore, a very valuable and economical plant, and justifies its cultivation in such large quantities.

With regard to the feeding value of linseed, it contains a large proportion of oil, which constitutes its principal constituent, the amount being about 52 per cent. It also has a fair amount of albuminoids and minerals.

Birds, as a rule, are not very partial to it, but that does not alter the fact that it is very beneficial during cold and damp weather, and is useful in cases of inflammatory affection of the respiratory and intestinal organs.

It is given to birds during the moult to obtain a sheen on the plumage, which is another result of the oil contained in the seed.

Personally, I believe that Canaries are benefited by small quantities of linseed at any time, providing they can be induced to eat it, but care should be taken not to give them too much, or the system will be overloaded with oil, which would have ill effects. I will treat this matter separately a little later on.

MILLET (Panicum miliaceum) is a small seeded cereal forage plant growing to about 3 or 4 feet high, and producing its seeds on long spikes, and is a native of the East Indies. It is cultivated in India, Japan, America, France, Italy, and central Europe.

Its chief use is for food, and in India millet forms the staple diet of the natives, not rice, as is so generally believed. In America it is grown for forage, being used both in the green state and also dried. Several kinds of millet appear in commerce, including red, white, grey, and bronze, the difference being due to the effect of soil and climatic conditions. The relative feeding value of the different kinds remains about the same, although the white is mostly favoured by bird fanciers.

The outstanding feature in its feeding value is the excessive proportion of starch (carbo-hydrates), which we know to be heat givers. Herein lies the explanation of the fact that most foreign birds when brought to this country do well on millet, as the large quantity of heat producing matter provides them with the necessary warmth which they fail to obtain from the climate.

Like Canary seed, millet is very short of oils and fats, having only 5 per cent., and is also deficient in mineral matter, which is represented by only 2 per cent. It follows then, that when millet is used for Canaries it should be in conjunction with other seeds containing a good proportion of oil and mineral matter.

TEAZLE (Dipsacus sylvestris).—I shall not have a great deal to say about teazle, as it is not used in any great quantities by Canary breeders. It is a native of all temperate parts of the old world, and is naturalised in England. It is a biennial, that is to say, the seeds are sown one year and the plants mature the following summer; it grows to a height of about 6 feet. It is cultivated fairly extensively in England, especially in Lincolnshire and Kent.

The plant produces seed heads which are covered with small spikes shaped like a hook at the ends. These seed heads are used in the woollen factories, fixed to a revolving drum, which, when it comes in contact with the surface of the cloth, teases out the surface, or, in other words, raises the "nap." They have been found to be better than anything made of metal for this purpose, as in case they get fast in the wool the spikes will break instead of tearing the cloth.

As to the value of teazle for birds, I regret I have been unable to get the proper analysis, but have established the fact that its chief properties are of a cooling nature, and that it is good to include it in a diet which contains a large amount of oily seeds in order to correct the effect of overheating the system.

This, then, ends our short survey of the eight principal seeds, but before concluding I should like to show a few comparisons.

In preparing a diet for birds one must not lose sight of the fact that different birds have different tastes, and we must make it our business to find out what those tastes are and cater for them.

Further, it is important in the composition of a diet to avoid an overdose of any one thing, as the bird's system can only assimilate a certain amount at a time, consequently the surplus passes through probably undigested and therefore wasted.

It is most important to keep the balance of heat giving and flesh forming foods, or we cannot expect our birds to keep in the pink of condition. At the same time we must introduce sufficient mineral matter to help the other ingredients to fulfil their objects.

Now to revert back to Canary seed (see diagram), we find an excess of starch, while in rape we find an over-dose of oil. Neither of these seeds, therefore, is sufficient in itself, but by judiciously blending them in suitable proportions we get as near as possible to an ideal staple diet. I consider the proportion of 2 parts of Canary and 1 part of rape is all that is required as a basis to work upon either for Canaries or British birds, for in such we find all the ingredients nicely balanced throughout.

Then, in order to meet the requirements of the different seasons of the year, or the different tastes of our birds, we are in the habit of giving them what we call a condition mixture. We know that this mixture of rich seeds keeps the birds in the very height of condition, but what properties are responsible for this?

In the diagram is shown the composition of a mixture of hemp, maw, niger, and linseed in equal proportions, and we see at once that the albuminoids, fats, and minerals are more in evidence. Some authorities recommend the introduction of rape into the conditioner, but, as shown in the diagram, when rape, hemp, maw, niger, and linseed are mixed in equal proportions the relative feeding value is approximately the same.

THE GREYHOUND OF BRITISH BIRDS.

The Wagtail is well called the Greyhound of British birds, for no bird excels it in grace and elegance of shape and deportment. Our picture is a portrait by Mr. H. Goodchild, of the beautiful Yellow Wagtail which was shown with great success as the last Aberdeen Show, by Mr. R. J. Robertson, of Glasgow. It won 1st Prize and special, and of it our reporter said, "Shown as only 'Bob' can do it, that is, in perfection."

Twenty-eight Years a Fancier — and — How I Became Interested in Bird-keeping

By W. LIDGETT (Hon. Sec. Newark C.B.S.).

WHEN one begins to talk of 28 years' experience in the fancy, it almost makes one feel the top of one's head to see if there is a bald space where the hair once grew. Happily I have not lost mine yet, for, although many years a fancier, I am yet comparatively young, only numbering half the allotted span of three score years and ten, and I started very early to keep birds, being only a boy at school, eight years old, when I had my first bird. I came by it in this way.

During the yearly summer holidays my brother and I were walking along the country road about two miles from home, when we espied a man and a lad just over a hedge, catching birds, and, being naturally curious, we stayed to look. Presently the man came up and told us if we wanted to watch them we must sit down and keep quiet. We did so, and before long a flock of birds came twittering by. The bird-catcher's bird in the cage commenced to "call" furiously, and down on the hedge dropped several of the birds. From where we sat, or rather lay, we could not see the birds at all after they had dropped, but the lad and his father came running past us, and as we got up to see what they were doing we saw two of the birds fast on the bird-line twigs attached to the cage.

After they had been taken off and the feathers cleaned with turpentine they were put in a sort of box cage, with a stocking leg hanging through a hole at the top, and the catchers had set their twigs right again. I asked the lad what birds they were, and was told that they were Redpolls.

The Tempter and the Tempted.

"Do you want to buy any?" was his next question. This was a puzzler, for, not knowing the value of the birds nor how to keep them, I hardly knew how to answer him. "You can have one of these for a 'tanner,'" he said. He might just as well have said a sovereign, because neither myself nor my brother possessed the necessary "tanner."

Still, somehow I wanted one of those birds, and, asking the address of his home, I determined at some future time to buy one. I did not have to wait long, for on going home and telling my mother what we had seen, and how I should like to keep a bird, she decided to buy one for me.

The next matter was where to keep it, because we had no cage, but this difficulty was soon got over by a neighbour lending one, in which she had kept a Canary, the bird having joined the great majority. I was delighted with my new pet, and tended it with every care, feeding it every day, and handling it every time I came home from school.

A few months after this my father visited an aunt of mine at Balderton, and while going round the garden he noticed a Thrush under some nets covering the currant bushes, and with some little difficulty he caught it and brought it home. He stayed up late that night making a cage for it out of a box and some wire netting, and although not an elaborate affair it was another bird and cage.

Father Pays the Food Bill.

I was to have it for myself if I would look after it and clean it out. My father himself would buy the food for it, because threepence extra for food for a bird per week was a serious item to a schoolboy. Of course, I immediately accepted it on these terms, and as far as I can remember I had these two birds about a year before again adding to my collection.

I used about this time to pass through a yard to go to the butcher's for my mother, and I had often noticed with longing eyes the number of cages that hung inside one of the houses. This particular day a boy sat on the doorstep with a basket containing a nest of young birds, and was feeding them with a piece of stick.

I entered into conversation with the lad, and learnt that the birds were "Greenies," and that if I wanted one I could have one for a trifle. Off home I went to try to "raise the wind," and, having done so, went back and fetched one of the young birds.

To rear it was the next question, because at that time my experience with birds was limited to the two specimens I had, and how to feed a young one and bring it to maturity I hardly knew, especially as it had to be fed about every hour. However, with the help of my mother when I was at school, and attending to it myself at all other times, I managed to rear it till it could peck.

One day, soon after it could feed itself, I accidentally left the cage door unfastened, the bird, with flying on to the wires, knocked open the door, and away he flew on to the roof, and from thence to the chimney stacks. After looking round and getting over his surprise, he darted off out of my sight. I stood for a while looking after him, feeling very sad, and then went indoors, leaving the cage where it hung, never expecting to see my bird again.

This was about noon, and at tea-time, when my father came home he looked up at the cage in which the bird used to hang, for he had himself become very interested in this particular bird. Then he came into the house in a hurry, saying to mother, "Bill will lose that bird if he is not more careful; it is asleep on the perch with the door wide open." Outside went my mother, and there beheld the Greenie fast asleep on his perch, having returned home and entered his cage again. My father would scarcely believe that the bird had escaped at dinner-time.

One can imagine my surprise and pleasure when I returned, and I determined to be more careful in the future. This bird became so tame that he used to come out of his cage every day (only indoors) for a time, and one day, the kitchen door having been left open, he again made off. His cage was put out of doors again, and although he stayed away all that night he came back again on the next day and went inside again. After that he went away many times, and returned, and he was so familiar to the neighbours around that he became known as "Lidgett's Greenie," and he lived to a ripe old age.

Since those days of boyhood I have still continued in the fancy, having had at one time or another most of the commoner of the British seedeaters, besides Canaries and foreign birds. At the present time I possess about 50, including Cockatoos, Cockatiels, Zebra finches, Budgerigars, White and Grey Java Sparrows, Ribbon finches, etc., and have a good stock of Britishers, and of latter years I have taken up the breeding and exhibiting of Norwich Canaries, a fair share of success on the show bench falling to my lot, three cups being among my winnings.

The Dawn of Ambition.

I well remember my first experience of showing birds. It was a Goldfinch, which I exhibited at the local fanciers' show, and I remember proudly taking my bird to the hall where the show was held, and anxiously awaiting the time for the show to open. On going round to the class in which my bird was in I found he stood earless, and although a bit disappointed I was not downhearted, and then there determined in the near future to be possessed of something worth showing. In a short time I again sent to another show, and although gaining a card I had to wait a little longer before I gained the coveted red ticket, which has since then many times come to me.

For several years I had only devoted my energies in the Canary breeding line to ordinary songsters, such as when sold helped to lessen the seed bill at the end of the year, and although I had shown British and Foreign birds I had up to this time never benched a Canary.

I then determined to try to breed a bird worth exhibiting, and, the Norwich being my fancy, I bought a good buff hen of medium size and nice type, and a clear yellow cock of good size and fairly loose in feather, to make up for the very tight feather in the hen.

The first season with this pair I took two vices at our club show. The next year I mated the father to a rich coloured buff hen (his own daughter), and I believe this was the best hen I ever owned. She was shown three years in succession at Newark C.B.S. annual show in the non-fed class, and won Singing Contests.

DURHAM.

Linnet contest, Black Horse Inn, Elvet, May 6; 42 birds and some real good singing. Boyd, Heslop McQuirk divided.—S. McKinley, Sec. (See notice above as to advertisements.—Editor.)

BARNESLEY.

Dove Inn Linnet Club, May 7, for 4 min. time sing, Shepherd timer, Collins chaffer. 1, Doolley, 3 min. 45 sec.; 2, Hardman, 3.32; 3, Wright, 3.31; 4, shared, 3.30 each, Jones and Davis. Better luck next week for the Castleford champion.—J. Hardman, Sec.

PONTEFRAC.

Linnet contest club sing, Woodman Inn, Horse-fair, May 6; 26 entered for 4 minutes time singing. 1, T. Jones; 2, Blackshear; 3, E. Clayton. Open sing, May 7; 37 birds, 3 minutes time singing. 1, 3, Blackshear; 2, Scotson.—J. Beard, Sec.

LEEDS.

Open contest May 6, for quality Linnet singing, Clarence Hotel, Skinner Lane; 23 sang. 1, Wigfield; 2, 3, Wharum; 4, shared Marshall and Wigfield. Judges, W. Lipman and S. Butterfield and J. Hutchinson. May 7, 17 birds sang. Our host added three specials for best three birds. 1, 2, Wigfield; 3, Brown. Judges, S. Butterfield and J. Hutchinson.—W. Lipman, Hon. Sec.

Linnet contest, Skimmers' Arms, Buntingthorpe, 18 birds competing. 1, Hullen; 2, Green; 3, shared Laycock and Blackbur. Judges, A. Grainger, J. Dalton.—J. Dalton, Hon. Sec.

Leeds quality Linnet singing club, grand contest, Plasterers' Arms, Skinner Lane; 20 birds faced the judges, A. Lorrain, J. Lorrain, 1, 2, J. Chipendale and Dearlove shared; 3, Turner; 4, Wright.—F. Turner, Sec.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York road, open contest for quality Linnet singing, May 6; 27 birds sang. 1, Jarrar; 2, Stead; 3, T. Ward; 4, Ineson; 5, T. Ward. Judges, Hayes, Crane, Naylor. May 7, 25 birds sang. 1, Buttery; 2, Stead; 3, Hollingworth; 4, T. Ward; 5, Stead. Judges, Crane, Naylor, Jennings. Also evening Linnet contest, May 7; 10 birds sang. 1, Thompson; 2, Stead. Judges, Jennings, Hayes.—W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

on each occasion. This I thought a good performance, to win the same class three years in succession with the same bird, meeting, as she did, different specimens each year, and beating both yellows and buffs of all ages.

Pedigree Tells.

I usually adopt when pairing the method of yellow to buff and vice-versa, but I am a great believer in pedigree breeding, and would not object to pairing an insignificant looking specimen up (if it was not really an outcast) to a good mate if I knew the pedigree was right, and that, although not of good face value itself, yet it had the blood in it that, with judicious pairing, ought to come out in the young.

Most of my winners have been bred from the strain of the hen mentioned as winning the three firsts. When I introduce new blood I like to have it from the same place each time, one breeder having supplied me on four occasions with birds from his stock, which happens to blend with my own.

I have used double-buffing on several occasions when it suited me, and with a fair measure of success, but have never double-yellowed, not from any objection to it, but simply that I have never had birds that needed it as yet.

The cage bird fancy means many happy hours, for one can soon become intensely fascinated with it, and one who is handy with tools can make his own cages, and thus save expense, besides passing time away when not at business.

Time is the great thing. I could spend many more hours with my birds than I do, and then, as my wife often says, I should not be with them enough, but still, it is a hobby which keeps a man at home, and if care is used, and one gets a fair share of luck, one can nearly always make it pay its way. Even if at the end of the year the balance is a little on the wrong side, you have had the pleasure of your birds, and we expect to pay for our pleasure. Anyway, if one wants to take up a hobby that will give pleasure for leisure hours I would recommend him to take up bird-keeping, and unless he is hard to please he will find himself very soon keenly interested in the hobby.

MANY TROUBLES (E. M. T.).—I am afraid there must be a screw loose somewhere in the management of the birds, or in the physical condition of the birds themselves, for the trouble to be so general. How old are they? And what green food do you use? Possibly the answer to these questions might throw some light on the matter. Do not use any dandelion at all, and I would not advise you to breed with the birds that are in a kind of swoon so often, nor the worst of the fitful layers and sufferers from egg-binding. Are they in a plump or thin condition? If the former add ten drops of syrup of buckthorn and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to each ounce of their drinking water every second day for a week, and after this give six drops of tincture of gentian and a pair of dilute sulphuric acid every second day for another week. Meantime, write again, and give me the fullest particulars you can about the birds, especially as to the above points, and your management, and say if these are the same birds I have previously proscribed for, what was the former treatment, and I will do my best to help you out of the difficulty.

NOT MOULTING FLIGHTS, ETC. (F. E. H.).—(1) Without more definite knowledge of the age of the bird, and its last moult, it is difficult to give very definite advice. The recent moult is typical of the first moult after leaving the nest, and as you say it was evidently a "first year bird" when you bought it last May, one is left in doubt as to whether it is a specimen of precocity which was bred very early in the same year, and had not really moulted at all before you had it. In any case you may try the effect of the following treatment for a week or two, and if the flights and tail are much worn and dragged, you may with advantage gently remove them by degrees. Take away, say, three from the tail and two from the outer and two from the inner portion of each wing, and repeat the operation three times with an interval of five or six days between each. It will require at least six weeks for the new feathers to be fairly well grown, but not all mature, so you will scarcely be able to get a very early nest from this bird. Keep him in a bright and fairly warm place, allow to bathe freely when the weather is mild. Give a staple diet of a mixture of two parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately every second day a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, linseed, and broken groats. On the alternate days give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar. Continue giving a little fruit or green salad daily, and stick a cube of hard, common salt in the wires for him to peck at. In the water add ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and after this give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight. (2) It is true that Redpolls have the reputation of hunting out and eating red mites, and thus helping to keep a cage free from this pest, but as I have known lots of cases where the cage in which a single Redpoll has been kept got badly infested with mites, you can judge for yourself the value of the theory. And even if it were true, the birds could not destroy the mites if they were not allowed to get there. Moral: It is better to keep the mites away, than to let them come and then keep Redpolls to destroy them.

SQUATTING ON PERCH (C. R. T. H.).—Possibly the bird is a little weak on the legs, but you would do well first of all to examine its claws to see if the toes are normal, and the claws not overgrown. If otherwise, remedy these defects as far as possible. In addition to the staple diet give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, linseed and broken groats. Keep a piece of cuttlefish in the wires for it to peck at, and give a little banana, raw carrot, or green food daily. Continue this dietary for a month or so. In the water, every second day for a week, add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and after the 20 drops of chemical food every second day for two or three weeks. See that it has well fitting perch of proper size.

MATTERS OF OPINION (P. H. P.).—(1) It really seems as if the person who returned your birds knew as little as yourself, seeing that he was not clear whether they were Borderers or Rollers. I should suspect that your birds are Norwich, as you say, but of small size. The typical Norwich is a plump, chubby bird, about 6 in. long, whereas the Border is nearly a third shorter, and lighter built, and has less colour, the Roller is somewhat similar to the Border in size and build, and still more colourless. But it is not easy for inexperienced fanciers to determine to which particular breed individuals should be relegated from a printed description. (2) The difference between yellow and buff is that the feathers in a buff are slightly tipped with white, giving the bird a nearly or frosted appearance. A very pale yellow will appear very much the same colour as a buff until the tips of the feathers are closely examined, when the colour will be found to go to the tips. (3) A variegated bird with a dark cap would not be called a "crest head" unless he had erected blood in him. Variegated would be a sufficient description, but for detail you may add "cap marked." (4) The two birds you specially describe might be properly termed ticked, yellow or buff as the case may be. A bird without any dark colour at all is called a clear, yellow or buff as the case may be. A variegated is one with dark tail and flights, either with or without other dark colour on the body, of course, excepting even marked birds. A lightly, or heavily variegated, depends upon whether the bird has little or much dark colour on the body. You would find all these terms fully explained in such a work as "Our Canaries."

TWO YORKSHIRES (M. W.).—(1) Keep the cock in a fairly comfortable temperature, but not overheated, and see that it is not exposed to direct cold draughts nor sudden extremes of heat and cold, and then treat for a month as advised to "E.N." in Jan. 22 issue, which should suffice to set matters right with him. (2) I am doubtful if this bird will be much use for further breeding. Still, you may try what the following treatment for a month or so will do for her. Keep quite on the warm side. In addition to the staple seed diet give, every third day, a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed only, and on the intervening days give first half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and broken groats, and next a morsel of either banana, sweet apple, or raw carrot. In the water add, every second day for a week, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice, and after this give instead five drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight, then omit it for a week, and resume, and give it again for another fortnight. I should advise strong lusty birds bred last season as mates for both these birds in the coming season.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

LARK GOING BALD (A. G.).—I would advise you to make some slight alteration in your lark's diet. In a state of nature these birds eat readily of green food, and yet when in captivity the owners seldom give them any. Mix with his daily food young dandelion leaves, watercress or lettuce, chopped rather small and well incorporated with the usual supply. Reduce the mealworms to three daily, and supply other insects instead if you can get some. An occasional aperient would do him good. Add a few drops of fresh lemon juice daily to his drinking water. See that he is not troubled with parasites; let him have a dust bath with a spoonful of sulphur added, and occasionally spray him lightly with chilled water. Just smear the bare place with a little vaseline.

PAIRS FOR MILING (P. C. L.).—The term "Yellow" Greenfinch means yellow in feather as distinct from buff. These yellows are richer coloured and shorter in feather, and are very desirable birds for miling. (2) Give your Redpoll a mixture of Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, rape 1 part, as a staple food, and a spoonful of other seed mixture twice a week, either wild seeds as sold in packets, or buy the following separately and mix yourself: niger, maw, hemp, dandelion, gold of pleasure, and lettuce. (3) The fighting of pairs matched for breeding is generally caused through one of them being more backward than the other. There is nothing gained by putting them together until they are both fit.

IN DOUBT (H. W. Gorbam).—Nearly all birds mimic the songs of others when in captivity, and the Linnet is no exception, although he is not so bad as some in picking up objectionable notes. If you must keep all your Chaffinches I would advise you to hang the Linnet out of hearing if you can; anyway, until he is in full song.

TROUBLED WITH MICE (Novice, London).—You do not tell me if you have your birds in cages or flying loose in an aviary, but anyway, I have found the following method of dealing with mice successful. Procure half a dozen common break-back traps, the kind with a wooden tongue for the bait; smear on these a small piece of dripping, and put some Canary seed on the top of it. This sticks and is not easily taken off. If your birds are in cages in a room, place the traps round the sides on the floor, removing all other seeds. Should your birds be flying loose in an outside aviary, you must set your traps outside; this you can do by placing them behind pieces of board, so as to prevent them getting wet, or wild birds from being caught. I am frequently visited by mice from the fields, but as I keep one or two traps constantly set they do not give me much trouble. I have found this way of taking them by far the best, and there is no bait to equal Canary seed.

BRITISH BIRD & HYBRID QUERISTS

should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2 "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4 "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Lullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 23 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Aiding Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Mould British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

PLUMAGE OF YOUNG REDSTARTS (M. Rutter).—You did wrong to dispose of your young Redstarts before they had gone through their first moult. When in their nest plumage they are, generally speaking, not unlike young Robins—that is, very much mottled, but showing the Redstart tail. You can find out the sex by plucking two or three breast feathers; if cocks, the new ones will show the ruddy colour.

SKYLARKS NOT SINGING (F. Shore).—I very much doubt the sex of your Larks. Are you certain they are cocks? Out of the three of them one at least should be singing, if not all of them, by now. I would advise you to hang them out of hearing of each other, and add a little hard-boiled egg and a little crushed hemp seed to the usual food. If they are cock birds they may be recording when you are not near them, and will in time sing out, although all cocks do not make loud singers.

BREEDING GOLDFINCH MULES (Doubtful).—The Goldfinch should do in an outside flight now, although I would advise you to put him out for a few hours daily to get used to the change, and to cover him up at night if the weather is unusually bad. These birds are quite hardy. (2) I see nothing to complain of in your mating; the hen will probably go to nest shortly. Keep her supplied with material—it is an encouragement. You have a very good chance of breeding some excellent Mules with your pair. Sorry I cannot go into matters more fully in these replies—space is limited. Shall be pleased to assist you if in doubt upon any special point, by watching these columns you may find some information that may be useful to you.

LINNET STILL MOPY (M. A.).—Repeat the tincture of rhubarb, adding a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a pea to the water. Continue with the soaked seeds, but do not add the bisulphite to the soft food, unless he is very loose. Gradually get him on to ordinary diet, and be fairly liberal with green food, particularly dandelion leaves. Just handle the bird and see what condition he is in, if very fat the aperient should be repeated occasionally. He should be allowed a large cage to exercise in, and a bath on warm sunny days when not taking medicine.

GOLDFINCH FOR BREEDING (H. R. Courton).—Your Finch will be all right for breeding, but do not force him too much; reduce to half quantity the hemp as the weather improves. These birds are not early breeders, and if forced sometimes go off suddenly and cause disappointment. (2) Have you examined your Siskin to see if the leg was broken? If unilted now and he is still unable to use it, you had better try bathing in fairly warm water, gently massage it with the finger and thumb just greased with vaseline or a little oily embrocation. If fat, give an aperient or plenty of green food.

SEXING REDPOLLS (Redpoll-Siskin Lover).—It is not an easy matter to sex house-moulded Redpolls, but as you have a known cock and hen you should be able to tell what your other bird is. If he is a fresh caught one and a cock he should show some sign of colour on the breast. Take him in the hand and turn up the breast feathers with a feed pencil, you will then see if the feathers are tinged with red, if not, you can be almost certain that it is a hen, especially as you say it does not sing or twitter, which it should do now if in good health. (2) You can only tame wild birds by frequently handling the cages, speaking to them, and giving them something they are fond of, such as hemp seed. Have you our Nutshell booklet on the Siskin, Redpoll and Twite? If not, it would assist you in your management.

HYBRID BREEDING IN AVIARY (Wm. R. Beatty).—(1) I would advise you to somewhat alter your selection of birds for Hybrid breeding. As a rule two Bullfinch hens do not agree well together, so I think your better plan would be to place one of them with a cock Goldfinch as a partner in a breeding cage, or replace one with a hen Linnet or Siskin. Your aviary is large enough to accommodate the three pairs, but the less the birds are crowded the greater the prospect of success, and if you can use one of the hen Bullfinches as I suggest, I think it will be safer. (2) I am glad to hear you intend having a try for the Hawfinch-Greenfinch cross. I feel convinced that it is more likely to be bred than the one with the Bullfinch hen as the partner, but I am afraid you will find your 2ft. cage rather small. Cannot you manage to knock up a rough one just for the season, about double the size? It would be far better if you could, because if you have any luck, they should not be disturbed more than is absolutely necessary, therefore the larger the cage the less cleaning out, etc. Supply the birds fairly liberally with sunflower seed, a little hemp, Canary, linseed, shelled oats, rape, a couple of mealworms daily, and any small insects or grubs you can get hold of, especially in the Spring. Green food of all kinds, and a liberal allowance of dandelion leaves, shepherd's purse, groundsel, etc. Offer a little soft food, such as insecticide mixture, as given to Warblers. They will learn to eat it and it is absolutely necessary if you are to succeed. Should your prospects later on look rosy, you had better write again, I may be able to assist you.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING PARROT (A. J. A.).—Pleased to note there is an improvement, and if you have observed the facts correctly the "corrosion" you speak of will fall away in due course, and you must either allow it to do so or the bird must be gently yet firmly held while someone cuts away the fouled feathers. I advised a personal examination by a local vet., as I feared the intestine might be protruding, but if such is not the case the trouble will yield to the treatment already prescribed. The motions should be kept rather loose, but not continuously watery, and the bird's strength kept up by chemical food and cod liver oil emulsion, as per instructions already given. You had better report progress a month hence, but if any adverse symptoms should develop write again at once with full details, but I opine the bird's general health will continue to gradually improve.

WHAT BIRD? (J. E. McC.).—It is an Alario Finch (Alario alario), the "Mountain Canary" of the Beers. It will thrive on a mixture of canary and white millet in equal parts, add half a pint of Linnet mixture to each quart of the above and well mix. Green-food, grit and cuttlebone will also be required. It is one of the best singing Finches Africa sends us, and crosses readily with the domestic Canary. The resulting Hybrids are also usually of good song capacity.

WOUND NEAR EYE (W. L. Garrod).—Yes, bathing is quite right, but the wound should be dried with a soft cloth afterwards and then lightly anointed with a little zinc ointment, but do not use sufficient of the latter to run among and grease the plumage. If, in spite of all your care, the plumage should get a little greasy, then same must be sponged out with tepid soapy water, choosing some warm day for the operation. The bird should be kept quite warm, yet not away from light and air, and the temperature should be as even as possible.

CAN IT BE CURED? (Curious).—I felt convinced all through that your bird was a Quaker Parakeet, but with the data at my command could not be certain upon the point. I see no reason why it should not be cured of its feather-plucking habits, and perhaps the best and quickest way to effect this would be to procure for it a mate; then get a large packing-case, make it water-tight and stretch strong wire netting over the front, and after fitting it up with stout forked branches, turn the birds in; break up a birch broom and give them a portion of it, renewing the supply as required. They should build a nest amid the branches with the birch twigs, and in the joys and sorrows of domestic life your bird should be too occupied to pluck its plumage. If you cannot do this then be as chummy with it as you can, keep it interested, and give it as much liberty as possible. Spray it two or three times a week with a tepid quassia solution, but not on cold days. Your diet is about right, but it can have the sweet apple regularly. Do not give much hemp; give plenty of good giant canary seed, some white oats and a few sunflower and safflower seeds—the other items you mention are quite in order.

TUMOUR AND COLD (T. W.).—I am pleased to note the vet. has been able to clear away the tumour, and hope it may not appear again. The nostrils should be bathed or sprayed with a dilute solution of glyco-thymoline, bathing is best if you can handle it. Get a mixture of ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine in equal parts—for use take one teaspoonful of the mixture to each ounce of the drinking water, and give this in lieu of the drinking water for a week, then put it on a course of chemical food for a few days, when, if the cold still remains, the cold mixture must be renewed for another week. It could also have sweet apple and pieces of dry biscuit.

BUDGERIGARS NOT NESTING (Surrey).—If the hawks are clean and not visited by mice it is merely a case of weather and possibly some other condition combined having put the birds back for a bit. You may possibly be one brood short this season, but very probably not—my experience of these charming birds has been that many pairs will breed continuously barely pausing for the moult, till finally they die from exhaustion. Your treatment is quite satisfactory, and all you can do is to await their pleasure, as soon as they really are in breeding condition they will settle down to nesting again, and probably this will be quite soon. Re young Budgerigars, these are precocious birds, and many attempt nesting at six months or thereabouts, but it is not good for them to be allowed to do so; in my opinion they should be a few twelve months old before being allowed to breed, as I consider it would be bad both for them and their progeny if they do so.

AMAZON PARROT (Polly).—There is very little wrong with the bird I think. If you cannot get it to take the cod-liver oil emulsion on bread or cake, you must let that go, unless you can smear a little across his tongue once a day from the end of a stick. Add a few chillies to the seed mixture. Continue the other treatment as already directed and report again in a month. Feathers do not improve during transit in the post, but for its kind the one sent seemed pretty normal and reasonably well developed. All wild creatures are very susceptible to noise, and often tremble with alarm at every strange and sudden sound; but it is only a matter of time for it to become accustomed to it all, and probably give you more than you want in the way of imitating motor horns, taxi calls, etc. In the same manner let it, as it were, share the life of the room. It will hear and see many things, and will increase its vocabulary from what it hears around it. It's all a matter of settling down and becoming thoroughly domesticated with you.

GREEN PARAKEET REGURGITATING (Armet).—Many species of the Parrot tribe regurgitate the food, and then swallow same. With some individuals it is a mark of affection, and at such times if they had a mate would feed it; at the same time the symptoms you describe may arise from indigestion. Every fourth day for a month or more put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intervening days half that quantity of chemical food. Diet it as follows: Seed mixture, canary, white millet, oats, hemp, safflower, sunflower and shelled net nuts—get a pint or quart of each and well mix together, and keep a continuous supply in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit (most species are fond of sweet apple, any kind it will eat, biscuit, plain cake, and stale crusts. Grit (not hard), cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood must be continually in the cage.

DROPPING ITS FEATHERS (Parrot, Walford).—I do not think there is any need to be anxious about the dropping of the feathers unless they are shed so numerously as to cause bare areas. Such cases as you indicate are not uncommon, but as a rule unless there is weakness things right themselves in due course. I should regularly put one-third teaspoonful of byno-phosphates in the drinking water; also give an occasional laxative (one teaspoonful of Dinnford's magnesia in the drinking water) to keep the bowels moving freely, yet not watery-loose. I could not possibly express an opinion re the claws without seeing the bird; if there has been no signs of these since you have had it, I should say they will not be reproduced. Re the cage, give the rusted wires a coat of Brunswick black and also the whole of the interior, but the exterior of all hands and the base of the cage can be enamelled according to taste, but black for the wires and pale lavender-grey for the base looks very neat and tasteful. After the cage has been so treated the bird should not occupy it till the varnish and paint is quite hard.

RED-BEAKED WEAVER (Weaver Novice).—I doubt if these birds will attempt to nest seriously in a cage, though the male will weave many for nests and thereby raise hopes which are not likely to be realised. In natural aviaries a few are reared annually. A mixture of canary, white and Indian millet seeds in equal parts, will meet their requirements, but they appreciate a millet spray, also seedling and flowering grass, and one or two mealworms per diem. They will not use a nest receptacle, but will weave a nest on some twiggy branch, top of the aviary, or something similar, of hay or fresh grass. Several of the late Dr. Green's books, "Amateur's Aviary," and "Favourite Foreign Birds" (Upcott Gill and Co.) contain chapters on various Weavers. These books are to be found in the lists of most second-hand booksellers. My book, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," contains a short chapter on Whydahs, with a footnote that similar treatment will suffice for the large family of Weavers. It is 2d. post free, from our manager.

BUDGERIGARS WITH FITS (Port Elizabeth).—As birds procured from different sources are taken with similar maladies, it points either to infected cages, impure water, or constipation. A mixture of canary and white millet seed, with plenty of green-food—seedling and flowering grass, so long as not tainted by frost or soured by long-continued wet, is the best—cuttlebone and grit must also be supplied. You must supply fluid magnesia to keep the bowels moving quite freely, without being watery-loose. I advise you having a post-mortem examination made of the next bird you lose under similar conditions. Of course, some protection must be given the birds to enable them to seek shelter from the full power of the sun, or that may possibly be the cause.

C. F. Surroughes.—Thanks for cutting received.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

THE

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL.

By H. NORMAN.

The Most Thorough and Practical Work on British Birds ever Produced. Published in two parts, or complete bound in cloth. Part I. Hardbills. Deals in the fullest manner with Linnets, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and all other species of Finches. Part II. Softbills. With Blackbirds, Thrushes, Jackdaws, Larks, and most of the more commonly kept species of insectivorous birds.

This work, lucidly written by a noted specialist, contains fullest directions for Hand-rearing, Keeping, and Exhibiting the most popular of our British Birds. Each bird is dealt with separately, its nesting habits, etc., are fully explained, and these, together with a description of its general characteristics, will enable the novice to easily identify the various species. Each part contains a coloured plate and numerous black and white illustrations by the author.

HYBRID BREEDERS

make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL" FOR 1916. The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

Meeting, May 13, Three Tuns Inn, Eastwood. Mr. G. Lees, chair. Monthly table show was held. Mr. Gabbitts, of Mansfield, judged to the satisfaction of everyone. Greenf: 1, Smith; 2, Bradley; 3, Lees; 4, Keightley. Bramble, or Chaffinch; 1, Smith; 2, Lees. Several new members were made, and a most enjoyable evening spent. Classes for next meeting are: (1) Goldfinch; (2) A.V. British not previously shown at our table shows.—Smith and Lees, Secs.

PONTYPOOL C.B.S.

An excellent spread and concert was held at headquarters May 6, the first anniversary of the Society. After the good things were partaken of an excellent programme was entered upon, Mr. W. Lewis chair. Songs, solos, and recitations were rendered by Messrs. Leslie Thomas, W. Lewis, W. Rosser (piano-forte solo), H. Vaughan, R. Smith, and H. Savoury. Votes of thanks to hostess Mrs. Baker and to the artistes, accompanied, and chairman concluded a very enjoyable time.—H. H. Vaughan.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting, May 4, Mr. Jones presiding over a good attendance. Mr. Waters was unable to be present, but sent his paper on the Norwich Canary, which was read by the Sec. The paper expressed in a practical manner his views as to the ideal bird and the methods he adopted as to pairing and rearing, and was interesting and instructive. He has already over 30 youngsters. The Society wish to keep in touch with members that have joined the Forces or about to, and they should let the Sec. have their names and addresses. Messrs. Hill, Hinchcliffe and Swift were elected members. Mr. Cowley informed the meeting of the death of Mr. Horace Hobson, a young and energetic member, and a vote of sympathy was passed with his widow. June meeting, table show.—E. Sisson, Asst. Sec.

NEW CROSS C.B.S.

Meeting, Leo Green, May 4, Mr. A. W. Cullen chair. Correspondence dealt with. A discussion arose as to the future of the club. So many of the members are with the Forces or on munition work that it has been very difficult of late to carry on, and now that several more are about to be called up difficulties will increase. The question was discussed at some length, and it was the opinion of all present that under the circumstances it was impossible to carry on. It was therefore proposed and carried unanimously that the club be closed down for the remainder of the war. The secretaries were instructed to settle up all accounts, and Messrs. J. Williams, A. W. Cullen, and G. Burton were appointed trustees. We hope when brighter times come all members and friends will rally round and put the club in the prominent position it has held in the past, and trust among those at the reunion, we shall meet all who are now "doing their bit."—Burton Bros., Hon. Secs.

CRESTED CANARY CLUB.

General meeting, 2, York Street, Piccadilly, May 11; Mr. G. Crabbs chairman. Hon. Sec. reported that he had now received part of the cash and books. Mr. G. Ley, the President, wrote regretting his inability to attend on account of war work. Resolved that as half of the members have paid their subs. for 1914, that the Hon. Sec. write to the remainder requesting them to forward theirs, and the members would not be asked for any subscription for 1915 and 1916. Having some funds in hand, it was resolved to give our support to four shows during the coming show season. Members are requested to obtain their closed rings through the Hon. Sec. as before. Mr. Robson proposed that the present officers continue to act until the termination of the war; this was carried unanimously. Mr. Hatcham was elected auditor in place of Mr. Heath, and Messrs. Shepherd and Wallington to fill vacancies on the committee.—T. Heath, Hon. Sec., and Treas., 28, Kenilworth Court, Putney.

LEYTON C.B.A.

On May 1, Mr. J. Robson lectured to a well-attended meeting on "Preparing birds for exhibition." He dealt with the importance of getting the birds used to the show cage while still young, and not a week or so before the autumn shows. Another important item was the food supplied to the hen while feeding young. A poorly-developed youngster could not be expected to turn out a good show specimen. The lecturer was of the opinion there could be no substitute for egg-food, made with either biscuit or stale bread; the egg to be about five days old. For an exhibition bird a good moult was essential, particularly for colour-fed birds. If not in good condition, the colour would not be properly absorbed, and they would be pale or patchy. Strong light should be shaded. The judicious use of linseed was to be recommended, and if the birds would not eat the seed grind some in a coffee mill, and mix with colour food. Sulphate of iron should be used all through the moult, a small piece in the drinker twice a week. This would enrich the blood and tone up the system, and therefore the old feathers would be thrown off the quicker. Birds should be washed about four days previous to showing, and if possible should be dried in a soft heat; that is, in a drying cage constructed with a hot-water tank underneath. A number of questions were asked and answered, and Mr. Robson was accorded a unanimous vote of thanks, to which he suitably responded.—A. W. Farmer, Asst. Hon. Sec.

EAST ANGLIAN NORWICH P.C.

A further meeting in connection with the formation of this specialist club was held at the Festival House, Norwich, May 11. The attendance was a large one, and comprised most of the leading fanciers in the City. Mr. W. W. Freestone, who occupied the chair at the initial meeting, was unable to be present, and the elected chairman of the Club, Mr. J. J. Smith, presided in his stead. Mr. J. Vines was unanimously elected vice-chairman. Sec. gave an outline of what transpired at the previous meeting, and made special reference to the financial arrangements and prospects of the club. An interesting discussion followed. It was agreed that the office of treasurer should be combined with that of hon. sec., and a small Finance Committee should be formed to assist in this department. Mr. Jacob Mackley was elected as first president, and his remarks in response were very cheering to those assembled. The Club is indeed fortunate to have at its head one whose name and fame is known throughout the Canary world. Messrs. J. Howard, Payne, Dunham, Russell, Calver, Horsley, Brundall and Freestone were elected as vice-presidents, and the list will be considerably increased when those willing to serve from the other counties concerned have been approached. After a lengthy and careful consideration of the matter it was decided the annual subscription be 3s. The election of local committee was left over till next meeting, June 15. In the meantime it is hoped that all interested in this matter in Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambs., and Lincoln, will get into touch with the hon. sec., Robt. Tomlinson, 17, Amphill Street, Norwich.

CRYSTAL PALACE AND PENGEE.

Meeting, Alexander Hotel, Penge, Mr. Foxen, chair. Decided to run a joint show with Bromley for 1916, open to members only. This was the only item that could be settled at present, as we are waiting the reply from the S.B.F.C. whether they accept us or not. There was only a small attendance owing to the Derby Scheme calling up our members. W. D. Fryett, Hon. Sec.

LONDON C.B.A.

Meeting, May 9, 2, York Street, St. James. Mr. Crisp, chair, and a good attendance. After general business a handsome 5-guinea silver cup was handed round for the inspection of members for competition in the Yorkshire Section. The chairman then continued his subject on "Mating" which was of great interest. A vote of thanks to the chair ended a very instructive evening.—A. Wallington.

WALTON AND EVERTON C.B.S.

Meeting, Kilshaw-st., May 10. Mr. Holmes, chair. N.F. show business gone thoroughly into, and created a very keen (and sometimes heated) discussion. A beautiful silver challenge cup was presented by Mr. R. Costello, for competition at the two N.F. shows and October old show combined. Canaries only to compete; six highest birds to count. Cup to be won two years in succession or three years in all. This cup will be known as the "Costello Challenge Cup." Runners-up, both champion and novice, will each receive a medal value 10/6, kindly offered by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe, and the Sterling Seed Co. Chairman, Mr. G. Holmes, generously offered special value 5/- for highest points next to medal winners.—A. G. Hunt, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN BRITISH M. & F.B.C.

Annual meeting, March 25, Shields' Cafe, Bigg Market; chairman, Mr. Pettersson, presided over a good attendance. Owing to the medals, etc., not coming to hand, balance sheet was left over. Election of officials, etc.: Pres., Mr. Taylor; Vice Presidents as last year with the addition of Mr. S. Lind-say; Chair, Mr. E. B. Hooper; Vice Chair, Rev. C. R. Appleton; Sec. and Treas., W. Curry; committee all local members. Table show was held; Mr. Houghton judge. Linnet: 1, Almond; 2, Johnson; 3, Bertram; 4, vhe, Hooper; he, c, Appleton. Bullfinch: 1, Almond; 2, vhe, Hooper; 3, c, Pettersson; 4, Johnson; he, Appleton. A.O.V.: 1, 2, Hooper; 3, Johnson; 4, Appleton. Pairs for Hyl. breeding: 1, Bertram; 2, Appleton. New members elected, J. Wright and M. Hetherington. Vote of thanks was given Mr. Houghton for judging. A hearty welcome to our ranks will be given any British, Mule or Foreign bird fancier in Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland or Westmorland. We give three cups and 8 medals for competition among our members at the shows where our patronage is granted; for further particulars apply W. Curry, Sec., 6, Roxburgh Place, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, May 8, Mr. W. J. Heath presiding over a moderate attendance. Letters read from Mr. H. Norman and T. Coombes. Mr. R. E. Collins was nominated for membership. Decided to hold young bird show early in July, classification being left to committee and to be submitted to June meeting for approval. Mr. J. Robson judge. Next meeting, judging competition for birds bred 1916 was arranged, three classes (Norwich, Borders and Yorkshires), a silver spoon to best bird. It is hoped members will bring birds and make this, the last meeting till the autumn, a very successful one; decided to ask Mr. P. Rorke to act as final judge.

Mr. L. Howard gave his promised lecture on "British Birds and their Eggs," which proved entertaining and instructive. The lecturer brought about two hundred eggs, most of which he had collected himself, and gave a description of the various birds, where they built their nests and how to find them. The lecture was interspersed with many birdy anecdotes which were much appreciated by the members. The beautiful markings on some of the eggs were very much admired. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Howard for his very interesting lecture. Decided, owing to the unsettled state of some of the members, that the Society do not purchase any more closed rings this year, but leave it to the members to purchase what they require.—G. Griffiths, Hon. Sec.

GATESHEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, May 13, Lockhart's, High Street; chairman, Mr. Holden, presided over a good attendance. Correspondence included a letter from Mr. Best, Sec. Leeds Roller C.C., re proposed Roller Section to be added to our society. As no support was forthcoming from local fanciers, members decided to let the matter drop for the time. Decided to hold next meeting July 8, at same address, 7.30; also to hold a N.F. show for Canaries and Mules in connection with same, two classes each variety, clears and marked, for Canaries; Mules, one class; fee 6d. per cage. Judge, Mr. Houghton, Gloucester (members please give him a good entry). Table show for British Birds and Mules was held; Mr. J. Maddison judged. Also a judging competition. Mr. R. Tindle gave 11 correct placings, Rev. C. R. Appleton coming second. Linnet: 1, Lindsay; 2, Hooper. Goldf. or Bullf.: 1, vhe, Rowan; 2, he, Appleton; 3, Lindsay; c, Cromarty. Greenf.: 1, 2, Hooper; 3, Holden; vhe, he, Lindsay; c, Cromarty. A.O.V.: 1, 2, 3, Hooper; vhe, Lindsay; he, Appleton. Mules: 1, 2, Appleton; 3, Liddell. Mr. Hooper won special most points given by Rev. C. R. Appleton. New members elected, Mr. Blakey and Mr. Espie. Vote of thanks to Mr. Maddison brought a grand meeting to a close. A hearty welcome to local fanciers to attend next meeting, also to those who would like to join. Entrance fee 1s.; annual subs. 2s. 6d. For further particulars apply W. Curry, 28, Roxburgh Place, Newcastle.

WELSH N. COUNTIES F. & F.A.

Meeting, Washington Hotel, Llandudno, May 10. The following were in attendance: Miss Felton, Messrs. J. Armille, G. Hughes, H. M. Brigg, J. P. Parry, R. Mostyn, R. Sowter, A. Ward, and the sec. Reports that negotiations for securing the Town Hall, Llandudno, had failed and correspondence relating to same was read. Messrs. Brigg and Sorter reported having inspected the Royal Red Garage, and seen the manager, who had most kindly offered to place the premises at the committee's disposal for holding the show, subject to the charges being mutually agreed, and sec. was instructed to get, if possible, an option in writing, at a price, for use of the Garage on November 1st, with an alternative option for the 2nd November as well, in case it was deemed advisable to divide the exhibits and hold the show on two consecutive days. In view of the Compulsion Act, which might affect certain members of the committee, it was unanimously agreed that everything connected with the show be deferred for one month, pending possible developments. The sec. reported that having been unable to secure a certain special offered at last show, in spite of repeated applications, he had on the advice of the solicitor of the Association bought and supplied to the winner a spl. of equal value. The arrangement was confirmed, members expressing the hope that the donor of special would fulfil his obligations by refunding the amount. The accounts of the Association were reported to be now in a satisfactory state, the debit balance on Jan. 1 having been completely wiped out, and a small credit balance was now in hand.—G. E. Cragg.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Annual country ramble, May 14, to Dorking, a good number mustered, including several juveniles. From Boxhill, 10.30, we made our way to Rammore Common, and along the lane leading to the common numerous nests were found, Chaffinches, Blackbirds, Thrushes, etc. The little lads were very busy, and in the happy hunting field. When young were discovered they were anxious to arrest them, but upon the advice of their elders they left them unmolested, and showed much interest in the lectures upon the objects. Rammore Common reached, we found very few. Linnets being very scarce; may be a late season. Bullfinches were heard, and Hawfinches were seen, but we were unable to find their nests, although they hovered around. The Cuckoo was heard many times, and the Nightingale was singing in his glory, also the various Warblers. Lunch-time arrived, and all made themselves very busy, amidst many amusing comments. Photos were taken by one of our members, and we again resumed our ramble, reaching Dorking at 5, where tea was provided at the Temperance Hotel. Train left 7.25, and we arrived at Peckham Rye all loaded with wild flowers of many varieties. The day had been fine for the occasion, and everyone spent a happy and enjoyable day.—A. G. Cant, Hon. Sec.

Members rally to gether and make this a good show.—Wm. Newell.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

A fine muster attended the last monthly meeting to hear Mr. J. Robson lecture upon "Care of the Young." Mr. Robson dealt with the subject from the time the bird was hatched till it commenced to moult, and gave his own recipes for feeding, both in health and in sickness. Many questions were put to Mr. Robson and quickly answered, and a vote of thanks to the lecturer was carried with acclamation.

ALFRETON C.B.S.

Meeting, headquarters, May 13, Red Lion, Mr. J. Admitt chair, with a good attendance. Decided to hold our P.F. show (members) on Whit Sat., June 10, classification as last year. We have a dozen money specials for same. Mr. A. Wilson, of North Wingfield, judge. Decided that Sec. write Mr. H. Parker, who still remains in the Derby Royal Infirmary, wishing him a quick recovery from the injury to his hand.—Geo. Sawyer, Sec.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Meeting, May 6, Headquarters, chairman Mr. G. Velland. Decided that members must make their entries from the classification in syllabus, and that no notices be sent out for members' shows, as has been customary. Show of British was held, and proved a great success, both in birds and attendance. Owing to the absence of the advertised judge, Mr. Truman, Doncaster, kindly judged, and gave online satisfaction. His awards were as follows: Linnets (7): 1, J. Dobson; 2, Dr. Cummings; 3, c, Hunt; 4, he, Colburn. Redpoll (2): 1, 2, T. Dobson; 2, c, Fisher; 1, Owen; vhe, he, Colburn. Goldf. or Bullf. (9): 1, 3, Dr. Cummings; 2, Colburn; 4, T. Dobson; vhe, Owen; 3s, c, Fisher. A.O.V. Hawk: 1, Colburn; 2, vhe, 10, Dr. Cummings; 3, T. Dobson; 4, Chambers and Keith c Fisher.—J. Chambers, Hon. Sec.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS.

By ARTHUR PRICE.

Showing the simplicity of Canary Breeding, and giving hints for the overcoming of such little difficulties as may arise.

ALTHOUGH only an amateur in the exhibition world, I at my first attempt won first prize at the Crystal Palace with a bird of my own breeding. I bred in my first year 41 youngsters from four hens, and the young ones did well and thrived, and most of them won for me on the Show Bench.

I make all my own cages during spare hours, and when a man takes an interest in the hobby it is surprising how he forgets the time flying, especially when he is cage-making. The boxes I use for the purpose are Colman's 28lb. starch boxes, and I think there is plenty of room in them, for I have used them with success.

I buy the fronts ready made by the dozen, which is cheaper than buying them singly, and while these are on order you can whitewash the boxes and put in the cross-piece necessary to prevent the sand and seed from scattering on the floor, this crosspiece being about 2½ inches broad.

I use wood which joiners call beading for making my perches, first planing off the edges. You can make the cross-pieces above mentioned from the lids off the boxes, and you will find that the wood works up evenly and smooth.

After having got all the requisites, such as nest-pans, drinkers, seed-boxes, etc., you can then watch your birds to see whether the ones you intend breeding with are ready to commence the house-keeping business. This you will be able to see quite plainly, for if the cocks are in full song and the hens fly vigorously from perch to perch you can safely put them together, of course considering the weather.

Begin with Good Stock Birds.

If you are a beginner in the fancy you must first secure some good birds to breed with. What I mean by good birds are those which you know contain some good blood, for without this qualification you may as well not try to breed birds for the show bench, or even birds that excel in size and shape; and remember it costs you no more to breed and rear good birds than it does common ones.

I should advise a beginner to go to a fancier who is a known exhibitor, and if he will look through the advertising columns of CAGE BIRDS he will find plenty of well-known men who can be relied upon.

Having selected your man, write and ask him the price of, say, a buff cock and two yellow hens, of good type and matched for breeding.

Do not mind giving a good price for them, as it will pay you in the long run, and you can have the birds on approval by depositing your cash with the editor, which is by far the safest plan.

Now if you think your birds are quite ready to breed, run the buff cock in with one yellow hen, and after two days put in your nest and a little nesting material. I use moss of my own gathering and a little cotton-wool—no cow-hair, as I think this breeds too much red mite. I find the earthenware or tin nest-pans are the best.

When Housekeeping Starts.

You will soon see your birds making up their happy home, and you then keep a look-out for the first egg, and when this is laid, transfer it from the nest into a box, and substitute a marble for the egg. I use a "Bovril" box for my egg-box, and I find this answers the purpose well, as it contains the necessary compartments, which you can number like your cages to prevent the eggs getting mixed.

When the hen has laid her third egg, place the other eggs back in the nest and take away the marbles; then take away the cock bird. The hen will still go on sitting, and you will be able to use the cock with the other hen, for I use one cock to two hens with success.

If a very good hen that you have will not sit, you must transfer the eggs from her to one or two hens that are going on sitting, that is, if you have any sitting and due to hatch about the same time.

Lots of hens will not sit with the cage-front open, therefore in such cases try a screen over the front from top to the door, but it is best not to use the screen if the hens will do without.

I should have mentioned that I pair my birds up the last week in March or the first week in April, but of course if the weather is bad—for you will be surprised what bad effect the cold winds will have on the birds—I keep them back a week, for it is wise to study a little before losing, say, one or two nests of eggs, as this disheartens a beginner.

There must be a sharp look-out for cases of egg binding, as I think this is one of the worst things you have to contend with. If you see a hen sit in a lump, panting hard and in pain, you must take prompt steps to see to the cause. I find castor oil dropped on the vent, or a warm sponge just held on the body, will help the hen to part with the egg.

The most important point during the breeding season is to let the birds have plenty of fresh clean water, good seed and egg-food, and last, but not least, perfect quietness, keeping all strangers out of the room, for I have found the quieter the birds are, the better are the results of their labours.

Don't Forget the Green Food

The hens sit thirteen days, and two days before they are due to hatch you must provide them with egg-food. A little will do, and you can increase the amount when the youngsters are born, but let it be fresh and sweet. Give plenty of green food, such as watercress and dandelion, fresh twice a day, or oftener if you wish, but don't neglect to give it first thing in the morning, and, say, five to six in the evening.

I make my egg-food as follows: Take one thick slice of home-made bread to each egg, put through the egg-mill, and mix well together. I find bread beats biscuits hollow.

When the youngsters begin to leave the nest, supply them with crushed hempseed besides the egg-food, and when you see they can digest it alone you will be safe in taking them away from the hen.

If you do not do this you will find the hen, wanting to go to nest again, will pull out the youngsters' tails for nesting material; and, having got your first nest away with success, you will know how to prepare for the second. You must, of course, go on giving the first lot of youngsters egg-food and crushed hemp, reducing the egg-food every other day.

After your second nest is nicely over, your time will be taken up with picking out the birds you think will do for the show bench at first-feather shows. Let the birds have the bath frequently, as it strengthens them. I think, and get them accustomed to the show cage by letting it hang on the front of the cage with the doors up, so that they can run into the show cage.

Twice a week I take about six birds down into the kitchen in their show cages, and place them on the table, and with the constant passing of those in the house the birds get a lot quieter, and not so wild. There is nothing more provoking to yourself or the judge than to find that, on lifting up the show cage to examine the bird, it flutters all over the wires, thereby disarranging its feathers and knocking itself about so that it cannot stand erect.

After the First-Feather shows are about over, you will see your birds begin to shed their feathers, and you will know the moulting season is not far off. This is the time which lots of fanciers look upon with dread, but let the birds again have perfect quietness, fresh water, with one or two drops of essence of aniseed therein, and you need not be afraid.

If you colour-feed you must keep a lot of the light out, so that your bird's colour does not fade, and you must colour-feed if you wish to be in the vanguard of the exhibition world, for I consider a non-fed bird is just like a wall that has been papered and not varnished.

At colour-feeding time your egg-food comes into use again, and with this you mix your colour-food. Use it gently at first, as all birds will not eat it to begin with, but by doing this you will get them used to it, and then you can strengthen it day by day.

If during this time you see one or two of the birds down, that is, sitting lumpy and half-asleep, give them a little ordinary bread soaked in warm milk, with a little treacle on it, and this should pull them round.

Separate the birds you intend exhibiting, and let them each have a cage on its own, which must be very clean. I give each some conditioning food made as follows: Place one pennyworth of isinglass in a cup, half fill with water, and put into the oven until hot; then take it out, let it cool until it becomes a jelly, and mix it with egg-food, and give to each bird a teaspoonful twice a week. This will have a good effect on the birds.

Let the birds have the show cage again and be in the kitchen. You will find them timid at first, but use is second nature, so give them plenty of use. After the show season I feed on plain canary seed, with a touch of hemp, say, once a week.

After the winter is past—during which I use no heat at all—you will be getting near the breeding season again, and, of course, if you have been successful during last season you will naturally go on the same lines again; but you must also use your brains, and try and remedy any defects you may find out.

I advise all beginners to join an ornithological society, where they will learn a lot to their advantage.

A FINE HEN BULLFINCH.

A Portrait by Mr. Norman of the fine Bullfinch which won 2nd prize at Watford Show for Mr. J. Fisher, Northampton.

The Economical and Systematic Management of Feathered Pets.

By HARRY W. DAVY (Great Yarmouth).

Showing the enjoyment that may be found in the keeping of birds as pets, the small expense attached thereto, and explaining how many conveniences which lessen the labour and add to the appearance of the bird-room may be devised and constructed by the owner of the birds.

THE desire has ever been with me to possess something alive, and my ambition first showed itself in consigning to a glass bottle such members of the fly species as fell a prey to my infantile grasp. But, as the child puts away childish things in the flight of time, so my bottle and its inmates became forgotten in due course, and, like the maiden, I was left all forlorn, but not for ever.

In the establishment that gives employment to your humble servant a man often used to talk about his birds, and this proved a very infectious subject to me, for I took the disease immediately.

Anxious Moments.

The first difficulty that arose was: what about the reception a feathered pet will receive at home by the head of the family? That was a "sticker" for me, but, acting on that not always advisable plan of "action first, thought afterwards," I speculated in buying a second-hand cage and a Linnet from the man of whom I took the "disease."

I threw in a little diplomacy, the diplomacy consisting in taking my newly-acquired treasure down to a relative's, while I paved the way at home, which I soon settled, to my great satisfaction.

Off I scuttled after my property, but found that the temporary trustee did not want to part with the bird. Anyhow, it was ultimately carried off by its proud owner, and installed in its future home, which, alas, it did not occupy for long, as it fell a victim to a choking fit caused by improper feeding on uncrushed hemp seed. I did not then take CAGE BIRDS. My bright little friend was soon succeeded by a Goldfinch mule, who, the first day I bought him, gave out a note that cheered my sorrowing heart, that had not forgotten its first loss.

After a time "Reggie," as the newcomer was aristocratically named, changed his quarters to a brand new cage—a change that was appreciated by him and me, as it was both larger and smarter. Well, the weeks flew by, till it suddenly entered my head to clean and enamel the old cage. When asked for what purpose, I replied that it was worth a trifle to anyone wanting a cage. When it was finished, I suddenly announced my intention of getting a Redpoll as a companion to the Mule.

The pair proved great chums, for when the cage doors were opened and they were put together it was to their mutual enjoyment, and when separated they would cling to the bars of their respective cages and call to each other. Only a few weeks elapsed this time, when my stock was augmented by three fresh arrivals, namely, a Chaffinch, a Greenfinch, and a Twite, which occupied a position between my two first birds in a large cage by themselves. But, as the cages of my two first were not alike and looked odd, I again speculated in purchasing a cage like the Mule's, into which the Redpoll was put.

By this time my collection began to look quite respectable, and I thought contentment would now be my lot. But I still coveted a Linnet, which soon after put in an appearance, and was added to the three last.

All went well for a time, until birdie nature began to assert itself in the struggle for supremacy amongst the occupants of the centre cage. This, I thought, was carried far enough, when I one day discovered the Twite hanging down, suspended by the tail from the beak of the Greenfinch. The Twite escaped, but left his tail behind him.

The Transgressor Dealt With.

This determined me to restore tranquility, which could not be effected otherwise than by removing the cause. But how? This was the difficulty. The only way was again to speculate, which I did, this time purchasing a still smarter cage, to which I transferred "Reggie," making its discarded cage the recipient of the unruly Greenfinch.

But still things did not prosper, for no sooner was the formidable antagonist of the Twite gone than he, in his turn, became the aggressor, and at every opportunity commenced a hectoring warfare on his two companions. This was eluded on the part of the Chaffinch, who gave way and kept the proper distance, but the Linnet would have none of it, and so these two kept up a warfare which increased in vehemence as roosting time approached in contesting who should have the best place.

Clearly another change was needed, which could be brought about in no other way than by trying if the Redpoll would prove more sociable than the Twite. Again an exchange was accomplished, which turned out satisfactory, as not a happier trio ever lived together.

In Favour of All Wire Cages.

Nothing more need be said concerning the cage accommodation, excepting that the cages are of the all-wire pattern, which I prefer, as the birds derive the full benefit of the light, no matter in what position the cages are put. The cages are usually hung in a row, the tops of which are about on a level with my head. This I think a good plan, as I have noticed that all birds seem startled at seeing anyone look up at them from a direct downward position, and besides, when on a level it enables one to win the confidence of the birds more easily. At the back of the cages runs a board covered with linoleum; this is better than the bare wallpaper, which they can tear, and, besides, when dirty it can be washed.

To improve the appearance, and at the same time make the surroundings look a bit natural to the birds, I procured some bulrushes, which according to my idea were artistically arranged between the cages. Then, with a piece of wood about six inches square, made to fit the oval top of my centre cage by means of a support at each end, I was able to have a fern over them. Finally, with the addition of a bunch of honesty each side of the said fern, and a bracket or two on the wall supporting plants, the general effect to me was a pleasing one.

Mr. C. A. House will judge at the show of the Liverpool B.B.A., Nov. 25.

Mr. A. K. Hunter, sec. Glasgow Queen's Park C.B.S., writes that the next monthly meeting will be held May 31, at 7.45, and not on May 24, as published.

We hear that Messrs. C. A. House and J. Wilson will judge the open F.F. show of the Barrow-in-Furness Society, July 8. Mr. House will take Canaries and Mr. Wilson the remainder.

The final arrangements for the Clapham and District C.B.A. ramble, writes Mr. A. R. Cor, were made at a meeting held at headquarters May 16. Friends who wish to join the party should note that train leaves Waterloo 9.55 on Sunday, May 28. Clapham Junction 10.5, Wimbledon 10.10. Book to Eppingham Junction. Lunch at 1.30, Railway Hotel, East Horsley.

We have received the rule book of the Midland Roller Canary Club. Besides the rules of the club it contains the balance-sheet for 1915, showing a cash balance in hand of nearly £15, the rules governing the competition for the challenge cup, the names and addresses of members, and the list of officers. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. W. Thomson, 9, Gorsebrook-rd., Wolverhampton.

Country Rambles.

The following rambles have been arranged and friends who may not be members of the respective societies will be welcome to join: Halifax O.S., May 20, to Crimsworth Dean, leader Mr. F. Greenwood. Meet, King Cross tram terminus at 2, or 2.30 train from Halifax to Hebden Bridge. A Bright Summer Visitor.

A correspondent to "The Field," writes that he saw a Golden Oriole at Salcombe, S. Devon, on April 20. The Golden Oriole is an annual visitor to our southern counties, although only in small numbers. It has nested in several places, and would no doubt soon be a familiar object of our countryside if only the "man with the gun" could be stopped from shooting at sight.

Ramsden's Pure Peppers.

I have at last been able to land about two-thirds of usual season's requirements, and believe I am the only importer that has been able to import any new season's pepper. Shipping restrictions make it next to impossible to secure any more. Every endeavour will be made to supply regular customers. Prices, 1 lb. 1s. 6d., 1 lb. 2s. 6d., 3 lbs. 6s. 6d., 5 lbs. 10s., original tins, 22 lbs. 37s. 6d. Hot at same prices. No new trade accounts can be opened this season. Intending customers must place their orders early.—J. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London.—(Adv.)

OBITUARY.

MR. WHITTINGHAM (Hoyland).

I regret to have to announce, writes Mr. F. Moore, sec., Wombwell B.F.A., the death of our member, Mr. Whittingham, who succumbed on August 25 to the effects of an operation. By his death the members have lost one who has always been interested in the welfare of the society, and who gained the confidence and respect of all with whom he came into contact, and on the unanimous resolution of the members I have sent to Mrs. Whittingham a letter expressing our fervent sympathy with her in her bereavement.

MR. FESTUS GIBBONS (Leigh).

I regret, writes Mr. R. Disley, Sec., Globe Inn Linnet Club, Leigh, to have to record the death of one of our most esteemed members, Mr. F. Gibbons, who passed away on May 4 after a serious illness. He was interred in Leigh Cemetery on May 8. Messrs. W. Cowburn, Disley, Jones, Holcroft, and Statham attended to see the last of our departed brother, and I am sure all friends around here who knew him will extend their sympathy to his widow on the sad loss she has been called upon to bear.

MR. ALEXANDER PRINGLE (Dunfermline).

I regret very much to inform you of the death of Mr. Alexander Pringle, one of our members, who was fatally injured at No. 11 Pitt. Lumphinnans, Cowdenbeath, on May 9, writes Mr. J. Kennoway, Sec., Dunfermline C.B.S. Mr. Pringle was of a quiet nature, with always a smile on his face, was a keen Border man, and will be missed very much by our members. He leaves a widow and two children to mourn his loss, and our heartfelt sympathy goes out to them in their bereavement.

A Chance for a Brainy Organizer.

Mr. Filby having ceased to act as organising secretary to our Wounded Soldiers' Schemes, there is a vacancy at our offices. We want someone with initiative and resolution to take in hand firstly, the duties of seeing that soldier fanciers discharged unfit after "doing their bit" for their country are helped as far as possible in making a fresh start in their hobby, and in the second place to give effect to the labours of the committee with a view of creating a supply of English-bred Canaries which shall be sufficient to satisfy the world's demand. Only when this has been done will it be found that there is no need for the enemy-bred songsters which have hitherto filled the bill. Applicants should write to Mr. F. Carl, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., asking for an appointment.

Owing to the shortage of paper, there will be no Second Edition this year of

The Price of Paper and the Price of Our Paper.

WE are inexpressibly pleased at the generous reception by our readers of the announcement made in last week's issue of the increased size and increased price of CAGE BIRDS. Every post has brought expressions of good will and promises of continued support.

We have not space for more than a few extracts from the large number of letters received, but we must thank our readers collectively for their helpful and encouraging letters.

We reiterate our assurance that the moment the difficulty in getting paper is lessened we shall revert to the normal price without detriment to the quantity or quality of the contents of our paper.

Readers may notice that there is just a slight difference this week in the actual size of our pages. It is due to the extraordinary difficulties we are experiencing in the getting of paper, and will, we trust, be only temporary. The difference is only in the margin at top and bottom; the space for matter remains the same.

WHAT OUR READERS THINK.

I think your decision to increase size of CAGE BIRDS, and advance the price to twopence is a wise one. CAGE BIRDS links up the Fancy and fanciers, and without it all would be confusion. W. FAIRHURST.
Ardwick.

I am sure no one will grumble at the extra penny being put on CAGE BIRDS. Personally, I think it has always been worth twopence; my only regret is that it is not published twice weekly. B. HUMPHRIES.
Eastbourne.

I am very pleased to see you have decided to increase the size of CAGE BIRDS, and charge an extra "brown." No one, I am sure, will grumble at the extra charge, and many will be pleased to see the increase in number of pages. W. LIDGETT.
Hon. Sec., Newark C.B.S.

I am glad you are raising the price of CAGE BIRDS, rather than close it down. We can't do without it, and I look forward to it every Friday morning. (HON. MRS.) GWENDOLEN BOURKE.
Taplow.

Just a word as to your raising the price of CAGE BIRDS. Surely no one can grumble at the double charge. Personally, I call it good value at twopence, as the information from well-known fanciers, irrespective of anything else, is well worth the extra copper; it is the means of teaching many readers the road to success. Wishing you and your paper all that is good. JAMES BOOTH.

Will you please accept my thanks for the delight I have had every Friday night for many years by your paper? I feel sure that no one will mind paying twopence per week. I shall continue taking it, and shall commence with the same variety upon my return from serving my country. S. T. JONES.
Lynton.

I was greatly interested in your article of last week's issue, under the heading of "The Price of Paper and the Price of Our Paper." Having been connected with the paper trade for a number of years, I quite agree with you as to the extortionately high prices of paper at the present time. I must say that I think your decision of increasing the number of pages and the price to twopence per week a very generous one, which should meet with the approval of the Fancy at large.

Granted that we are passing through the most serious time this country has even known. I feel sure that all readers of CAGE BIRDS will not object to the extra penny, so as to keep our paper going to the end of this terrible conflict, and "Till the Boys come Home." J. H. HALLIDAY.
Plymouth.

The size and matter of this week's CAGE BIRDS is very refreshing. I am confident that as Editor you have been experimenting in order to keep the cost of production within the possible sale at one penny with a margin of profit.

Permit me to compliment you on (1) courage—willing to face the increase of cost at a season when "adverts." are at their lowest; (2) sound common-sense—in believing the Fancy will gladly pay the extra penny if the paper will maintain its high level of the past, and keep itself to "birdy" matters.

I confess that after several years of reading CAGE BIRDS I have never read a copy so captivating as the May 13 issue. Old hands and new ones are catered for extremely well, and I am sure it would be nothing short of a calamity if your excellent paper were to go under.

There are men in the Fancy who could write to the advantage of us all, but unless you personally write them they are too reserved to push themselves.

We are all conscious of those who write to advertise themselves: there are others who leave their birds to do this business. I hope I may be among the latter, but if at any time you think my humble experience may be otherwise to the "Fancy," send a P.C., and I will endeavour to send you something interesting.

With a lift of the hat, a "Thank you, very much," and a smile which won't come off, in spite of the twopence. (REV.) C. B. JOLLIFFE.
Cardiff.

[We have written to our esteemed correspondent, thanking him for his good wishes and for his kind offer to contribute some of his experiences for the benefit of our readers in general, and we feel sure that the publication of the same will be anticipated with great interest.]

I notice in this week's CAGE BIRDS that you are going to increase the price of same to twopence, on account of the great price of paper, and that you greatly regret doing so. I myself am not in the least surprised, and my humble advice to all fanciers is to still continue to support you, and order a copy every week in advance, as I consider CAGE BIRDS is the foundation of our hobby. A Curious Theory.

A writer to the "Hampshire Chronicle" says:

"That the birds, the guests of summer, returned north from their southward migration to announce a heat wave that followed a solar disturbance is evident, although the sun at the time did not seem unusually spotted.

On April 20, when the thermometer continued lower than it had been at Christmas, a Swift arrived at Braishfield at noon in battle with the westerly breeze, and the next morning, when a compound sun spot loomed in view, the Cuckoo was calling loud and clear. Then the thermometer commenced to rise.

On the 27th, when the mercury in the thermometer had risen to summer temperature, the Chiff-Chaff was calling from a precociously leaving oak on Crook Hill, and then the two not very conspicuous sun spot groups were central on the visible disc of the sun. Afterwards more appeared."

The Parisian Frilled Canary.

By Mons. P. AUBEC (Paris).

This little-known variety of Canary is herein dealt with, not only from an exhibition point of view, but with an eye to commercial possibilities. The author points out how he made nearly 1100 profit from a single pair of birds in one season, and shows that English breeders could make large profits in cultivating a breed to which very little attention has hitherto been given in our country.

WHAT can be more interesting than the breeding of birds? Do they not bring with them the family happiness which is the charm of home life? Rich and poor, workers and those with leisure in abundance, all, or almost all, have birds, and everywhere where there is a bird there is gaiety.

One of the least-known varieties of Canaries, and, nevertheless, the most interesting from all points of view, value, beauty, and health, is the Parisian Frill Canary.

Very few people indeed know this bird, but in my long career as a bird lover I have tried breeding almost all kinds of birds, and I may state that not one has given me the satisfaction of the Parisian Frill. It is, therefore, of this comparatively unknown variety that I am going to speak. Why is this variety unknown? Why ought we to make it known?

The first question was asked me recently by a great lover of birds, an expert on Dutch ornithology, and author of numerous works on cage birds, and on Canaries in particular, Mr. Noorduy, who told me he had never seen such fine Parisian Frills in Holland as in France. "I am convinced that they have real qualities which deserve to be known," said he. "I know almost every kind of bird. I have visited England, Germany, Italy, Hungary, and Switzerland, and I have never seen birds in those countries like those you have in Paris. I am very pleased to have the opportunity of studying them, and will make them the subject of my next volume. These birds possess great value, not only on account of their size, but because of the length and fineness of their feathers. I am surprised that they are not more known; they certainly deserve to be."

A Mistaken Policy.

Indeed, these birds are not known for the simple reason that their owners do nothing, and have never done anything, to make them known. They are so jealous of their treasures that they allow no one to see them except at the shows. Nevertheless, they ought to be known and become popularised, if only on account of their market value and their beauty.

What other bird, six months after its first moult, can rival the beauty or price of the Parisian Frill? I know of none. Moreover, their hardiness and their vigour allow them to be treated as adult at this early age. It is at this time that they are most beautiful, provided that they have not had to go through the rigours of winter cold. Personally, I much prefer birds which have never seen a fire, and which have been reared in the ordinary temperature of the season.

About twenty years ago, when I started bird keeping, I bought two pairs of these birds, for which I paid £12 each, £24 in all, and they were far from the perfect specimens seen at the present time. Although a novice, and having my office work to do, I obtained from these four fifteen young ones, which I sold at the same price per bird as I had paid for their parents. I will leave you, dear reader, to make the calculation, and I say that every year the returns have been about the same; and I repeat I have always reared these birds in my spare time.

The Parisian Frill is held in high esteem in America, but in England at present it is appreciated by only a limited number of fanciers. If its production were seriously taken up by an expert breeder he could easily dispose of 700 or 800, and still keep sufficient for future breeding purposes.

The man who has a certain amount of leisure, and a connection, or who will advertise well to make such a connection, will be certain of a good profit, for breeders of this variety are limited. Satisfactory profits can certainly be made, and as the variety becomes better known the demand should increase.

£60 for a Frilled Canary.

From November to March there are a number of shows every year where a breeder can find customers. In London, Gaunt, Ostend, Brussels, as well as in Holland, the country of their origin, there are opportunities for their exhibition, and at such shows the Parisian Frill always attracts much attention, and there are very few birds which are not sold at a good price.

Let us quote some figures of sales that have taken place at various shows. These are actual figures quoted by people who have shown birds bought in Paris. Three birds, bought in Paris for £3 12s., £4 16s., and £5 10s. respectively, were shown in London at one of the Crystal Palace Shows. One was sold for £14, one for £19 10s., and the third was reserved for breeding purposes. A third prize bird, bought in Paris for £6, was resold in Brazil for £34; a first prize bird, at £8, was resold in Brazil for £40; and a winner of a special prize, which changed hands at £12, was resold in Chili for £60.

All these figures have been given us by people who have no object in falsifying the figures, therefore comment is needless. We will not speak of other birds sold to the same parties at equally good prices, although they had not been shown.

The above figures serve to show the success that can be obtained by the breeding of this charming little songster, even while devoting only three or four months of the year to the task, and taking only modest prizes. There are losses, of course, such as failures in hatching, and travelling expenses, etc., have, of course, to be considered, but in spite of all these there remains to the intelligent man a satisfactory profit. He will also render a real service to bird culture, and will have contributed, as far as he has been able, in the popularisation of this beautiful variety.

The Show Points of the Parisian Canary.

The following are the principal qualities which a good Parisian Frill should possess:—Shape and length of body, position, the length of the feathers, and their disposition. Colour takes second place; it may be yellow, white, yellow and green, or white and green, but in each colour the intensity or the disposition of the colours is of great importance.

The shape is difficult to define; it is harmonious above all, without angles, but with that particular slenderness which would seem to indicate extreme delicacy; and yet this bird is extremely hardy; the better the bird is the bigger it is. Length constitutes one of the dominant qualities; the average should be from eight to nine inches, but some will attain even ten inches from the tip of the beak to the tail. The long, curling feathers make it appear larger than it really is, but these feathers are one of the essential qualities.

The feathers of the back, from the shoulders to the rump, should be parted down the middle, falling equally on the two sides, and appearing to be supported by the feathers of the flanks. They are long, silky, and well curled, and appear to be growing the wrong way, forming on each side the two big rolls of feathers called fins or "nageoires"; the more accentuated these nageoires are, the greater is the value of the bird. The feathers on the chest should be nicely curled and growing forward, separated from the nageoires, and taking an opposite direction to all the other feathers. They should curve inwards, and leave in their centre a little hollow, ready to receive a tiny rosette.

Birds which possess all these qualities are very rare, and still more rare are the judges who are clever at discovering them. One must have a long experience to be able to see them all. What a drawback it is to a bird to be badly judged! But when a bird has the qualities given above the competition between fanciers for his possession is very keen, and sometimes fabulous prices are offered for it by those who wish to use it for breeding purposes.

French Frills Cheap.

Such a bird, however, has brothers and sisters, and one must not imagine that they are no good. Their face value is less, of course, but they may produce birds which are quite as handsome as their more favoured brother, and these birds may be obtained at a relatively low figure. It is not seldom that such a "Colosse," as Baron du Thiel called it, fetches as much as £16 or £20, and more, but its brothers and sisters may be purchased at from £4 to £6, which is very reasonable.

Persuaded by the eminent Dutch Canary author already mentioned, Mr. Noorduy, I have sent Parisian Frills to all the bird shows which I have heard of, Liège, Utrecht, Rotterdam, and The Hague, and everywhere I have obtained first prizes. One of them won third prize at the Crystal Palace Show of 1914, and I intended to have, at the exhibition of October, 1914, my revenge for this comparative defeat, but this exhibition fell through in consequence of the war, which was declared in August of that year.

Some Random Notes on British Birds, With Hints on Their Keeping By DALESMAN.

THE study of British birds, their habits, haunts, and requirements in confinement, is a hobby that should commend itself to everyone of average intelligence.

The birds of our islands can be roughly placed under the following three headings, viz.: Seed-eaters, insectivorous, and predatory. I propose to take mostly the commoner species among the first two of these, and only a few of the rarer varieties.

The Goldfinch is, perhaps, the most popular of all the British finches. His wonderful colour scheme, sprightly habits, and by no means insignificant song make him a favourite with all bird lovers. Unfortunately, in several counties, in spite of rigid protection, he is rapidly decreasing in numbers, owing to the turning into eligible building sites of the waste spaces once covered with thistles and other weeds whose seeds afforded him sustenance.

The nest of this species is a masterpiece of bird architecture, more often than not being placed in the fork of an apple or pear tree, and so decorated with moss and lichen as to be almost invisible a few yards away. His diet consists chiefly of thistle, teasel, hard heads, and dandelion heads. He is a bird that takes readily to cage life, and hence a favourite with the Mule and Hybrid breeder.

The Linnet is, perhaps, only second to Goldie as a general favourite; a bird of plain appearance to the uninitiated, but his rich nut brown back, beautifully pencilled breast, together with his graceful contour, stamp him as one of nature's beauties. He haunts the uplands during the breeding season, the nest often being found in a furze bush, and depends chiefly upon the different species of wild rape, such as charlock, ketlock, etc., for his food supply.

The familiar call of the Chaffinch and Greenfinch can be heard on every countryside. The former generally builds its nest in the fork of some high tree; the latter prefers a hawthorn hedgerow for his domestic duties, where the young brood are regaled with almost anything obtainable in the seed and insect world.

The Bullfinch, quite one of our feathered dandies, with his red breast, dignified black cap, and beautiful slate coloured back, is fairly common in most wooded districts, but sometimes gets into bad odour owing to his fondness for the buds of fruit trees. Some of the best authorities, however, are of the opinion that the buds he takes are infested with a grub, so that in reality he is a benefactor to the fruit grower rather than the pest his enemies would claim him to be.

are taken readily to cage life, and are easily catered for with a mixed seed diet, but should have a liberal supply of blackberries and privet berries during the moult in order to keep his breast colour up.

The Brambling, Crossbill, Siskin, and Snow Bunting are only winter visitors to our shores, but are often in evidence on the show bench.

The Hawfinch, the largest of our British finches, is more frequently met with in the south than in northern counties, but we have ample evidence that the species is gradually spreading northward. This bird is of no value as a songster, but is often met with on the show bench. Its diet in captivity should consist chiefly of sunflower, hemp, and Canary, with an occasional mealworm, and a feed of soaked green peas, of which he is passionately fond. By the way, mealworms are a grand conditioner for any of the Finch tribe that can be induced to take them.

Amongst the commoner of our Softbills we have the Skylark, Song Thrush, Mistle Thrush, Blackbird, Ring Ousel, Redwing, and Fieldfare (the two latter are only winter visitors).

The wants of the larger Softbills can be easily supplied by one or other of the advertised soft foods, together with a little grated raw carrot, and any live insect food obtainable according to the season. Their cages should be as roomy as the available space will allow, and should be cleaned out as often and as regularly as possible, otherwise they soon become objectionable.

The smaller Softbills are, perhaps, more difficult to cater for in captivity, but many of them make ideal pets if the owner has the time and inclination to attend to their needs. The Robin, the Wren, the different varieties of Wagtails and Tits amongst our native birds, and the Blackcap Warbler, Willow Warbler, Chiff Chaff, Wheatear, Stonechat, Whitethroat, and Redstart form a delightful company of summer visitors, each deserving a chapter unto itself.

Almost all British birds, seed-eaters and insectivorous alike, are partial to the various forms of small insect life that abound in the summer months, such as "green fly" (aphids), etc. In my back garden I have some twenty rose trees that yield a fair supply of green fly during the hot weather, much to the chagrin of the wife and the detriment of my crop of roses, but much, also, to the benefit of the birds. A sprig of rose bush smothered in green fly is a horror of horrors to the gardener, but a thing of joy and beauty for ever to the bird fancier.

The study of bird life and the keeping of feathered pets is essentially a working man's hobby, a home recreation, and a pursuit which may be jointly followed by husband and wife or father and son. Personally I have no greater pleasure than to take my two sons (aged 6 years and 4 years respectively) for a ramble, to point out the many wonders of nature, and to answer as far as my knowledge will allow their many amusing and sometimes awkward questions.

Organizing the Canary Trade.

Report of the Sub-Committee.

MORE HELP FOR WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

The sub-committee appointed by the general committee at the first meeting met at 154, Fleet Street, on May 15, and were greatly helped in their conclusions by the attendance of Mr. J. W. Norris, the hon. sec. of the British Roller C.C.

Each member had made full investigation into the cost of Canary breeding, both on the colony system and in breeding cages, and Mr. W. H. Vale read a short paper which we publish below.

Every detail of expense and output was carefully gone into, and the figures which were agreed to showed conclusively that Canary breeding could be made a profitable industry as well as an entertaining hobby, even though the selling price of the produce were reckoned at the amount which would readily be paid by the dealers. The estimates will be submitted to the consideration of the full committee at the next meeting, Monday, May 22, and we shall have more to say about them in our next issue.

WHAT HAS TO BE DONE.

A paper read by Mr. W. H. VALE, at a meeting of the sub-committee, May 15th.

THE breeding of a cheap class of Canary to take the place of the German-bred ones will necessitate the reconstruction of the average British fancier's ideas of the art of Canary Breeding, and the great point for those persons forming committees, or centres, for the purpose of educating the public on this matter must be the cheapening of production, and getting the greatest number of offspring from a given number of parents, rather than studying the show points and appearances of the birds, and only letting them breed and rear a few young each season.

To start at the beginning of the subject, it was, before the present war, quite possible for a cock Canary to be purchased in any of our market-places for from 5s. upwards, and hens from 1s. 6d. each, these birds being mostly "throw-outs" from the breeding-rooms of skilled fanciers, through being faulty in some or other show point, and although they were not bred to be sold at these figures, yet it should be possible, and it must become imperative to produce birds somewhere near these prices if we are going to compete with the Continental traffic in Canaries.

How this is to be done it is for those persons interested to find out, and explain to others, so that by the exchange of ideas the most economical ways of feeding and rearing the young, and getting them on the market as early as possible may be found.

Young German Canaries were imported to London and sold in couples at 3s. 6d. per couple, and these birds would be scarcely a month old. It is a well-known fact that the commoner the bird, the more prolific they are, and this must be the principle to work on, working on the basis of one cock to two hens, and reckoning each hen to have three nests of three youngsters (a very moderate estimate this) during the season, each nest consisting of one cock and two hens.

These must be produced for 5s. per nest, say, 2s. 6d. to 3s. for cost of feeding up to selling age, the remaining 2s. per pair being left to the breeder to cover cost of feeding and keeping the parent stock during the off-season.

The collecting of the young and despatching to various centres are other parts of the scheme, which could be carried out on co-operative principles, and are quite possible after once getting the idea a start.

TO SOLACE THE WOUNDED.

We have an offer from a lady sympathiser, Miss Wilkins, of Winchester, of a small aviary, one single breeding cage, and one double breeding cage. These must be applied for within a week by letter to 154, Fleet Street, and applicants must be prepared to pay carriage.

The Hon. Mrs. Bourke, whose kind offer to take charge of the birds of soldiers during the war was published in our paper when it was so generously made writes: "I am not joining in your scheme for providing Canaries for wounded soldiers as I am dealing direct with the men I come in contact with through taking care of their birds, and selling them on their behalf when desired. I am starting them again as they return discharged, and have just paid 25s. for a pair of Yorkshires. Most of the soldiers whose birds were left in my care were keepers of softbills, and are not home yet; worse luck for them."

Mr. W. Napper, whose letter appears in another column, sends a second contribution of six pence as a result of his further saving of seed as explained.

A treble gift comes from an old reader, Mr. E. J. Rippon, of Chelmsford. This generous fancier sends a cash subscription of a guinea, promises birds later, and offers a helping hand in the hobby of bird keeping to any wounded soldier in his district.

A Gift for a Convalescent Home.

We have to thank Mr. J. H. Halliday for his letter offering the complete parts of Cassell's "Canaries and Cage Birds." We shall be pleased to hear from the matron of any convalescent home who would like this work for the interest of the wounded inmates.

The three birds so generously offered by Mr. Crawhall are of a class which will appeal to advanced fanciers, and we should like to receive offers for any or all of these. They should raise quite a nice sum, which could be expended to great advantage in the purchase of cheaper Canaries which would give quite as much pleasure to a wounded soldier as would exhibition birds. They will go to the highest bid received up to Tuesday next, May 23, or to one of the more experienced of the wounded soldiers as may be decided. Bravo! Mr. Crawhall.

Thanks to Mr. Thornton.

SIR,—I thank you very much for your kind letter, and Mr. Thornton for the pair of birds, which I received safely on Sunday morning. I wish your fund, and your paper, CAGE BIRDS, every success. The shops here do not take long to sell out their weekly stock of CAGE BIRDS, and if you don't get it on Friday night you are lucky to get a copy on Saturday morning, unless you order it beforehand.

A Treble Gift—Money, Birds and Instruction.

SIR,—I enclose cheque for £1 1s. for the wounded soldiers' scheme. Later I may be able to spare a pair of my Norwich, but could not do so this season as I have paired up. I should also be pleased to give advice to anyone in my district if required. I wish the scheme every success.

E. J. RIPPON.

Chelmsford.

For a Soldier in Hospital.

SIR,—Seeing the letter from P. Brown (Bandsman), Orchard Hospital, Dartford, I visited the hospital, and found his to be a deserving case. He has seen seven years with the Colours, and five on reserve, and was invalided home from the Dardanelles. He will never be himself again. I will give him a double breeding cage, fitted complete, and all such information as lies in my power. I hope others will follow, and present him with a pair of birds. There are several wounded soldiers in this hospital trying their luck at breeding. I will also give help with birds later on.

S. RICHARDS.

Dartford.

The Cream of the Fanc.

SIR,—I have three spare hens which I am not breeding with this year, and will give them for you to sell for your Wounded Soldiers' Fund.

No. 1, variegated yellow, bought from Mr. Bailey, and bred from his celebrated uneven mark. She had a cross moult, and is hardly in condition yet. Three years old.

No. 2, clear buff, six years old, bought from Mr. H. W. Walsh, Halifax, for £4; she is mother and grandmother of many winners. My N.Y.C.C. Cup winner, 1914, was a grandson.

No. 3, clear buff, six years old, bought from Mr. F. Allen, Cleckheaton. Won eight firsts for Mr. Allen before I bought her, and has won several honours for me, including 1st Scottish National, Hull, and Whitehaven.

You may either give them to wounded soldiers, or sell them for the benefit of your fund for what they will bring.

THOS. C. CRAWHALL.

'STANDS LIKE A GUARDSMAN,'

A fine Yorkshire Canary, winner of 1st Prize, Special Prize, and Diploma of Merit at Holborn Hall Show for W. A. F. Stuart, Shepherd's Bush.

SIR,—I have "Cassell's Illustrated Canaries and Cage Birds," and I would willingly give it for any purpose that you may think of. It is in the original parts (52) mostly uncut, and I should think would be most suitable for a convalescent home for wounded soldiers. If you would kindly let me know I would forward them, carriage paid, to any address you think best.

J. H. HALLIDAY.

Prize Winners to be Sold for the Fund.

SIR,—Five shillings does not seem much for the Green Roller hen offered by Mr. Stephens, especially considering the object of the gift, as I presume she comes of a good stock. I do not particularly want the hen, but I will guarantee you 7s. 6d. for her. (Sell her for that, or more, if possible).

I shall be happy to send 10s. to the fund (which I now enclose), and will give two pairs of young Yorkshires from my prize birds at half the price at which Mr. R. L. Crisp or Mr. J. Robson may value them, at the Young Bird Show of the City and Suburban A.C.B., to be held July 5.

M. S. RUNCHMAN.

Bourne End.

More Money from Waste Seeds.

SIR,—I have again been saving the seed sweepings from my little lot of cages since I last wrote, sifting, washing, and drying the reclaimed seeds, as described in that letter. I am able, in consequence, to send you another sixpence herewith, and can, more than ever, see an upward tendency in this idea, presuming, that is, only 2,000 or 3,000 bird-keepers are doing the same thing. Please tell them not to hoard the sixpences, lest avarice seizes upon them, but to forward sixpence each right away, and again when an other lot of sweepings have been dressed, and so on. This way of working would, I am sure, in the aggregate, prove a regular and steady income towards your fund.

I take this opportunity of congratulating you upon the colour plate of Greenfinch Hybrids. When I wrote, in 1894, that "there is still a wide field for hybridisers" in my introduction to Vale's little book on hybrid birds, I certainly had little idea that such magnificent results were possible with the common Greenfinch.

W. NAPPER.

SIR,—Having read your scheme in CAGE BIRDS re Canaries for wounded soldiers, I write to say that if Bandsman Brown can wait until the end of the season I will make him a present of a pair of Norwich. If not, I will give the same to another wounded soldier who would be glad of same.

A. THORPE.

Going at any Advance on 7s. 6d.

We have received scores of offers of six shillings, and many of seven shillings, for the Roller hen kindly donated by Mr. Stephens. As these offers are so numerous, we beg those who so kindly made them to accept, collectively, our thanks. The highest tender received is a guarantee of 7s. 6d. from Mr. M. S. Runchman, and as Mr. Runchman says, "sell her for that, or more, if possible," the hen will go to the highest offer above 7s. 6d. received not later than Tuesday next, May 23.

We have to thank Mr. Runchman also for his generous contribution of 10s. to the fund, and for his further offer, which we publish this week. The idea is ingenious, as well as generous, and through it, not only should our fund benefit, but someone will have the chance of buying prize birds at a valuation placed upon them by independent experts.

The Postponement of Liverpool British Bird Show.

SIR,—Kindly allow me, through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to thank those fanciers who have written sympathising with me on the postponement of the show, also for their kind offers of support when things are normal. Mr. Gomersall, of Buxton, has sent me 5s. towards the initial expenses incurred, and to him also I beg to offer thanks.

J. W. METCALFE.

Southampton Secretary Off to the War.

SIR,—I should feel obliged if you will kindly announce in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, that I have joined the Army, and, therefore, am unable to continue as secretary of the Southampton C.B.S. Mr. G. J. Slade, of 34, Milton Road, Southampton, will take over the reins for the present, and all correspondence should be addressed to him. I desire to express my thanks to all the members of the society for the assistance they have rendered me during my term of office, also to yourself for the courtesy you have extended to me in the use of the columns of CAGE BIRDS.

A Talking Budgerigar.

SIR,—I have been a constant reader of CAGE BIRDS for the last two years, and seeing an article, a short time ago, on "A Talking Budgerigar," I may mention that I possess one, a very fine green cock, which I took from the nest when about a fortnight old, and hand-reared. It is now about eight months old, and begins to talk very distinctly; it says, "Pretty John," "Pretty boy, John," "How do you do?," "Pretty little dear bird." It imitates the song of a Canary most correctly, the reason for this being that a Canary was kept near it. It flies from the cage to one's finger, and will sit on one's head and shoulders. The fact may be of interest to some of your readers, for a bird of this description is one of the most delightful pets imaginable.

C. W. W. CHURCH.

An Exemplary Sire.

SIR,—In answer to T. Williams, I might say that I have a Yorkshire cock Canary that I have bred with for the past three seasons, and every time the hen comes off to feed he sits on the eggs, and will not come off until they have had a few words, then she puts the "Half Nelson" on him, and off he comes.

B. HUMPHRIES.

SIR,—I feel I should like to write you in reference to the letter, re "An Exemplary Sire," in this week's CAGE BIRDS. I have a Green Roller cock, mated up to a Roller hen. She hatched five young ones on Tuesday last. The cock has been with her during the whole time of incubation, and he has daily taken his turn to sit on the eggs, so as to allow her ladyship a flutter round and stretch herself out. When she felt disposed to return, he would quietly leave the nest for her to resume her maternal duties. Now the young ones are hatched he is as enthusiastic as his wife in feeding the offspring, continually on the lookout if their babies are asking to be fed. Both of them stand on the nest side and quietly disgorge the egg into the young ones beaks. JAMES BOOTH.

Two Canaries from One Egg—Both Doing Well.

SIR,—I have hatched two birds from one egg. On Thursday last when I went into my bird room I saw a Norwich hen was hatching eggs, and I gave her some egg food. She came off the nest, and I saw that two birds had hatched, and that the third egg was hatching. On looking closer I was surprised to see a head coming through each end of the egg, so I took the nest out, and with the quill of a tail feather helped to break the shell, as the bodies seemed to be jammed in the centre. They hatched all right, and are both doing well. The hen only laid three eggs and hatched four birds.

A sister of that hen also laid three eggs and two of them hatched. I took the third egg out, and with my penknife cut the top off the thick end, and was surprised to find two birds in this egg also; they were ready to hatch, but both heads were at the thick end; they seem to have jammed in the shell and died. I showed this egg to some of the bird breeders, and also to some of the prominent men of the place.

I have bred five pairs of Scotch Fanciers, eight Norwich pairs, and five mule pairs, and have got, at present six young Fanciers and 17 Norwich. I have only hatched about half of the fertile eggs, owing, I think, to the cold weather that we are getting here. I have been a reader of CAGE BIRDS for about six years, and have most of CAGE BIRDS' colour plates in my bird room on the wall.

JOHN FULTON.

A Famous Greenfinch Dead.

SIR,—Many of my fancier friends will be sorry to hear I have lost my Greenfinch, "Northern Star"; he died very suddenly on May 4. It was like parting with an old and very dear friend, for I am an exhibitor, but, first and foremost, a birdlover. I have no doubt it would surprise many if they only knew the strong attachment that can grow up between a fancier and his birds.

An Open Young Bird Show for Wales.

SIR,—I have to thank Mr. J. S. Jones for the kind offer of the special for best Yorkshire shown by a member. Re the last part of Mr. J. S. Jones' letter, he has only written me when he wanted hen Canaries in exchange for British birds, and I sent him one of the best hens I had. If he were still a member and wanted to know anything special regarding the Society's doings, I would have made an effort to write him.

Nine Border Canary Eggs in a Clutch.

SIR,—I am a beginner in the Canary world as a fancier, this being only my second year, but I have had a very remarkable clutch of eggs from a Border hen. She has laid nine eggs. I am told this is a record clutch, and as I am a novice I should like to know if it is so. Breeders of Borders may think, as I did, seven or eight was a record lay, and I could hardly believe my own eyes when I saw nine in the nest. I am hoping to figure as a prize winner in the shows a little later on, as I am breeding only from good-class birds.

Young Bird Show for Swansea and 20 Miles Round.

SIR,—The Swansea C.B.A. intend holding a young bird show on the second Saturday in July, open to any club members within a radius of 20 miles. Prize money on the sliding scale, entrance fee 6d. per cage. Will secs. within the radius oblige by applying for schedules and full particulars to I. H. Ford, 83, Norfolk Road, Swansea? A hearty invitation to attend our next meeting, May 20, or any other meeting, is given to secs. or members of any club within the radius. We hold our meetings fortnightly at the Elysium, High Street.

"Magic" Canary Eggs.

SIR,—On reading the correspondence pages of your helpful paper, CAGE BIRDS, I was agreeably surprised to see Mr. Jackson's letter, as only last Sunday, May 7, I took an egg from a Yorkshire hen that had been sat on for 17 days. I placed it in a window bottom, and was surprised to see it balance itself on the narrow end. It was one of four, the other three having hatched. I expected, on breaking it, to find a dead youngster, but no; all the substance had gone to the narrow end, more than half the shell being empty.

B. H. LIVESLEY.

[It is, of course, easy to understand that an egg that had been dried up during 17 days' incubation, would stand on the end at which the dried contents had gathered, but the egg mentioned in our issue of May 13 had only been incubated seven days, so the same explanation would scarcely apply.—EDITOR.]

How to Make Them.

SIR,—Re the above in your correspondence columns, I have an egg that stands on end, and, place it how I will, it stands on end, but the reason is simple; the whole of the egg inside the shell has dried up and has settled in the small end of the egg. The next added eggs any fancier may have, if he stands them on their small end in the window the sun will dry them up, and he will have more magic eggs.

A. H. C. LEGG.

SIR,—The type of egg described by your correspondent is not in the least rare. Instead of being fertile, as your correspondent imagines, he will find they have the contents dried up into a small hard mass, which has retreated to the small end of the egg, and thereby transferred practically all the weight of the egg to a focus at the small end of the egg, which causes the egg to appear to stand up end-wise by the force of gravity. It is a moot question whether such eggs are ever fertile, but certainly they can never hatch. The most uncommon experience I ever had with this type of egg was finding a nest of the Hedge Accentor, apparently hard set, with the hen assiduously sitting on a clutch of four eggs, every one of which was of this type. That was getting on for forty years ago, so our wild birds have long been addicted to this common trouble of the Canary fancier.

Out-Climaxing the "Climax."

SIR,—I notice in "Twitterings" of this week's issue of CAGE BIRDS a remark made by Mr. McMillan, re my drying cage, the Climax published in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1916. I much appreciate the remarks he has made, as very often two heads are better than one, and progress is often made through fair criticism. It is a great pity that a few more of us do not express our opinions on birdy matters in general; we should all be the wiser for it.

I may say that when I made the Climax, I studied every detail minutely, and I thought of a door at the side, as suggested by Mr. McMillan, but I thought it would greatly weaken the side of the cage, besides being of very little advantage. When the cage is in use for drying the wire door should be up so as not to open the front more than sufficiently to allow one's hand to go through easily, so as to place the bird upon the bottom. Another item is that when the cage is in use as a spray cage the water would have a tendency to find its way through the crevices of a door at the side, therefore it would be a disadvantage rather than otherwise. One word re your ANNUAL, quite apart from my article on the "Climax." The other articles are fine, and very instructive. No fancier who earnestly intends to be a successful breeder and exhibitor should on any account be without one.

Four Eggs in Three Days.

SIR,—I am, like Mr. Jones, of Canada, a novice in the Canary breeding hobby, and also, as in his case, one of my Border Fancy hens laid two eggs in less than 24 hours.

She is a third season's hen, and I introduced the cock to her on April 4; on April 10, when I looked at the birds, at 6.30 in the morning, there were two eggs in the nest. I know for a fact that she had not laid at 4.30 on the afternoon of April 9.

She laid four eggs, and brought off three young; the fourth egg was clear. The three chicks are now eighteen days old, and are on the point of leaving the nest. In this, my first season, I have six young out of four nests. One nest of four eggs was unfertile, one hen crushed two chicks the day after they were hatched, and another hen picked two chicks out of the eggs prematurely.

CICELY M. LANDON.

The Constituent Parts of Bird Seed.

SIR,—Replying to your correspondent, re analysis of seeds contained in my article, published in CAGE BIRDS, I would say that the difference in the total of any analysis mentioned and the full hundred points is accounted for by the husk and other indigestible fibre, which, although forming part of the original bulk, is of no value as food. There must naturally be a certain amount of waste, and I trust this simple explanation will satisfy your correspondent.

I might point out that in quoting the analysis of any feeding stuffs it is not usual to account for the full hundred points, but to state the proportions of those constituents which are of value. Take, for instance, the analysis of any horticultural fertilizer, which very often is found to account for only 40 per cent. or 45 per cent. of the bulk, and gives no clue whatever as to the nature of the balance. Yet such an analysis is "guaranteed to meet the requirements of the Fertilizers and Feeding Stuffs Act, 1906," and is accepted by the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries as being quite sufficient, although quoting only 40 per cent. of the bulk.

I should like to say that I deeply appreciate the letter of your correspondent, as it proves he has taken sufficient interest in the matter to make the enquiry. I am pleased to offer the above explanation, and shall be glad to answer any further enquiries to the best of my ability.

Further to my article I should like to add an important point re maw seed. Some fanciers are afraid to use this seed in quantity, being under the impression that it contains the same narcotic properties as opium, which is obtained from the same plant. However, it is an established fact that maw seed contains none whatever of the narcotic principle of the plant from which it is obtained, and can therefore be used with perfect safety.

A. G. HUNT.

"Cuckoo, Cuckoo."

SIR,—It seems a pity that two old men, both apparently fond of bird life, and with one foot in the grave, so to speak, are unable to discuss the common Cuckoo in cold type without acrimony. If Mr. Craig had complained of my remarks, as I am constrained to complain of his, I could find pleasure in admitting frankly any mistake or misbehaviour I may have been guilty of.

Ever since this blooming interloping Cuckoo mix up was forced into the song of the Canary discussion, Mr. Craig has done his best to remind me that I am all behind in the matter, etc.

The fact is he wants to make out that the "chucking" out by the nestling Cuckoo was entirely his own discovery, and is wild because I have been able to prove otherwise. Just as I finished in the dispute over "the song of the Canary," so I finish on the Cuckoo. What I have said, I have said. There are still many things about Cuckoos not generally known. Mr. Craig could have told us that the common Cuckoo is found in nearly every part of Europe and Northern Asia, and that its winter home is Africa, etc. He could also have said something of the many other kinds of Cuckoos in the world, and especially of the American Cuckoos, which build their own nests, affectionately rearing their own young. Mr. Craig is evidently not so far ahead after all.

Will Mules Breed?

SIR,—I should be pleased if any readers of CAGE BIRDS could inform me if it is possible to breed from a Goldfinch-Canary Mule hen, as I heard of a man at Lincoln pairing a Mule hen with a cock Greenfinch cock, and getting three young, but I doubt it. I should be pleased to hear if any other fancier has ever heard of a similar occurrence.

E. FORRESTER.

[This is a question which is continually cropping up, and there are some who say it is certainly "possible" to get young from a hen Mule. While there would seem to be a stray case here and there which is authenticated, yet by far the greater number of reputed hen "Mules" which have shown fertility have been simply Canaries more or less heavily marked. It is quite a common supposition among those with little experience that all Canaries are entirely yellow, and that any bird with dark markings is a "Mule."—EDITOR, CAGE BIRDS.]

Goldfinches and Hemp Seed.

Eleven Years on Hemp Seed Alone.

SIR,—Whilst visiting the neighbourhood of Matlock at Easter time I learned about the death of a remarkable Goldfinch which occurred three weeks previous to my visit. Having seen the bird before, in August of last year, I was greatly interested in it, and on meeting the owner during my recent visit, almost my first inquiry was about his one and only feathered pet. Mr. Wain bought this bird eleven years ago from a neighbour who caught it, with others, and, being no fancier, he fed it according to his own judgment, and during the whole period of eleven years gave it nothing but plain hemp seed. The bird was always in the best of health, and was an incessant songster. I have often noticed the controversies in your valuable paper concerning the keeping and feeding of the Goldfinch, who has such a way of dying suddenly at an early age, and I would like to know what other readers think of this particular kind of feeding. I have heard it said that hemp seed is fattening, but this bird was never affected that way.

A Word for Softbill Keeping.

SIR,—I must congratulate your artist, Mr. H. Goodchild for his excellent portrait of my Yellow Wagtail in last week's issue of CAGE BIRDS, it seemed so natural and life-like. The keeping of Softbills has always been a strong fascination of mine, and as a hobby I consider it both interesting and instructive, especially the keeping of the graceful family of Wagtails. Though we are as yet in a minority as compared with Canary breeders, I hope the day is not far distant when we shall at least see the Softbill classes at our shows come up to the level of our Hardbills. Some doubt existed last season as to my Wagtail being a hen, as it was then in its winter plumage, but to the initiated it was certainly a cock. It is one of the finest of the many yellows I have ever possessed, and should I have the good fortune to moult him again, I expect he will reward me with some more "red cards." I notice you had R. J. Robertson, Glasgow, instead of Aberdeen, a comp's error, no doubt, and not a very serious mistake in such a fine issue. Wishing your paper every success.

R. J. ROBERTSON.

New Sec. for Border City O.S.

SIR,—I have reluctantly been compelled to give up the secretaryship of the Border City (Carlisle) O.S., after a tenure of office since its inauguration, and communications in future should be addressed to Mr. Geo. Davidson, 7, London Road Terrace, Carlisle, who has consented to act as secretary until such times as I or someone else will be able to take up the reins of office again.

The annual show of the Society has now become one of the principal shows of the country, and every endeavour should be made to carry on as in the past. This can only be done with the full co-ordination of all the local fanciers, working in harmony, and as the Border City O.S. is the only "live" society in the district at present, and gives a good classification and nine silver cups for open competition, it should become as great in the north as the big London societies are in the south.

At present thousands of men have shifted to the neighbourhood of Carlisle from all parts of the United Kingdom, and amongst this great mass of workers must be many in the fancy. In fact, I, personally, have been in touch with fanciers from Leeds, Bradford, London, Cheltenham, Glasgow, and other places, and I am sure, if any help is needed by any of them to keep their hobby going in this locality, if they communicate with Mr. Geo. Davidson or myself we will be pleased to help them to the best of our ability. I am sure also the members will be pleased to welcome any of them at their meetings, the second Wednesday of each month, at the King's Head, Fisher Street, Carlisle.

I thank you for past favours, and wish all past supporters of our shows success in the present breeding season.

THE DELIGHTS OF CANARY BREEDING.

By
M^{rs} A. HINTON.

How a lady bred prize-winning Border Fancy Canaries and made a start in Mule Breeding.

I AM writing as the result of about nine years' experience and accumulated observations in the delightful hobby of breeding and rearing the Canary. This pursuit has been one of my labours of leisure for the above period.

A friend presented me, in the first instance, with a pair of Norwich Canaries, telling me that the cock was upwards of ten years of age. I named him "Old Grandpapa," and that season paired him to the hen, who was said to be some years younger. She went by the name of "Little Muddie."

In every way he was a model father, and that summer they brought up several birds. To my grief, Little Muddie died in the autumn. The aged couple were so devoted to each other that, the day before she died, Muddie rested her head on "Grandpapa's" breast for several hours.

The following year I mated "Grandpapa" with a large green hen, named Angélique, after a French lady who presented her to me. They had three lovely birds. "Josie" was one, a large green cock, who now, at the age of seven years, is looked upon as the head of the large family which originated from "Grandpapa."

There were two daughters—"Ann," who died, and "Elizabeth," who paired the following year with a yellow cock, and has brought up large families.

When a Border is not a Border.

"Grandpapa" had a third wife, a bright little London Fancy, and to her descendants the honour of some good Border Fancies are due, a great-great-grandchild having taken a first and special at a show. "Grandpapa" lived to be twenty-two years of age, and about fifty of his descendants are now living. A genealogical tree is kept, and a diary of all their proceedings, by which means I am certain from what nest the birds proceed, as well as of their age and parentage.

The birds are for the most part inbred; each is given a name and is known by it. The old stock are always kept, but the young ones of each season are occasionally parted with; so that they may have the credit of saying that, to some extent, they are self-supporting.

They generally breed between thirty and forty young in the season, mostly in the ordinary breeding cages; but three very tame sets are allowed to use the large aviary with the partitions between. These sets have wire baskets hung on, and felt nests inside, a little moss being given as an inducement to build.

The eggs are never removed, as I think the hens must feel some satisfaction to see them come one after the other. It is my aim to make them happy and as natural in their habits as possible. My hens are only allowed two broods in the year; if their powers are taxed too heavily they seldom live very long.

The trays during the breeding season are taken out three times a week, and when the young are a fortnight old they are removed into a clean nest in the nursery division, so that the hen should not pull their feathers out, as some mothers are inclined to do. I am confident that the tamer the birds are the more successful are the results.

Likes and Dislikes.

A careless father is paired the following year to an ideal mother, and vice versa with the hens. It is best to give a proved hen to a young cock. They are not allowed to choose their own mates; so in order not to hurt their feelings they are separated before any attachment springs up among them. I give one instance of this. "Grandpapa's" son (from his third wife), named "Wee Tim," was left in the aviary on account of his being a very gentle bird; he made choice of a large hen, and was allowed that spring to mate with her.

The following season no inducements would get him to pair, and I found out the reason later on—his favourite was in the next breeding cage, and she continually cried to him. I moved him into another room, but he moped, and that year he would not pair. The next year a wife was selected as like his favourite as possible, and they did very well.

Some Canaries have so great an antipathy to each other that they cannot be brought to pair, and when this is seen they should be separated at once. If our birds are familiar with us as they should be, they will exhibit their confidence in our sympathy and make their wants known to us; I have always found that if there is anything amiss with their nestlings they attract my attention by signals that cannot be mistaken. My hens are fond of pulling my hair as the spring comes on, and then I either give them mates from my aviary or part with them to friends.

I am convinced that success depends upon perfect cleanliness, and great attention in all respects to their health. Mine are constantly under supervision, and the first signs of drooping leads to their removal from the large aviary to a small cage. I have had a few cases of asthma, and except in a very bad case have found most beneficial results from the cure prescribed in CAGE BIRDS, which I have taken regularly for years.

I am seldom troubled with the red mite—only a few in the breeding season. I resort to a lump of camphor dissolved in methylated spirit, and brush this well all round the woodwork. As I have before said, I am an advocate of perfect cleanliness, air and exercise.

I find my pets are very docile, and enjoy a fly out. I never catch them, but throw into the aviary some favourite seed, niga, or a very few hems, and they make a rush for that at once. They have a little nourishing food during their moult—bread and milk, with maw seed once a day.

Their ordinary food is plain Canary and Rape. When setting I give chopped egg with bread crumbs three times a day, and some put in their tin the last thing at night, as I find they feed their young in the early hours of the morning.

They have green food, if possible, two or three times a week, groundsel, lettuce, or watercress. It is better for them to have a little constantly, than a great quantity now and then, as they are apt to eat over-eagerly of it when given seldom. Variety in their food is necessary for all birds.

I collect for winter consumption plantain for the Canaries, thistle and knapweed for my Goldfinch and Linnet, and privet berries for the Bullfinch. These dainties they welcome, and I am sure they help to keep them in health with seed good and sound; birds not exposed to draughts or sudden changes of temperature rarely have much the matter with them. A bag of hemp is always kept for them to eat from the hand, which means that amongst so many they only get about six hemp seeds each a day. I believe the Canary is never fat if in health, as his constant singing and activity keeps him in condition.

They have a bath every morning, cold in the summer, tepid in the winter. I give them dried sea-sand, because I think that the saline properties are good, and instead of giving them sugar they have pieces of cuttle-fish hung in the aviary.

As the birds get into years they fly on my hand and take seeds from my mouth; sometimes some of the younger ones will follow their elders in doing the same.

I must tell you a little about a very tame bird, a grandson of old "Grandpapa." He is named Punchie, and is quite the children's friend; as he has an inordinate love for any dainty I can always get him to fly on their hands for a tit-bit.

He is a great lazy fellow, and has only paired twice, and each time had one large bird. His wife, "Myrtle," often would watch him eat the egg-food, and as he did not come up to feed her would fly down to him in quite a temper and send him up to the nest. He is allowed a cage to himself; of a morning he will fly on to my cup, waiting patiently for a piece of soaked bread.

It may interest readers to know what results from breeding came from a few of the families, so I will give you those of two seasons from old "Grandpapa's" eldest son by his second wife.

Joseph, the green cock, was paired to his half-sister Coquette, a bright little buff hen with evenly marked wings. They had five little ones—Bartie, a fine, deep yellow-splashed cock; Pretoria, a green cock; and three clear hens.

The second season "Joseph" was wed to a large green hen called Shamrock, and the result was a large clear-yellow cock, called Barney O'Hea, and two green hens.

I keep a diary of the results of each year's breeding, and find that, generally speaking, the finest harmony is produced from opposition. I mean by this, that to breed a fine-coloured yellow bird without a spot or splash one should select a buff hen from a clear stock and mate her with a clear yellow cock. To get fine-coloured pied birds, select a yellow cock and mate with a rich green hen.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

The Roller Canary: Its Feeding and Training for Song.

By JESSIE LAWSON (Preston.)

THE Hartz Mountain Roller Canary, as its name implies, is of German origin, and previous to the war these Canaries were exported in large numbers to England, as the demand for them was very great, on account of their beautiful voices. In appearance they are small and insignificant, resembling the ordinary common Canary of long ago. Their colour is either yellow, brown, or green and yellow variegated. Now, of course, the exportation has ceased, owing to the war, as, naturally, one is not allowed to, or would not wish to trade with, the enemy.

Therefore it is expedient for us to breed good "Rollers," and at the present time Roller breeding is the most important topic among bird fanciers. What we aim at is perfection and purity of song, which is their great charm.

A good Roller should do nothing but roll, and I will enumerate the best rolls, some of which a good Roller always has.

The "water roll," "lisping roll," "whizzing roll," "bass roll," "hollow roll," "bell roll," "gurgling roll," "glucking roll," also there are various other rolls and whistles.

Their song should always be quiet and subdued, with no shrill notes. They should have good length and variety of notes; one should be able to count up to 80 or 100 during their song. If a Roller "chops" it is of no value.

A good singer can be purchased at £1 or 30s. Before the war I bought one at 15s. which turned out to be a bargain; it sang most beautifully until it was taken with paralysis, and even now it sings a little.

They are as a rule more delicate than other birds, and ought to be kept in an even temperature during the winter especially, but they do not need any artificial heat if they are covered up at night.

Their food should be two parts of Canary seed to one part of summer rape, with a little egg food occasionally, and green food frequently. A lump of sugar covered with glycerine is very beneficial to their voice.

Bird rearing is a delightful and interesting hobby for anyone; it teaches us all to have patience and perseverance. Now is the time for young birds to be hatching, for May birds are the best, and the bad weather which continued so late this year has delayed the nestlings.

The feeding of them is of vital importance, for on their feeding in the early stage depends their health in the future. Very often a bird improperly fed when young appears quite healthy and well until about nine months old, when it develops some incurable complaint, such as paralysis or consumption. Either of the following diets are excellent.

Egg and biscuit mixture: Take half the yolk of a hard-boiled egg, put it through a zinc sieve, and mix with it an Osborne biscuit, or stale bread crumbs. When the young are three days old, add a little of the white, and increase the quantity of biscuit until equal. Give it to the birds fresh daily. This quantity will feed several nests of young birds.

Bread and milk: Take a stale piece of bread and pour enough boiling water over it to moisten it, also a few drops of boiling milk, and sprinkle on a little raw sugar. Spratts canary food, bought in 3d. tins, and requiring mixing with water, is given in addition to the bread and milk.

Green food should be given when the nestlings are three days old, and the best is watercress, or, when this is not procurable, dandelion leaves. Lettuce contains too much opium. Always wash and dry before giving the green food.

Some people believe in rearing their birds on dry biscuits, which, naturally, do not contain enough fat to keep the cold out of the young birds. A lady I know told me she was bringing up her young birds (which were in an aviary) on a cream cracker, so I told her my opinion, with which she disagreed, and said they were doing very well indeed.

But a week later found them dead; the weather had been too cold for them, she said, but the birds had no chance to stand a little cold, because they had not been given any heat-producing food.

"COCKIE."

A Story of a Sulphur-crested Cockatoo.

By MISS DYDDGU HAMILTON.

I AM a patient, law-abiding citizen, so much so, indeed, that rather than turn active, or even passive, resister, I have for years past paid double education rates, and submitted myself to re-vaccination no less than seven times during the small-pox scares. Even now I sit placidly writing by dim candle light while our all-powerful Borough Council, attempting to "convert" the electric current, succeeds only, judging by the profane language I hear, in unconvincing the ratepayers of this district.

Cockie and the I.R.D.

When, therefore, some little time ago, my servant announced that a young man from the Inland Revenue Department had called for the third time about the licence, and that he threatened to "take proceedings" immediately if I declined to see him, reluctantly I took my feet off the fender and descended to the front door, where awaited me a meek-looking young man, hat in hand.

"Dog licences should be taken out on the 1st of January," were the unexpected words with which he greeted me. "Indeed!" I answered vaguely, wondering what he could be driving at. "It is now the 23rd of March," he continued, eyeing me sternly. "I believe so," I said, after a hasty glance at the newspaper I held.

"And you have no dog licence," he pursued, looking at me, as I thought, more and more threateningly. "Why should I have one? I am not a dog," I replied, beginning to wonder where this peculiar young man had escaped from. "But you keep a dog, and—" "Not since I left Taviton Street," I hastened to assure him. "My dog died there, and he is buried in the garden."

The Officer of Excise smiled an incredulous smile as he observed: "Dead dogs don't bark."

"No, indeed—at least, I have never heard one," I answered as soothingly as I knew how, for by this time I felt sure that the poor man's brain had been turned by the death of some favourite dog, whose spookish bark still haunted him.

But my remark had no soothing effect. On the contrary, the meek youth's eyes positively flashed as he went on: "The constable on duty here tells me that he constantly hears a dog barking in this house both by day and night. The penalty for not taking out a licence is £5, and if—"

The Member for Barkshire.

But, as he raised his voice in anger, he was interrupted. "Bow wow wow, bow wow"—such a fierce and noisy barking, and only too obviously proceeding from my dining-room.

With an air of triumph the irate Inland Revenue officer pushed open the door and looked in, whilst I, grasping the true inwardness of the situation at last, sank down on the stairs, overcome with laughter.

For the supposed dog, whose unlicensed barking had caused such commotion at Somerset House, was no less a person than "Cockie," a large White Cockatoo, whose powers of talking and imitation are quite remarkable even in a bird of his talented kind.

The Greater Sulphur-crested Cockatoo is a native of Australia. He is a bird of great wings and strong flight, and, as one saith, "he hath the voice of a fiend, for he hath an horrible voice."

That is when he gives vent to his natural yells and screams, or to the imitation of railway whistles and motor hooters, at which feats he is an adept. Otherwise he speaks in a more human, less Punch-and-Judy-like voice than that of either the Grey Parrot or the Green—his chief rivals in popular favour.

The Grey Parrot excels the Cockatoo in the number and variety of the sentences he can remember and repeat, while the Green Amazon beats him at laughing, crying, and the mimicking of conversations between two different persons—a man and woman, or woman and child, the bird speaking in the voice of each alternately. The Cockatoo is more playful, more intelligent, and much more excitable than any Parrot.

Not Loved at Home.

In his own country the Great Sulphur Crest is an outlaw, and is granted no protection, not even in the breeding season, on account of the terrible havoc he commits among the crops of maize, which he devours with equal gusto whether it be freshly sown and sprouting or ripening in the ear.

He is a bird very commonly seen in England. Being beautiful, hardy, and long-lived, he is largely and frequently imported, and is therefore cheap. But the great number of these birds presented by their owners to the Zoological Gardens and other public institutions testifies to the fact that they are found to be too big and far too noisy to be kept as pets in private dwelling-houses.

Cockie was never really my bird, though he lived in my house for over a year, and when I first saw him I thought that not even a white-robed angel could appear more glorious to look upon than this snowy beauty.

However, I was not very long in discovering that if he did indeed bear any relation to an angel it could only be a fallen one, though for many weeks his doting mistress could see no fault in him, and would hear no word against him, so that I had to bear my sorrows in silence.

Cockie began his misdeeds on the Sunday after his arrival. With his huge and powerful beak he forcibly bent apart the iron bars of his cage, and twisted and tore them out until he had made a space large enough to squeeze his great body through. Then, with a shriek, and a hideous burst of laughter, he flew round and round the room, finally alighting on the chandelier, from whence he sent down showers of black dust upon the spotless cloth and smoking joint.

In vain we tried to remove him. "J'y suis, j'y reste," he proclaimed with beak and claws. There was nothing for it but to wheel the dinner table through the folding doors into the next room, leaving Cockie in possession of his coign of vantage.

At length a practised hand succeeded in catching him, and in tethering him by the leg to a stand, and then, for a while, we had peace. Cockie preferred the stand to his old cage, and on it he performed the most wonderful gymnastics and dances, spreading his great white wings and waltzing round as gracefully as any skirt dancer, or twirling head over heels round the perch with amazing rapidity.

A Sense of Humour.

It is a moot point whether Parrots and their kind understand the meaning of the phrases they repeat. I have no doubt whatever that Cockie comprehended the drift of his remarks, and that he had a keen sense of humour.

On one occasion, when an enthusiastic advocate of teetotalism had been holding forth to me for a somewhat lengthy period, and I had begun to fear that I should soon be unable any longer to stifle the yawn I felt imminent. Cockie, who, contrary to his usual custom, had been very still during the interview, suddenly called out, in tones clear and distinct as those of the human voice: "Good-bye; I must be off now to the public-house—the public-house." He repeated the last words twice over, so that there could be no shadow of doubt as to what he said. Never, before or since, has he been known to pronounce those words.

When the chimney caught fire in the room where Cockie's cage stood, the roar of the draught, and the blazing masses of soot falling on to the tiled hearth terrified Cockie, and he ran up and down his cage, calling out, "What's the matter? What's the matter? What is it all about?"

On another occasion I had had an urgent call to an outside case in the hours when I should have been found in my own consulting room. On my return my housekeeper—a kindly old soul, who had taken a warm interest in all my doings ever since the days of my early struggles—met me at the threshold with the good news that there were two new patients in the waiting room. "The lady came about half an hour ago, that's her brougham opposite; the gentleman drove up in a hansom ten minutes after." "I will see the lady at once," I said, turning the knob and entering the room as I spoke.

Libellous Cockie.

A smartly-dressed lady was looking at a volume of "Punch" on the table, while an elderly clergyman sat with an air of fixed melancholy, gazing into the fire. At the noise of my entry Cockie faced round, and, instead of his usual greeting of "Hullo!" the malicious bird, inspired, as I cannot but believe, by the Evil One himself, announced in a voice of startling distinctness, ending with a diabolical chuckle, "They've been kissing. Ha, ha!" I stepped back hastily, and closed the door.

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—
"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."

THE STOCK BOOK

simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

IN PRAISE OF THE GOLDFINCH.

By LADY HELEN FORBES.

I NEVER walk in my garden and see the weeds which, I regret to say, flourish in that good soil with a hardy impudence, without wishing that I had an aviary to profit by what is otherwise so grievous.

How beautiful the golden tassels of the groundsel, the star-eyed chickweed, the fat, green shepherd's purses, and the brown-green spikes of the plantain would look thrust between the bars of a cage, and how useful they would then be!

Better than the Dust Heap.

Instead of being outcasts and things accursed, which I must say they show no signs of minding, they might be welcome—in moderation—and gathered carefully in baskets rather than hastened to the ignominious dust-heap.

I once kept birds, never many at a time, but always with the greatest affection, so that their frequent and untimely deaths were real grief to me. My whole youth was enlivened by their singing from the cages poised in the sunny windows of my schoolroom, so that to speak and write of birds is to bring back to me a whiff of my early youth.

My early ambition—never realised, early ambitions never are—was to possess a real aviary, with nest boxes and swinging rings, full of beautifully plumaged and tuneful birds. One lady I was once taken to see as a child had a possession of this sort, full of Indigo birds, Waxbills, and Nonpareils, and for years I ardently desired one like it.

Goldfinches, however, were always my favourite birds; they are as pretty to look at, in fact, less gaudy than the more generally popular Canary, and their song does not go through one's head with an equal piercingness.

The "Thistle-finch," as he is sometimes called, becomes very tame, more so, I believe, than most English birds, and he is harder than a foreigner. He also has not the evil and disheartening habits of the Bullfinch, who eats himself to death as cheerfully as any dyspeptic millionaire.

I had a Goldfinch which was the joy of my heart for about four years. He was a very tame little bird, and I had chiefly tamed him myself, always an achievement to a child.

I loved "Goldie" dearly, though I fear he had no particular affection for me; and it was a dreadful day for me when one fine morning he escaped from his cage and flew away into the open air. I was so fond of him that I used to keep a little diary with chronicles of his small doings; I have it still, and very trifling it is, but my childish description of, as I called it, the "black, and also red, letter day" of the bird's memorable flight is most graphic and moving.

I am glad to say that after several hours of great unhappiness for me, we caught the precious Finch in the garden and brought him home in triumph. I was only twelve then, and luckily "Goldie" lived till I was about fifteen and more philosophical. The entry in my diary at the time of his demise—"And so there's an end of poor Goldie"—has little in common with the passionate grief and excitement which moved me when he flew away.

Gone, but not Forgotten.

I do not remember loving any other of my birds as I did "Goldie." I had soon afterwards a foreign bird of unknown name and fierce aspect, which escaped like "Goldie," but unlike him, never came back. He was seen for months afterwards round the house with the wild birds, evidently on perfectly good terms with them.

I never cared much for Canaries. I only remember one, a Crested hen, with a very long body and neck, whom we called "Gagool," as inhabiting my schoolroom, and her only merit was her sex and the fact that she could not sing. Another bird we had at the same time, or a little earlier, was an accomplished Redpoll, which drew up its water in a little bucket and opened a box every time it wanted its seed. He worked very hard literally for his living, but he never sang, except for an odd note rather like a Peewit's. I also owned several green birds of the Parrot species, but found them uninteresting.

I do not recommend birds as pets for children, for if they become cherished pets there is such trouble and sorrow when they die that it scarcely seems worth it. And as birds are short-lived at best, where they are kept there are more tearful children than is needful. If they are not cherished by their youthful owners they are very apt to be forgotten, and this increases the normal tragedies of bird life, already so numerous.

T. H.—Answered by post.

T. H.—Answered by post.—RATHER SLOW (Disinterested).—The cock was evidently not quite forward enough, but, possibly, by this time, with more bright and spring-like weather, he may have improved naturally. If not, give the pair every second day, in addition to the staple seed diet, a small teaspoonful of egg-food, with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts gold of pleasure, maw and sesame mixed in it, and on the alternate days give instead a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazel and broken greats. For green food give a young freshly gathered stool of dandelion daily; cut through the root just below the surface of the soil, clean off the soil, and give the whole plant to the birds. See that it is gathered from clean, wholesome ground. This treatment and a little patience is all you need.

FIRST CLUTCHES CLEAR (Not Downhearted).—The probability is that you waited the birds before the cocks were quite ready, which was the cause of the eggs being clear. The Yorkshires are also clearly a little backward. Treat all three of the pairs, assuming neither of them have gone to nest by this time, the same as advised to "Disinterested" in this issue, which will be all that you need do. Of course, if either of the hens has gone to nest and laid again before this reply reaches you, let matters take their own course as regards that pair, and do not give them the treatment.

NORWICH AND YORKSHIRE (W. W. C.).—(1) If the Norwich hens have quite ceased moulting there is no reason whatever why they should not breed successfully this season, but they will be rather late. You omit to say how long it is since they ceased dropping feathers, but if it was before this month began the birds should be ready for mating by the end of the month. Treat them the same as advised to "Disinterested," in this issue, and you should soon find them in good form. (2) You undoubtedly named the Yorkshire hen too early, or she could not have had two clutches already, and this is doubtless the reason of the clear eggs. Treat for two or three weeks the same as advised for No. 1, and if she is then anxious to nest again you may let her do so, and with the season more favourable the next meet with more success. (3) One more nest should be the limit for this hen this season, especially if she rears any young.

NOISY WHEN BREATHING. (A Loyal Reader).—The bird is probably afflicted with bronchial trouble. See that it is kept free from the exciting causes of the complaint, viz., cold, draughts; sudden extreme of heat and cold; exposure to heated and vitiated air, which as occurs in the vicinity of burning lights in the evenings or high up near the ceiling; and in a dusty atmosphere. Do not allow the bird to hang in a window by any means. Having adopted these precautions give every second day for a fortnight half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. On the alternate days in the first week add to the drinking water six drops of syrup of thubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and in the second week instead of this give five drops each of tincture of lobelia, ipæacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and sweet spirit of nitre. If not well by the end of the fortnight stop the medicines for a week, then resume, and give the squills mixture every second day for another fortnight, omitting the aperient altogether.

MAKES SQUEAKY NOISE (Novice, Catford).—If the bird is really a last season's youngster it must either have been very badly treated in the way of environment or otherwise inherited a very strong predisposition to bronchial trouble, and in the latter event it would be most inadvisable to breed with her under any pretext whatever. Even in the former case you should not think of breeding with her unless she quite throws off the complaint, or you will simply be building up endless troubles among your stock in future years. Treat her the same as advised to "A Loyal Reader" in this issue, but give the rhubarb, apparent for three consecutive days and every second day afterwards for the remainder of the first week, and then give the squills mixture for a fortnight without missing a week. Give a young freshly gathered stool of dardelon daily, or failing this a liberal supply of chucked, or a few flower heads of ground-ell daily for a week or two.

COCK NOT SINGING. (A. Nicklin.) Possibly the cock is a little backward, though this is not certain. As he was singing so vigorously before you met him, it is possible that his client's since is merely an idiosyncrasy, and you may find him all right when the hen gets a little forward with nesting. There are certain individuals of this type, and they often succeed well enough at breeding. In any case you will do no harm, and possibly much good, by treating the pair the same as advised to "Disinterested" in this issue. Beyond this nothing, I think, will be required but the exercise of a little patience.

A CAPER (E. Newmann).—The symptoms may be due to a catarrhal cold, a consequence of the late spring weather, or to some digestive derangement, but you give me no clue as to which is most likely.

Anyway, see that it is not exposed to cold direct draughts, the fumes of burning lights in the evenings, nor heavy lights up near the ceiling. Then even if you do not do for a fortnight give in addition to its natural diet, a piece of bread the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and finally sprinkled with soft sugar. On the alternate days add to the water 20 drops of whisky, ten of lemon juice, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together. Give a few crisp, young leaves of dandelion daily. It is most unlikely that the bird is troubled with a worm.

SWELLING AFTER LAYING. (E. V.).—The swelling is undoubtedly due to some internal derangement, probably connected with ovarian trouble, and the production of eggs will always be attended with considerable risk to the bird. You can do nothing to cure the condition, but only ameliorate it by preventing her nesting as far as possible. She may prove useful as a foster parent if you have any other hens fail in their duty, and as you may quite safely utilise her in this way you should allow her to go on sitting on the solitary egg with that end in view. Afterwards she may prove useful to run in a flight cage or aviary in which you keep the young when first wean d.

CAUSE OF DEATH (A. G.).—Only a post-mortem could satisfactorily and definitely explain the actual cause of death, but judging from the symptoms you name I should say that in all probability it was due to broncho-pneumonia, as a consequence of the violent fluctuations of weather we have had lately. Its previous condition probably had nothing to do with the actual cause of death.

MANY TROUBLES (E. M. T.).—No wonder you are puzzled, so am I, at this multitude of troubles occurring with precisely the same treatment, a produced excellent results last season. A combination of unfortunate circumstances seems to work against you and it must be evident that the birds are not in the same condition as when the former treatment was so successful, and the large rape seed, the exceptional weather conditions this spring, and the fact that you seem to have mated the birds very early in comparison with the nature of the season have doubtless contrbuted their quota to the general effect. Of course, I may be wrong in thinking there was a screw loose in the management, but still, as your hens appear now to be in just that condition when I consider the use of dandelion as green food positively dangerous, I should certainly not consider it wise to use it. I note also you say you give seed pods of chickweed and shepherd's purse, and unless you mean dried seeds gathered last season, I don't see how you can get these wet, unless grown under glass. As regards the continued treatment, so to speak, of egg-binding when the hen does not lay, after the steam process fails, one can only keep the bird in a very warm place, give a stimulant such as a little brandy in the water, or by the beak, and trust to nature to relieve the patient. You must not suppose that in a case of real acute egg-binding the hen can recover and become normal without being relieved of the egg. In all save the most rare and abnormal cases it is merely a case of a race between the expulsion of the egg and death, and one is sure to win. For the rest of the season I would advise you to cut down the supply of the large rape to a minimum, and discard the use of dandelion altogether as a green food.

FAILED FIRST ROUND (Novice, Wolverhampton).—Did the cock sing at all, either before or after mating, or did he chase the hen about during the nesting process? I ask this because I feel rather disposed to think that you have had two hens mated. Make yourself quite satisfied on this point, and if the birds are a true pair treat them the same as advised to "Disinterested," in this issue, but give the hen only two small leaves of dandelion whilst she is separate from the cock. If, however, both the birds appear in quite good condition and full of vigour there is no reason why you should keep them separate more than a day or two. Meantime separate only by a wire slide, so that the cock can see the hen and feed her through the wires if so disposed.

SWOLLEN FEET, ETC. (M. W.).—(1) Place a little peroxide of hydrogen in a small shallow vessel and hold the affected foot in this until the liquid ceases foaming. Then dry carefully, and paint with a camel-hair brush dipped in a mixture of one part collodion to one part salicylic acid, and hold bird until this is dry. Three or four days later soak the foot in a warm solution of common soda to remove the collodion, and repeat the former process. Repeat this as often as necessary to prevent the feet suppurating at intervals of three or four days each time. (2) The Yorkshire is probably affected by the severe changes of weather we have had. Give a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with soft sugar, and add 20 drops of chemical food to its water for a few days when it seems to become puffy. But the most important thing is to see that it is not exposed to cold direct draughts, and is kept in a comfortable temperature.

A POOR VOCALIST (Novice, A.T.).—The style of song you describe is rather what one might expect to get from a lively, vigorous hen, and I should not be surprised if you ultimately discovered that you had made a mistake in the sex. Still, the fact that the bird has not yet stopped moult may, perhaps, be accountable for the song being yet in an undeveloped condition and you may treat as follows for a month or so and note result. The fact of the bird not hearing any accomplished songster would not prevent it coming into full song by this time, but the song would have been of an unmediated type. See that it is in a bright and healthy position, not exposed to cold direct draughts nor rapid and extreme changes of temperature. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of cherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion worked in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and broken oats, and also a morsel of banana, or, when available in good condition, a small spray of some green salad. In the drinking water add ten drops of lemon juice, and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and in the next week give instead 20 drops of Cholesterol Food. In the third and fourth weeks repeat the dosage of the first two weeks in the same order.

ROLLER'S TOURS (Roller Fancier).—(1) Judging from your description, I should say that both the tours you refer to are good Glink's tours, the one following the hollow roll being a hollow glicke, and the one at the end a water glicke, but in the latter case, as you mention, the bell roll being heard at the same time, which I take it means that the two sounds appear to run concurrently, it may possibly be a bell glicke tour. Either of these tours, especially when well performed, are valued points in the Roller's song. Seeing that you are so placed that you cannot get to any contests or meetings where you could get these matters cleared up to your satisfaction, you could scarcely have done better than enter one or both of these birds in the Roller contests, as you may very probably have an expert description of their song tours, and the value in points, in the report of the contest among our show reports. By using this means of education your isolated position as regards congenial fanciers need be no bar to you getting a very good knowledge of the song tours of your birds. (2) Answered in No. 1.

SUBSTANCE ON NORWICH (Puzzled).—Your pseudonym aptly describes my condition concerning the position of the substance, which you say is a little to the left of the vent when you hold the bird and blow up the lathers on the abdomen, but you omit to say whether the bird is held with its head towards you. If you held the bird with the head towards you I should imagine such a substance was due to some displacement of the gizzard. On either side it may be due to some congestion in the intestinal tract. Add ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the water every second day for a week, and then report result, and also make it clear which side of the abdomen the substance is situate. There is a possibility of the bird breeding successfully in spite of either of the above troubles, but this can only be proved by actual trial.

ROLLER-YORKS (Galway).—(1) Yes, the Roller cock and Yorks. hen will make a quite suitable pair of birds to breed youngsters with an improved type of song on the ordinary singing Canary. You would find this subject dealt with in an article in the forthcoming CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL. (2) The young cocks from this cross, if trained under the Roller cock, assuming the latter is a well trained singer himself, should develop a fair type of Roller song and notes, but you must not expect them to have difficult Roller song tours in anything like the perfect condition of pure-bred Rollers. Thanks for kind remarks anent this page. Don't apologise for troubling us. Only too pleased to be of assistance at any time.

IRREPARABLE NORWICH HEN (A.P.S.).—You ought to have described the constant pecking in some way. It may amount to nothing more than the bird preening its plumage, which it is quite natural for any bird to do. If there is any suspicion of the tin cage being infested with red mites remove the birds for a few hours, and plunge it boldly in a copper of boiling water, and keep it immersed for a few minutes, then dry it and return the birds. The operation may be repeated with advantage a week later. Do not overlook doing the food and water vessels at the same time, and also see that the nail or hook on which the cage hangs is free from the pest. You may add to the drinking water ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week. If the constant pecking is not stopped in, say, a fortnight, please write again and describe the bird's behaviour as clearly as you can.

TWO NORWICH HENS (P.E.R.)—I am afraid these hens will be of very little use to you either for mule breeding or mating with Canaries; certainly, none at all without a very great improvement. You do not say how old the birds are, and that may possibly make a great difference. Anyway, see that they are not exposed to any direct draught going between doors or door and window. They would undoubtedly have done much better in a room of fairly equable temperature but without any fire at all than in the kitchen, but the best thing to be done now is to leave them where they are, and keep them away from the fireplace so that the temperature may be as equable as possible; of course, still keeping the aforementioned points in view. In addition to the staple seed diet give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it to each bird every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and broken groats. Look out in sheltered nooks and corners for a little early dandelion, and give each two leaves daily as soon as you can find it. In the drinking water every second day for a week add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a expense, and in the next week give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. Then miss a week and repeat the two weeks' dosage in the same order.

Answered by H. NORMAN.

WILL THEY BE FERTILE? (F. Litchfield).—It is impossible to say if the eggs from your pair of Bullfinches will be fertile. As a rule they seldom prove to be so, and I think you will be fortunate if they hatch out, although one never can tell; general rules regarding live stock are continually being broken. Do not worry about the hen Bullfinch paired to the Siberian Finch not going to nest, there is plenty of time yet; be liberal with dandelion heads, and keep them supplied with nesting material—it encourages them.

WHAT IS WRONG? (L. C. Munro).—My opinion is that your birds died from liver trouble caused by unjudicious feeding, but as you give me no information regarding your treatment I am unable to say where your error is. Had you written to us directly the Goldfinch was out of health, we might have assisted you to save him. When you get in a fresh stock send to this office for the Nutshell booklets dealing with the different species you purchase, and follow the general treatment advised. Freshly caught birds should have an aperient when well on to seed.

BIRDS WITH FITS (Glyndeur).—Fits in birds arise from several causes, the most common is improper feeding. To give quantities of hemp, linseed, and sunflower, without letting the birds have sufficient exercise to carry off the stimulating effects of such feeding, is only courting trouble. I would advise you to leave out the hemp and linseed in your seed mixture and only allow a few sunflower seeds daily. Give an aperient occasionally, and a little soaked rape and teazel. Keep them well supplied with green food during the summer months, and give sweet apple or a tender leaf of turnip root during the winter. If any of the birds are of a nervous disposition, be careful how you handle them; such birds are easily frightened into a fainting fit, which sometimes proves fatal.

FORCING A FINCH TO MOULT (Anxious) — I am sorry to have to refuse you the information you ask for, for although known to many, it is not a method that commends itself to anyone having a true regard for his birds. You may get a bird to moult a few weeks before the usual time by change of position, say, from an outside place to an inside one, or vice versa. In some cases a finch can be used late in the season by keeping him back—that is, withholding forcing seed; and foods in the early part of the year, so that he is late before he opens, and if carefully handled he will sing well into the autumn.

HAND-REARING RINGDOUSELS. (Peakite).—You cannot do better than follow the methods employed in the rearing of Song Sparrows and Blackbirds. Take the young just as their eyes begin to open; if left later they are shy and sometimes refuse to gape. If you do not take the nest, put them in a box or basket lined with soft hay, and cover the young with a piece of flannel, as warmth is necessary to success. If you have the choice, secure them late in the evening when the parents have packed them for the night. Give them their first meal early in the morning and continue it every morning at the same hour. Feed every hour for the first few days, later lengthening to every two hours. The food should be the following: Equal parts biscuit powder (finely crushed best quality puppy biscuits answer admirably) and hard-boiled egg; add to this one part good ants' eggs or insectile food. Take a small quantity of this mixture and make rather sloppy with warm milk, and feed the young ones with it, using a small flat stick with the edges rounded off. Do not cram them, just nicely fill the crop. Occasionally give any small insects you can procure or larger ones cut up. Every other day add a pinch of fine grit to the soft food. Separate them as soon as they are able to feed themselves.

FEEDING A BULLFINCH (F. H. Pink).—If, you Bullfinch is healthy I would not advise any alteration in the diet, excepting to decrease the quantity of Canary seed, as it is no use wasting it. Is it of good quality, sweet to the taste and smell? The proportion advised is not excessive, but then birds like humans have their likes and dislikes. You should now be supplementing your food diet with wild food, such as dandelion heads, seedling chickweed, and grass, also shepherd's purse, all of which can now be gathered, and there will soon be plenty of others.

KEEPING REDPOLLS (A Beginner).—Redpolls are easy to keep in confinement, and are therefore quite suitable for a novice; they become very tame and make charming pets. Feed on equal parts Canary rape and teazle, and give a few grains of hemp seed about twice a week. In addition to these offer a spray of chickweed, shepherd's purse, or groundsel, and let them bathe on all suitable occasions. Our Nutsell booklet on the Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite would interest you, and give you several "tips" on management.

GOLDFINCH WITH FOOT TROUBLE (Goldie).—Examine your bird's foot very carefully. It may have a hair wound round part of it, or perhaps it has strained it when clinging to the wires of the cage. You cannot do better than immerse it in warm water (not hot) and then gently massage the leg and foot, slightly greasing the finger and thumb with vaseline. If you detect any soreness add a spoonful of boric acid powder to the water.

JAYS IN CAPTIVITY.—S. Crappell, (Ct.). The few attempts that have come to my notice of breeding Jays in captivity have ended in failure. The trouble is that the either eat the eggs as laid or destroy the young when hatched. I do not think it would be much use anyone hoping to succeed with them unless the aviary was a large one, say 20 to 30 feet long. (2) You could keep a pair of jays in a six feet cage. As a staple food give soaked Melox or biscuit meal, with a spoonful of meat meal in it. Scraps of all kinds from the table are acceptable, and occasionally they should have a small bird or mouse, besides mealworm, beetles, and other large insects.

FOREIGN BIRDS.
Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

GREY PARROT PLUCKING ITS FEATHERS ("Barrowian").—I can suggest no remedy till you supply me with details as to how long you have had the bird, and how you have fed and treated the bird generally. Also how long has it been addicted to feather pulling. In the meantime, put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in its drinking water every third day.

PARROT WITH ABNORMAL BEAK. (Joey Faint enough.) There is only one thing to do, and that is to pare its beak down to normal size with a pair of nail pinners, but I consider you should get a very some experienced fancier to do it for you as it should not be cut sufficiently far back to make it bleed; however, if this should happen, a touch of Friar's Balsam should soon stop any bleeding. A continuous supply of cuttlebone and a change of food always in the cage should prevent a recurrence of the abnormality. Give it pieces of biscuit smeared with cod liver oil emulsion. This will help to keep its strength up; also figs fruit and shelled nuts.

PARROT ABOUT SIZE OF BLACKBIRD (No. Reader No. 26).—It is a cock Cockatoo, a denizen of Australia, and its value is about 10s. 6d. This species does not make much of a talker, at least they are mostly kept as aviary birds, many being bred annually in outdoor aviaries. A few of the which have been caged young and made great pets of, learn to say a few words and short sentences, but these are the exception and not the rule. There is no reason, however, why your bird should not call itself "Joey," "pretty Joey," and utter other similar sayings.

SMALL GREY AFRICAN PARROT (Campbell).—It should moult during the next three months, but the first moult of young birds in this country is often irregular and protracted. In addition to the mixed seeds, keep a tin of canary seed (best large) in its cage; it can have shelled nuts (Barcelona, monkey and walnuts) in variety. The cooked vegetables should be unseasoned. Do not give any more boiled egg. Once a week put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in its drinking water, and three times weekly well colour the drinking water with chemical food. Do not omit regular supplies of grit and cuttlebone. Parsley is not deadly to Parrots. Outdoor life will be good for it, but do not subject it to chill winds.

BUDGERIGARS NOT NESTING (Esperance).—It is really well, I think, for your birds that they have not nested during the severe weather, or you would have been sure to have lost some of them. Yes, they are moulting, but this need occasion you no anxiety; it will soon be over now the weather is getting decent, and they will soon be in breeding form again, and once they start nesting will continue right up to winter. Our winter is the natural nesting season for these birds in their native country. Keep some turves of grass in the all-wire part, and water this occasionally, say about noon, and you'll soon see the Budgies tumbling about amid the wet grass, taking their tub in a natural manner. I am of the opinion your birds will go to nest almost at once, as soon as the moult is over. The nesting season can hardly be said to be over for these birds on November 30th.

DIAMOND SPARROWS NESTING (E. S. Cobham).—The dietary named is sufficient for the present, but if they hatch out young supply millet sprays, also a little of some good insecticide mixture, and live ants' eggs and gentles, which, together with such flies, etc., as the adult birds are able to capture in the aviary, should make the successful rearing of the young almost a foregone conclusion. Hay, grass, and a little moss will suffice as building material, and a nest box, fashioned like a square cube, with a hole at one side, and a large rush nest should be fixed up for them under cover, though it is quite possible that they may build a natural nest in the bushes.

COCKATEL LAYING SHELL LESS EGGS (D. I. P.).—This bird is evidently quite out of condition, and in a debilitated state. She should be caged separately away from her own kind till she is in good condition again. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water, and on the other days well colour the drinking water with chemical food. Also give her pieces of bismut, stale bread or plain cake, and lightly sugar, whichever you can induce her to eat, with cod-liver oil emulsion; she should get a piece so spread twice daily. If you cannot get her to eat this, then you must smear the C.L.O. along the edges of her beak and in her mouth by means of feather. She must be kept warm and in as regular a temperature as possible. Treat so for a month, and then report progress; the above treatment is in addition to the ordinary dietary.

THIN AND PULLING ITS FEATHERS (R. J. H.).—Spray it twice a week (not on cold days) with tepid water containing a little quassia essence. Give the cod-liver oil emulsion twice a day, spread thinly on anything it will eat, and continue this till it is in better condition—fleshy, but not fat. It will do quite well on a seed mixture of canary and sunflower, as it refuses other kinds, but it would be better for cats if it could be induced to take them. Nuts in variety, such as monkey, Spanish, and walnuts, can be given freely. Raisins and nuscatsels can also be given. Unless there is some internal trouble at work, the above regime should soon result in an improvement in its condition. But keeping it interested, with little opportunity for ennui, allowing it plenty of exercise, and keeping it in a warm, well ventilated room, where the temperature is pretty even, will count for a great deal. It will be a work of time, and you must persevere till the bird certainly ought to begin soon to improve in condition.

AMAZON WEAK ON LEGS (W. B.).—Give it biscuits, nuts, stale crusts, and a little plain cake, in addition to the seed and fruit diet you are now giving. The leg should be bathed with tepid water, dried off with a soft cloth, and then painted with Jacob's Oil—this should be done daily. I should certainly decline to do further business with a dealer who refused me information about my purchase. Give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's fluid magnesia in the drinking water daily, till the voidings become watery loose, then stop the magnesia for a time and only give an occasional dose as necessary to keep the bowels moving freely without undue looseness. When not giving the magnesia well colour the drinking water with chemical food. As soon as you find the birds eating biscuits, etc., then lightly spread such with cod liver oil emulsion and continue this till the bird is quite strong again. If your bird really has some septic affection then the probability is that it will not recover, and if it is a new purchase such may be the case.

ROSEATE COCKATOO WITH COLD (H. M.).—The bird has been treated with thoughtless carelessness by those who took charge of it for you, as it is a hardy species, and will stand considerable rough treatment with impunity. Get a mixture of ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine in equal parts; for use take one teaspoonful of the mixture to one fluid ounce of water, and see that the bird has a good drink of it during the day. It almost does more harm than good to attempt to drub birds with drugs, they drink only by sips; to put even half a teaspoonful of liquid in a bird's mouth at once would throw it into a convulsive choking fit. Put a little honey and borax in its mouth once or twice daily, it will help to clear the throat and make it easier for the bird to eat. Till it is eating heartily again prepare the following: One teaspoonful of condensed milk, one-third teaspoonful cod liver oil emulsion, and three tablespoonfuls of boiling water; well stir, and when cool supply to the bird. A few pieces of soft bread can be put in the above, and as soon as you see it eating this the quantity can be increased; at the same time, the milk is merely given as a medicine, and as soon as you notice the bird picking up and eating its ordinary food again, it should be gradually discontinued. As soon as the bowels have been well moved by the castor oil, I should not continue its use; where a strongish laxative is required Dinneford's magnesia and water in equal parts is far better for birds. Note: The bowels must move freely, yet they must not be watery-loose, and you must supply the laxative as required to keep them so regulated. Keep the bird warm. While there is a chance for its recovery, I can express no decided opinion; it was evidently pretty far gone when your query was perused. I shall be pleased to hear how it goes on.

BUDGERIGAR PANTING (Caister).—I am assuming that you keep these birds in a cage and that consequently it does not get much wing exercise. Hang up a millet spray in the cage, out of reach of the perches; picking out the seeds, while clinging to the spray will enforce more exercise and benefit the bird. Keep a piece of cuttlebone continually in the cage, hanging near one of the perches. Also sprinkle a pinch of flint and shell grit over the sand each time you renew the latter in cage tray. Till the bowels have been well moved give Dinneford's magnesia and water in equal parts, in lieu of drinking water, and afterwards give the magnesia and water once a week for a month at least, this will not hurt the healthy bird. As regards the ailing bird, catch it up, and if it is thin give two drops of cod liver oil emulsion direct to the beak daily for a time. A little frame lettuce is the best winter greenfood, but the fleshy stem running up the centre of each leaf should not be given. Their cage should stand in some light position where it will be quite free from draught, and they would be better in a warm room where the temperature is fairly even, till the ailing bird recovers tone. When fit an unheated room suffices for them. See how they go on for a fortnight, and then report progress with full details. When not giving the magnesia put one-third teaspoonful of hyvo-phosphates in the drinking water. Budgies are small drinkers and one fluid ounce of water is ample for their daily needs. You must not use a metal drinker when supplying drugs.

GREY PARROT IN MOULT (A. W.).—There is not very much wrong with the bird, but for the next two months put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the water with chemical food. Give it fruit daily, banana and apple are very wholesome; you can give whichever it prefers, or change them about if it will readily take both. I am not much in favour of ready made mixtures, and you will do well to bring the dietary into conformity with that given in the booklet on the Grey Parrot as soon as may be. Watch carefully against draught during the remainder of the winter. If any other adverse symptoms should develop do not delay but write again at once, giving full details.

BUDGERIGARS IN OUTDOOR AVIARY (Esperance).—The samples of grit you send are of no use for cage birds. The flint grit and shell if pulverised as small as German rape seed, would do. Such dealers as Trower's, Spratt's, Ridd, Walsh, etc. (see "Cage Birds" for addresses) would supply you with a packet of the right kind if you stated that it was for Budgerigars. Dry garden mould will do for the aviary floor, if you put a light sprinkling of sand and grit on top of same. I hope the position of hawks will be clear to you on diagram sent. Three are to be placed in the outer part, with their openings facing the light, only the back just under the roof; three are to be put inside, two in similar positions in each back corner, and one between them but about twelve inches lower down. I have marked the flaps and door in most convenient positions so far as I can gather details of arrangement. The lower flaps should be flush with the floor of the aviary to allow of free scraping out. The door through which to renew food supplies you can have in any convenient position to suit the feeding arrangements, and you can have a similar one in the outer part if it is called for. When it is necessary for you to get inside, the best plan is to fasten a large dust cloth securely over the end, which will lie about you while you are getting in, and cover up the door while you are within; but, as a matter of precaution, the door should also be closed. You must have six hawks for three pairs, and there must be no odd adult birds in the aviary. Three breeding pairs are the full number for your accommodation. Keep the old mortar rubbish there; they will go to it when they need it. As soon as you can get it free from frost, supply seeding and flowering grass ad lib.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Identity of Bird (C. Latham).—The bird was doubtless a Little Tern. It is a summer visitor to us, arriving at the end of April and staying until October or later before taking its winter flight to S. Africa. Small breeding colonies are to be seen in several places along the Welsh coasts, and it would be only a short flight for such a bird to visit Tredegar, where you saw it. The yellow feet and bill, and its small size, would distinguish it from the Common Tern, which has red feet and a red bill, and is 14 inches in length from beak to tail, while the Lesser Tern is only 9 inches.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., J. College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for post direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Mrs. Ogilvie.—Budgerigar diet of liver disease of an advanced nature.

A. E. L.—Metritis, due to rupture and infection from the ovum.

Lady Samuelson.—Melba Finch succumbed to an acute attack of brucella-pneumonia. It is a very fatal disease, and not amenable to treatment.

Anxious.—Congestion of the lungs, complicated with disease of the liver.

Both books are written by experts from personal experience, and to follow the hints they give means to SUCCEED BY THE SHORTEST AND EASIEST WAY.

Wisely fed birds are healthy birds, and healthy birds do you service. Avoid all errors of diet in feeding them, therefore will help you to feed them properly. It is especially valuable at the season when wild foods are to be had in such abundance, merely for the gathering.

There are many sketches and illustrations of all the best known wild plants.

HYBRID BREEDERS

make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

AN "ALL-BRITISH" SONGSTER.

Dominating the early morning bird music of the Spring and Summer is the merry piping of the Song-Thrush, and sometimes the bird sings so far into the night that its song is mistaken for that of the Nightingale. Just now the mud-lined nests are filled with lusty youngsters, or perhaps they have already become vacant, and the young birds are running about in the vicinity still calling on their parents for juicy worms. The bird from which Mr. Norman made the drawing here reproduced is the fine specimen which won second prize at the show of the City and Suburban A.C.B. for its owner Mr. W. Shepherd, Piccadilly, London.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Whitsun Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 1d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

USEFUL HINTS.

Don't forget the greenfood for hens with young.

Let it be fresh gathered three or four times a day.

It soon goes "wilty" and then becomes unusable.

FREE SUITS & TROUSERS FOR READERS

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO WEAR SIX MONTHS OR REPLACED FREE.

Remarkable Cloth—Won't Tear—Won't Wear Out—Absolutely Holeproof! Your Boy must have a Suit!

We will give any reader a pair of Trousers, Breeches, or complete Suit, free of charge, if he can wear the smallest hole in six months, no matter how hard he wears goods. We have discovered a really remarkable cloth that will not tear or wear out—absolutely holeproof, looks exactly as finest tweeds and serges, made in all the most up-to-date designs and suitable for farm and rough wear or office and best wear. Just to introduce this remarkable cloth to "Cage Birds" readers we offer a pair of well-cut Gent's Trousers for only 4/9; Breeches 6/3, or complete stylish suit for 15/3, BOY'S SUIT for 5/11, Knickers 2/3, and send in parcel a guarantee, plainly stating if the smallest hole appears in six months (no matter how hard you wear goods) we replace the garment absolutely free of charge. A "WEE GEM."

A Pretty Green Border Canary, winner of 3rd prize at the London and P.O.S. Show for Mr. B. J. Daw, East Ham.

PENYGRAIG C.B.S.

Meeting, Butcher's Arms May 18, Mr. Hughes chair. The attendance was small considering the important items on the agenda, and I am sorry to say the meeting did not proceed as smoothly as desired. Decided to have Mr. S. J. Nicholas (Swansea) as judge. Next meeting, June 1, 6. Hope to see a better attendance than of late.—W. R. Williams, Sec.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

Meeting, City Arms Hotel, May 3, before a very good attendance. Mr. F. J. Yorkes, joined by saying that although over military age, he hoped ere long to be doing his bit "somewhere in France." Decided to have a ramble to Tynesfield in June or July, and a hearty welcome is extended to fanciers or friends, and those who care to go should kindly notify the Sec. on or before next meeting, June 7. Judging by past experiences, the ramble should prove most enjoyable. Judges for table shows selected, and other matters relating to same dealt with. Mr. Tilley was elected a member.—James A. Withers, Sec.

EDINBURGH C.B.S.

Meeting, Cairns Memorial Hall, Gorgie Road, May 16, Mr. W. B. Adam (President) chair, and a good turnout. New members admitted: Messrs. F. Ritchie, and J. Frame. Sec. read letter from Mr. Napier, secretary of Colinton and Currie C.B.S., intimating his inability to secure any grounds to have a ramble. Decided that for this year we have no ramble, and Sec. was instructed to write Mr. Napier a letter of thanks for his efforts. Agreed to hold F.P. show as usual, July 15, at 5, Norwich and Crests, 5 classes: Border Fancy 4; Scotch Fancy and A.O.V. Cana, 1 each; and 4 classes for Mules. Several sps. have already been intimated, and it is hoped members will make it a success.—J. Chaiton, Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Meeting, Carlton Hotel, Mr. P. Braidl, vice chairman, presided. Resolved that we apply for the patronage of the Southern Border Fancy Club for our open show. Sec. was instructed to purchase stationery, etc. Messrs. Brailly, Howard, Pearce, Wiseman, Rev. C. B. Jephth, and Mr. Phelps promised to act as stewards at the young bird show. The remainder of the evening was taken up with questions, which proved very interesting and instructive; those members who were not able to attend missed a pleasant evening. Rev. C. B. Jephth will read his paper at the next meeting, June 10; will members please attend? The title of the paper is—"What advantages can the Society offer to its members?" Meetings are now held on the third Tuesday in each month.—E. Thomas, Sec.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Meeting, Oldham Hall, May 11, Mr. Ewan chair. Two new members were elected, specialists for N.F. shows were decided. Lots will be forwarded to each member during the coming week. Several new sps. were offered and accepted for the N.F. shows. Mr. Metcalfe gave his lecture re colour feeding. Mr. Metcalfe, who was in capital form, dealt with the subject as only the lecturer can. His chief points were: Breeding for colour and size in the male. Green, he said, was the foundation of colour; also he dealt with the mixing of the colour food and strength at which to offer it to the birds, how to fix the colour, etc. Many questions were asked and suitably answered. The members present showed their appreciation by passing a very hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, the meeting being thoroughly enjoyed by those present. F. R. Jones.

Country Rambles

GLASGOW & W. OF SCOTLAND.

Ramble, May 12, to the estate of Mr. Scott Miller at Broxburn, thence to Kenmuir Woods and Cam buslang. At the meeting place, Tollcross Car Terminus, quite a crowd turned up, the following clubs being represented: West of Scotland, Springburn, North-West, West End, Fairhead, Gartynne, Shettleston and District, and some fanciers who are not members of any club but have promised to become members at our next meeting.

Arriving at Broxburn, as Mr. Miller had been called away on business, his poultryman, Mr. Reil, took us round the exhibits. First to be interviewed were the kangaroos. The female is at present carrying a young one in her pouch. Then the Rheas, a handsome pair, kept in a large paddock along with some famous Black Sheep, most of them having from four to five horns. There are also some Brown Sheep from St. Kilda. The Wild Australian Dogs kept in large spacious kennels, and other kinds of animals, were visited, among which were the Racoons, the female having a litter of lovely youngsters; a Raven in a large aviary; pens of beautiful Bull Terriers, and lovely Yokohamas. The Duckwing cock we were told has not been beaten on the show bench, and has a tail about 8 ft. long. Next came the Parrot aviary, with many gorgeous specimens, and a handsome pair of Californian Quails. There are also some handsome tufted ducks and golden geese. The small Foreign bird aviary afforded all a great treat. This aviary is built against a retaining wall and has a glass roof. The inside is filled with trees and a house for sleeping accommodation during severe weather. Its frontage is facing almost direct south, which gives it the sun all day. Bidding Mr. Reid good-bye, we made for Kenmuir Woods, tramping through a field of rhubarb to get to the banks of the Clyde. The scenery at Kenmuir is lovely. We tramped for miles up hills and down dales until we came to Carmyle, where a halt was made at the Old Mill Tavern. Another start was made, and on we walked until we reached Cambuslang, whence cars were taken to the city and tea at Sloan's Arcade Restaurant, everyone telling how well he had enjoyed himself.—M. Craig, Sec.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

DURHAM.

Linnet singing contest, Black Horse Inn, Durham, May 22. A large company assembled to hear the singing for the cup. Fairless judged and gave satisfaction to all. 1, cup, 3. Reed; 2, Boyd, timekeeper, Milford.—McKinley, Sec.

BARNSELEY.

Dove Inn Linnet Club, May 21, under a very good company, for 3 min. time sing. Shepherd (time), Dunk (chair): 1, Fishwick, 3 min. 4 sec.; 2, Jones, 3-40; 3, Waring, 3-16. Lark sing Whit Monday, 15, entrance, members only, first bird in window at 1.30.—J. Harwood, Sec.

ATHERTON.

Lion Inn Linnet Club; open contest, May 20, for time and quality. 34 birds staged, and some very good singing. Quality: 1, Page; 2, Murphy; 3, Statham; 4, Page and Rigby, dead heat. Time: 1, Duncally, 4-11; 2, Knowles, 1-43; 3, R. Fairhurst, 1-17; 4, T. Fairhurst, 1-19. Timers, J. Murphy, Hailwell; tappers, H. Grime; J. Batt; judges, J. W. Jones, S. Rigby, minutes, J. Sankey. Next open contest, Globe Inn, Leigh, Sat. May 27.—H. Grime, Sec.

LEEDS.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York Road; open contest for quality Linnet singing, May 20; 15 birds sang: 1, Bett; 2, 3, T. Ward, 4, shared by Farrar and Stead. Judges, Payne and Hayes. May 21, 28 birds sang: 1, Entery; 2, T. Hinch; 3, B. Farrar; 4, Stead; 5, Bett. Judges, Hinchcastle, Crane and Naylor.—W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

Leeds Quality Linnet Singing Club; grand contest, Plasterers' Arms, Skinner Lane, 20 birds faced the judges, A. Lorrman and N. Solomon: 1, C. Lorrman; 2, Booth; 3, Kendall. May 21, 24 birds entered, and some good singing was heard; judges, A. Lorrman and N. Solomon; timekeeper, F. Turner; 1, Kendall; 2, 3, Kendall and Walker shared; 4, Dearlove, F. Turner, Sec.

Open contest for quality, May 20, Linnet singing, Clarence Hotel, Skinner Lane, 30 birds sang. Our host added 5 sps. for the best 3 birds: 1, Stockall; 2, Wigfield; 3, Wharman; 4, Marshall. Judges, A. Lorrman, S. Butterfield, 1, Bamfield. May 21, 18 birds: 1, Binn; 2, Wigfield; 3, Wharman. Judges, Messrs. C. Ward and T. Summers.—W. Ljman, Hon. Sec.

Some Notes on Migration.

By WAYFARER.

THE migration of birds is a subject of never-ending interest to all students of wild bird life, especially just now, when thousands of feathered creatures have recently completed their journey to our shores from a warmer climate. The autumn migration is, however, the one of special interest to us, inasmuch as we are able to see and mark some of the doings of the wanderers.

We watch the Swallows and the Martins gather in enormous flocks, sunning themselves in the early sunshine of the cold autumn mornings, or perched in long rows on the telegraph wires by the roadside; or we see a restless company of Pipits or Wagtails flitting about our fields and meadows a day or two before passing south, and these movements are interesting as being part of the migration.

Residents nearer the sea have even a better opportunity of studying the subject; they see the gathering flocks, not of one species only, but of many. Birds of quite opposite habits will fraternise freely at this period, the Finches with the Owls, the tiny Goldcrests with our largest species, the graceful little Willow-Wrens with the bold Shrikes; they are all equally affected, all anxious to reach a distant land.

Migration across the sea is not the only movement of bird life. In some countries (Switzerland, for instance), migration takes place from the mountains to the warmer valleys. In others the birds journey from the woods to the open fields, some from the coast to the inland districts. In our own land we have numerous instances of this migrating movement.

Nearly every species is more or less affected by it; the familiar Robin comes from the woods and the country-side to the homestead; the Blackbirds and Thrushes that nested in our shrubbery in the spring have gone by the autumn, and others of the same species have taken their places; the Grey Wagtail migrates from the mountain stream where he has spent the summer months to the brook by the lowland village; the Dunlin moves to the coast from the heaths and moors, the pretty Twite comes down from the mountains.

The common Skylark is affected curiously; enormous flocks pass over the seas, others move about the country, influenced in their movements by the vagaries of the weather and the food supply.

Most birds pass to the land their predecessors had wintered in before them; but some, like the Snow Bunting, wander aimlessly about, driven hither and thither by the severity of the weather; their true home is the north, and they do their best to get there, but are as frequently driven back. Yet, keeping as near the snowline as possible, they subsist upon any seeds, buds or berries exposed to view. The route and destination of birds going to distant lands is worth a moment's notice.

Migration has been going on for ages, and in the far distance the movement was simply a movement of resident birds, and certain well-marked routes were used, as they are at the present time in the continent of America.

As the world gradually changed, the migration extended to lands farther south, but the routes used are still retained. The journey would increase as the cold extended, and in the summer the birds would strive to return to their northern homes.

In this way well-marked routes would be passed from parents to children, and now we see some species making journeys of long, weary miles across boisterous seas, when by a little deviation in the route they could pass comfortably from country to country.

As an instance, many birds cross the North Sea, when by a slight change of route they could journey by the coast line in their migration from Northern Russia. By following such old roads birds must lose their lives in numbers; hundreds must perish by the way.

In spring they came from the south, from Africa, and the South of Europe. In autumn the majority journey south, but many pass from east to west. Some follow the coast-line and strike across the open sea, others take the mountains or some great river as their guide and landmarks. Some fly by the light of day, others during the night, and at such times many crowd round the lanterns of our lighthouses.

The subject is full of interest; the cause is undoubtedly the supply of food, but this does not explain all. Why does the bold Shrike, an apparently strong, basty bird, leave us when the summer sun is still shining, while some of the tiny Warblers who subsist almost solely upon small insects stay till the early frost compels them to go?

Club Reports.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready).

Meeting, May 17, Mr. Hunt's shop, Ocean Road. Chairman, Mr. Dixon, presided over a good attendance. Young bird schedule was drawn up. The question of prize money was left over until next meeting, June 14. New members elected: Messrs. Pearson, R. Stephenson. We invite all fanciers to join the society.—J. W. Watson, Sec.

WEST STANLEY (Patriotic).

Meeting, May 11. Decided to run another show, Feb. 17, on the same lines as last, which was a great success. Receipts for our last show were £33 15s. 9d., and we helped 71 cases with our money, so we have done some good in the Fancy to those who have given their all in this terrible war.—R. Hutchinson, Hon. Sec.

CHESTER-LE-STREET C.B.S.

Meeting, May 6, Dun Cow Hotel, with a good attendance. Decided that officers remain the same as last year, and to hold N.F. show July 1, with one of our members as judge. 1s. per class will be added to entry fee as prize money. Decided to hold annual show Jan. 15, 1917. Judges nominated for same: Messrs. T. Dixon, J. Hardy, W. L. Smith, and T. C. Crawhall. Proposed to hold a dance later on in aid of Society's funds, half profits to go to the local Soldiers' Comforts Fund. Subs. to remain the same as last year, viz., 5s. 6d. Mr. J. Taylor was made a member. Members and intending members kindly attend next meeting, June 3.—R. Ward, Sec.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

On May 28 a ramble will take place, conducted by Mr. Bowdon, of Stockport, and to make the ramble more interesting he is giving something to the one that gathers the best selection of grasses and seeds on the way. A hearty invitation is given to anyone that would like to join us. To meet at the Stockport Fire Station not later than 2 o'clock. Next meeting, June 5. N.F. table show at Nor. yell, and buff; Yorks. yell, and buff; Nor. green or fowl; A.O.V. Cana, and Mule or Hyb. Mr. Raynes judge. Mr. Mitchell is giving 2s. 6d. for best bird. Other business will be arrangements for N.F. show, July 1, so let's have a good turnout. J. Green, Hon. Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting, Station Street, Cal. May 20, Mr. Waters presiding over a good attendance. Four specials offered by Messrs. Machin, T. Davidson, Snowden and Brown for N.F. shows were accepted with thanks. One special each of the first three was awarded to shows on June 3, July 1, and July 29 for most points. One class for each variety of Canaries at all the shows, and in addition, 1st show, class for Linnet (H.M. or F.M.); 2nd show, Goldfinch (H.M. or F.M.); 3rd show, A.O. Brit. Finch or Bunting (H.M. or F.M.). Judges for 1st show, W. F. Swan (Canaries) and J. Biscoe (British). Entrance fee 5d. per cage; birds staged at 6-15; judging at 7. James Potts (S. Shield) nominated for membership.—J. Pearce, Hon. Sec.

Cage Birds Annual

Address, The Manager, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

CANARY MANAGEMENT FOR BEGINNERS.

By WILLIAM FAIRLIE.

The principal show points of some of the more generally kept varieties, the rearing of the young, and the preparation of the birds for the show-bench.

HAVING decided to make the pleasing and instructive hobby, Canary breeding, your pastime, the first thing to do is to provide suitable cages to keep the birds in when purchased. There are a great many varieties of cages, both for singing and breeding. Where a bird is kept for singing purposes only, I should recommend a square cage, with the back, top and sides made of wood, the front part only being of wire. This kind of cage will be found the best for all ordinary purposes, as it protects the bird from a direct draught, a thing which must be jealously guarded against.

In buying birds, the best plan is to go to a respectable dealer's establishment, or to some well-known breeder; you are then sure to be well served, as these men have their reputation to keep up, and will always warrant what they sell. When ordering birds from a distance, to be sent by post or carriage, always have them on approval.

Points for Purchasers.

Of course, the prices of birds vary according to quality and breed, but I should strongly advise the beginner to buy the best his pocket will admit of, as it costs no more to keep good-quality birds than inferior ones; besides, it enhances your fame as a breeder of good stock, which is a qualification for the selling of your surplus birds.

In selecting a bird, always see that it is in perfect health, lively in its movements and free from panting when breathing, and that there is no wheezing in the throat or chest, as it is a loss of time to attempt to breed with unhealthy birds, the result being, as a rule, unfertilised eggs or the hens becoming bad sitters or feeders. Should any birds be reared at all, as they get older they mostly become affected with the same diseases as their parents suffered from, which, if not eradicated, become hereditary.

The Norwich Canary is what might be termed a chubby bird, although of late years they have slightly increased in size. In colour, it varies from a pale lemon to a very deep golden yellow, and is a sound-constituted bird, very lively and active, rather slender in build, but with a full neck and chest; it has a loud and melodious song.

The head should be broad and flat on top, the wings perfectly V-shaped and no overlapping; the feathers should be tight and compact and of a silky texture; in carriage it should stand semi-upright, and be lively and quick in action. Size, too, is a consideration, providing the bird retains all the true points of the Norwich and is not too coarse in feather.

Ma'e Yellows with Buffs.

The general rule is to pair yellow with buff. It is quite immaterial which bird is the one colour and which the other, but all clear birds should have a perfectly clear underflue. The yellows produce the colour and silkiness of feather, whilst the buffs add tightness and compactness. A cross with a good green now and again is very beneficial to the strain, and should always be resorted to, as the greens are the fountain-head of colour.

There are two kinds of Crests in the Norwich variety, the dark, and the grey or grizzle, the dark being most fancied and the most valued. The crested bird is rather full-bodied, with plenty of feather, and has a large and flat skull—a desideratum in this variety, as the bigger the skull the larger and fuller the crest will be. The saddle and back should be broad, and the feather tight and close, the body-colour being clear and bright. The crested birds are, however, always inferior in colour to their confreres, the plain-headed variety.

A good crest should have a well-defined centre, the feathers all lying perfectly flat and drooping gracefully over the beak, eyes, and down the back of the neck, and without the slightest perceptible break. Crests vary in shape and size; there is the oval crest, the circular crest, and the shield crest. It is advisable now and again to cross with a Lancashire Cobby to produce size and feather.

The head of the Yorkshire should be round, narrow, and of medium size, and the eyebrows must not show the slightest tendency to overhang; the neck long and straight, with no indentation to be seen between the shoulders; in fact, from the top of the head, along the back to the tip of the tail, there should be a straight and unbroken line. The body should be long and slim in build, the feather compact, tight and fine in texture; the bird should be rather long and straight on its legs, and very lively and businesslike.

The Green Yorkshire is valued for the purity and brilliancy of its colour, and should be without any black feathers in the back; this makes a very good cross when colour is desired. The dark feathers in the tail should be very glossy, the colour of the body feathers a brilliant green and even all over, and birds of this colour should bear the same characteristics as the clear varieties.

At Pairing Time.

A great many of the failures which occur every year are through breeders being over-anxious to pair. A week or so before pairing, the birds should be given a more nutritious diet than their ordinary food, such as stale bread-crumbs or powdered biscuit mixed with hard-boiled eggs; the egg should be grated through a small sieve. Also a few grains of hemp, and a little niga seed, and water-cress given every other day will be found very beneficial. This extra nourishment brings them on to lay much quicker, and greatly assists in fertilising the eggs.

The birds having been paired a few days, you may look forward to the hens building their nests. The hen generally lays her eggs between five and eight in the morning, and these, as a rule, are four in number, but sometimes five; they are generally laid one every morning, but sometimes a hen may miss one morning and lay the next.

The best plan is to take the eggs out of the nest every morning as they are laid, and put them carefully in some dry bran in a box kept for the purpose and divided into sections, these being numbered to correspond with the cages. Put the eggs back again into the nest in the evening of the day the third egg is laid; by this means the young birds will generally hatch out at one time, which is a most desirable thing, as birds which are hatched a number of hours before the others of course get more food, and consequently grow and get much stronger than those hatched later.

In Case of Egg Binding.

If, on the morning you expect a hen to lay, you find her at the bottom of the cage with her feathers ruffled up and breathing very hard, she is most probably what is called egg-bound, and must be attended to at once.

Get a little castor oil and warm it at the fire, and apply a little to the vent, placing the bird gently back again on the nest. This will generally relieve her of the egg in about an hour; if not, she should be held over a jug of boiling water for about ten minutes, the steam being allowed to penetrate all round the abdomen.

By this method the egg will sometimes be laid in the hand, or it will drop in the jug, or very soon after she is placed in the nest. Great care must be taken in handling the bird, that the egg may not be broken by any pressure of the hand before it is laid, for if the egg is broken in the oviduct, it will certainly kill the hen.

Many breeders run two hens with one cock; this is one of the advantages of using the double breeding-cages. In breeding on this plan, it will be necessary to hang two nest-pans in the cage, one at each end, leaving the sliding partition open for the cock bird to pass to and fro. It sometimes happens that the hens will not agree at first, for a little jealousy springs up between them; but the cock bird will very soon settle matters between them, and in a few days they will become perfectly friendly to each other, and go about building their nests.

When the young birds are hatched, take a look at the nest the first thing every morning, to see that the young ones are all right and that none have died; a good supply of egg-food should always be kept in the cage, and should not be allowed to turn sour, or it will be certain to produce diarrhoea, which, if not noticed in time, will kill off the birds quickly. A little green food should always be placed between the wires for the hens to feed with, care being taken to remove all stale pieces from the cage.

When fully fledged, the young birds get a bit restless and stand on the edge of the nest-pan. A watchful eye should now be kept on the hen, as she will be thinking of going to nest again, and some hens pluck the feathers from the young birds to line their new nest with. This must be avoided by giving the hen plenty of nesting material, and by placing the young birds in a nursery-cage hung on the wires of the breeding-cage; the parents will then feed them through the wires, and the cock will look after them when the hen has gone to nest again. A little egg-food and a little crushed seed should be supplied to the young birds to peck at and to teach themselves to feed with.

When they are about six weeks old they can generally crack seed themselves, and should be gradually weaned off the cracked seed on to the ordinary canary and summer rape seed and egg-food, and placed in a flight-cage or aviary to grow as much as possible before the moulting season sets in.

The best time to begin giving colour feed to either old or young is before they are actually in the moult; as, when the feathers begin to drop, it is a sign that the roots of the new feathers have displaced the old ones, showing that the new growth had begun its operations some time previously, and that the birds should have been colour-fed, so as to get even colour throughout.

In commencing to colour-feed young birds, it is necessary to begin doing so early. The first nest should be ten weeks old, the second eight weeks, and the third six weeks old, when put on the feed.

For old birds it is more difficult to find out the exact time, as they will have to be watched more closely. If they are given the feed about the middle of July, especially the cock birds, you will most likely get the best results. The hen birds, if to be colour-fed, will require more watching, as they may be feeding their last nest of young, in which case it will have to be delayed till the young are fledged.

A CELEBRATED GREENFINCH.

"NORTHERN STAR"

This champion Greenfinch, "Northern Star," the death of which was recorded in our last week's issue, was exhibited with great success by its owner, Mr. W. Fairhurst, of Ardwick, Manchester. Among its many prizes were firsts at Liverpool, Ardwick and Manchester, Halifax, Leicester, Warrington, Carlisle, etc.

How to Fit it Up.

By STANLEY DARE, Bridgeton.

IT is about eight months since I wrote last to CAGE BIRDS, saying that I had returned to civil life once more, and that, although I had sold all my birds previous to joining up, I decided to take up the fancy again with even more vigour.

In that letter I made a suggestion that Roller fanciers should put their shoulders to the wheel and finally oust the German import from our isles, and whilst I am concerted enough to think a good few fanciers acted upon my suggestion, I am not satisfied that the idea has been knocked far enough home, and this is what is surely needed.

I cannot describe how pleased I felt when I opened my CAGE BIRDS on Saturday morning and read the account of the Fleet Street meeting, and Mr. W. H. Vale's paper. I shall be like a hen on hot bricks until I get the next number. (Cheer oh! Are we down-hearted? No; not if it costs 3d.) I'll wager that there is not one reader of CAGE BIRDS that would miss his copy on Saturday, even though he had to choose between it and his breakfast.

If a man or woman loves his or her birds they will certainly give them the best of treatment, and to be able to do so they need to be constant readers of CAGE BIRDS, and thereby give the birds the full benefit of the "two heads are better than one" policy.

Now to come back to earth, as it were, meaning Rollers and Germany; if there is anything connected with that God-forsaken country that I sympathise with it is those dear little mites of Canaries that were there at the outbreak of hostilities.

I have no doubt that some of my fellow readers will have seen the aviaries, and know the conditions under which Rollers are bred in Germany, but for the benefit of those who have not been there I will endeavour to give a brief outline of the methods, and to those who are interested I would say, copy the following system and you will be surprised how easily you can pay the extra bit of rent necessary for the room to accommodate the birds.

In the first place strip off all wallpaper, and then dust the walls well with finely powdered camphor tar balls. Now proceed to limewash well, giving one thick coat only, and don't forget to put plenty of size in the wash, and a little carbolic. Put a good sprinkling of Jeyes' fluid all over the floor, and then a good layer of limewash the same as you used for the walls and ceiling.

Leave this upon the floor for a few days, and in the meantime you can be arranging perching accommodation, or a few shrubs, tubs, etc., or any kind of resting places that your fancy takes. Around the walls, at about two feet apart, place good sized nesting boxes each to hold two nests, in which you have placed the usual nest pans and linings.

If your room is a good height you can put another row of nesting places higher up than the first, and all round the room. So the size of the latter is 12ft. by 9ft. and 10ft. high, you would then be able to put up about 24 boxes, and use about 12 pairs of birds, say six cocks and 18 hens.

Having proceeded so far with nesting places, perches, etc., take some good hard soap and scrub the floor well. Allow it to dry well, and then cast down a layer of gold sand. Place a seed hopper at each end of room, and hang tins of sharp grit where will not get fouled. Build an inner door half-inch wire mesh net to allow you in and out, and cover up the window with similar netting, but leave yourself the means of opening and closing window a little according to the weather.

Having placed a few big bundles of nesting material and, of course, your birds, you have a small "German" bird room of your own complete, with the exception of a big organ, but this omission can be overcome by introducing a good schoolmaster, and you may proceed with all good luck and best of wishes.

"W. H. F.," in "The Field," says that at Salonika the Tree Sparrow is "certainly commoner than the House Sparrow."

I was much interested to see the excellent portrait of my yellow Norwich hen in this week's CAGE BIRDS, writes Dr. Weekes. There is one little error in the description: I live at Southampton, and not at Bournemouth, as stated.

Cod liver oil is being used very largely for rearing youngsters. Liverine, Ltd., Gimsby, who are manufacturers of the oil, make a very good food which contains 15 per cent. of the necessary oil. It is being sold by seed dealers in 2d. packets and 1s. 6d. bags.

Muirkirk show committee has held its annual general meeting, writes Mr. James G. Torbett, secretary, and all last year's officers were unanimously re-elected. It was decided to hold the annual show on Saturday, Nov. 11, the proceeds to go to the War Relief Fund. As the surplus of the last two shows, amounting to £15 7s., was handed over to this deserving fund, we can surely hope for the support of fanciers.

A Fine Result.

Mr. Hutchinson, sec. of the West Stanley F.F. and C.B.S., writes that the receipts of the recent patriotic show held by the society amounted to £23 15s. 9d., and that from the funds help was given to 71 wounded soldiers.

OUR PAPER, "CAGE BIRDS."

Its Price and Contents.

We are pleased to have again to acknowledge many expressions of goodwill and of sympathy in the difficulties under which we are placed for a time in consequence of the shortage of paper. We have not the space to publish the individual letters, but we would call especial attention to the letter from our old reader and contributor, Mr. Dan McArthur, published in our correspondence columns this week.

We need scarcely say how fully we agree with Mr. McArthur in his statement, that there are thousands of our readers who simply keep birds as pets, and are entirely outside of trade considerations in the pursuit of their bird-keeping. We are quite sure that they have experiences to recount which would be of great interest if only they would put them on paper. Our columns are open, and we hope that the suggestion of our worthy friend frae Bonnie Scotland will be widely acted upon.

Many people are diffident in committing their ideas to paper for publication, and fear they would not be of sufficient interest to others. It is just such as these who have really the most interesting things to tell if they would be persuaded to tell them, and we hope that the outcome of Mr. McArthur's letter will be that we shall have the pleasure of publishing many accounts from those to whom he specially appeals.

Friendly Dippers.

A correspondent to the "Manchester Dispatch," says that although it is a common belief that only one pair of Dippers frequent any particular stretch of water, yet under a bridge over a river in Wales two nests are to be found, and a photograph of them has been taken.

A Rare Robin in Manchester.

Mr. W. W. Pettigrew, superintendent of the city parks, says the "Manchester Guardian," has observed in the Southern Cemetery, among other curious variations from type, a golden Robin, perfectly golden coloured except for a slight bronzing on the breast.

Watcham, Not Hatcham.

In your report of the Crested C.C. meeting, writes Mr. A. J. Watcham, you give my name as "Hatcham" for the new auditor. Although a very appropriate name for a Canary man, I shall esteem it a favour if you will make the correction. [We are glad to make the correction as desired, and may, perhaps, be pardoned for saying that Watcham seems for an auditor even a more appropriate name than Hatcham. As for the poor printer, who has to take the blame, we would say that it happens all too frequently that he has to guess at proper names that are not written distinctly.]

Jail Birds.

The Glasgow "Bulletin" in its issue of May 18 has a photograph of two young Thrushes in a nest built in a cell window of Linwood Police Station.

Bit of a Shock, Though.

A story is going the rounds that playing over Harrow golf links a golfer drove a ball into a hedge. Subsequently it was discovered in a nest in which there were several young birds. The birds were uninjured.

"It's an Ill Wind..."

Starlings and Sparrows, says "The Times," are the two creatures which conspicuously profit by the war. Every house that is blown to bits by shell fire provides an endless choice of fascinating nesting-places for Sparrows among the chinks of the ruined walls; and never did Starlings have such opportunities for unmolested housekeeping as in the remains of these poor battered churches.

Canaries of a Past Century.

(Communicated by J. ROGERSON.)

I AM sending an extract on "The Canary Bird" from my book "The Bird Fancier" of 1842, in the hope that it may prove as interesting to other present-day fanciers as it has been to myself.

This bird has its name from the Canary Islands, situated on the western coast of Africa, from whence they originally came. They were first brought into Europe in the beginning of the sixteenth century, and have ever since been domesticated with us, and from their beauty and powers of song, deserved favourites.

An Odd Explanation.

Their primitive colour was grey, darker on the back and sides, and greenish underneath; but from the change of climate and domestication, and mixture with other birds there is now a great variety of colour. The most valued are those of a beautiful bright yellow bespangled with an intermixture of jet-black spots, with little or no white about them. The next are the Mealy, so called from the mealy kind of colour which seems to cover all the feathers, so that there is no other colour perfect; yet in breeding, their young ones are often as finely coloured as the best.

The Chestnut, which are the most uncommon, and the white or yellow with the head, wings and tail, black-yellowish, dun or grey, are also highly esteemed. The mottled ones are little thought of unless they are marked in a pretty and regular way. The least esteemed are those that are white or yellow with irregular black and brownish spots, or are part ash colour, buff or grey; these last, though of a bad colour, are often in other respects as good birds as any. Those with the upper part a dusky grey, or Linnet brown and yellowish-green underneath, with dark brown eyes, are the strongest birds and most resemble the primitive race. The yellow and white with red eyes are the most tender.

Forefathers of the Rollers.

Canary birds vary much in their notes, some singing soft and low, others loud and clear; some have a long song and a greater variety of notes. Those are the most prized which introduce in their own song passages from that of the Nightingale, or which imitate the notes of the Woodlark. They are remarkable for correctness of ear and for the ease with which they learn and remember musical sounds. For this reason, in bringing up young birds, and also after the first and second moulting, care should be taken to keep

Just as Well.

In giving a list of Hoopoes shot between 1842 and 1902 in the Orkney Islands, "P." in a letter to "The Scotsman," says: "I doubt if any other county in Scotland can show a record as to the visits of this very handsome bird equal to that of the Orkneys."

When the Wind Blows

the Cradle Will Rock

Each spring the accounts of curious nesting-places are of such frequent appearance in our daily newspapers as to attract but little attention. One, however, which is recorded in an article "Birds and Flowers at the Front," from the special correspondent of "The Times," is worthy of special notice. It is as follows: "But the chief discovery has been the quaintest Treecreeper's nest, close by the house, built, not in a hole in a tree, but slung, more like the nest of some sort of warbler, among the leaves where the branches of a tree are webbed together with ivy. It is an absurd place for a Treecreeper's nest; but the boldness of the birds in visiting it with their mouths full of building material leaves no possible doubt of its identity."

HOW IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.

"From my advt. in CAGE BIRDS I could have sold my birds over and over again. I had letters from all over the British Isles, and replied to all who sent stamps. I think CAGE BIRDS a grand paper."—F. COLLINS (Cambridge.)

"Allow me to add my evidence to that of others showing the value of advertising in CAGE BIRDS. Owing to joining direct for service in the R.E. I decided to sell the whole of my stock, and have now completed the disposal of birds. Some have gone to Scotland, and a few to Wales, but the majority have been purchased by London fanciers. The cash received has been invested in War Certificates, and so the money is doing its bit also."—F. W. HAMILTON (Southfields.)

"I should like to let you know that it was impossible to answer all enquiries from the small advertisement of my Norwich last week. I sold all in one lot."—S. T. JONES (Lynton.)

"Please thank those who applied for the six Norwich Canaries I advertised in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL. I had enquiries from all over the country, and have replied to all those who sent stamps."—J. GIBBONS (Wolverhampton.)

them alone that they may hear nothing bad, or at any rate only such as you wish them to imitate. They may be taught to repeat correctly two or three airs from a flute or bird organ, or even a few short words.

The "Colony" System Seventy-five Years Ago.

The rearing of Canaries requires care and attention, but they may be brought up as strong and healthy as in the country from which they came. Those reared in large aviaries, where they enjoy fresh air and have plenty of room for exercise, are most robust and vigorous. If you have a room for breeding them let it be towards the sun rising, for they require warmth, and sunshine in the room in the morning makes it warm in the room all day. The room should not be overstocked; if it is pretty large ten or twelve pairs may be kept, but it is always better for those intended for pairing to be kept together seven or eight days in a small cage before being turned into the room. Twice or more females than males may be kept.

The Problem of Sex Breeding.

The most usual way of breeding them is in cages, for the purpose made large, so they may have room to fly about. The time for pairing them is the middle of March, and the breeding season lasts till September. Those that are chosen for breeding should be stout and healthy birds; the males not more than from two to five years old. It is found that young males paired with older females produce more males than females. Those with bright colours and regular, distinct spots will be most certain to produce handsome young ones. When both parents are crested birds, the young are apt to be bald or otherwise disfigured. Long and strong claws and blackish and rough scales are signs of an old bird.

They breed four or five times in the year, and commonly lay four, five, or six eggs. They generally begin to lay seven or eight days after pairing, and sit thirteen days. As soon as they have hatched the eggs, besides their common food give them a mixture of white bread soaked in water, and then squeezed, and a quarter of a hard egg, white and yolk, mixed up very small. This must be kept in a small vessel, and in another rapeseed which has been boiled and then well washed to take away its acidity. Fresh food should be given every day, and particular care be taken that the rape seed is not sour, for if it is it will certainly kill them. They should remain with the mother till they are fledged and can feed themselves.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE YORKSHIRE CANARY.

—By—
C. A. HOUSE.

The Giant Lancashire, the upright Belgian, and the chubby Norwich, are all said to be represented in "The Bird of Grace and Beauty," as seen on the show-benches to-day.

THIS is not a scientific article, nor one of a highly technical character, but a plain, practical one, in which the writer will endeavour to show how, by the constant and continual selection of the highest and best forms by the breeder's art, the Yorkshire Canary of to-day has been evolved from the coarse, ungainly, slovenly bird which was known as a Yorkshire Canary some half a century or more ago.

The breed named after the county of broad acres is not one of the oldest; in fact, it may almost be said to be one of the most modern, as the London Fancy, the Belgian, the Lizard, the Lancashire, and the Norwich were all known and, comparatively speaking, largely bred before ever the Yorkshire, as the Yorkshire, was known.

How it first made its appearance is, like many other things, somewhat obscured by the lapse of years, and the fact that of the early days of the Canary Fancy, as a Fancy, we have few reliable records.

This is not to be wondered at when one considers that it was not until the twentieth century was out of its swaddling bands that we had a journal devoted solely to the chronicling of the doings of the breeders of Canaries and other cage birds.

The "Bar Sinister."

Some records of the past tell us that the Yorkshire was evolved from the crossing of the Lancashire and Norwich varieties, others that it is the result of a blend of the Lancashire and the Belgian, whilst others aver that the original Yorkshire was simply the wastrel Lancashire. As the Irishman said, "There cannot be smoke without fire," and for the purposes of this article we may, I think, take it that there is a modicum of truth in each of these divergent claims.

In the ages that are gone the stronghold of the Yorkshire breed was the villages and towns immediately on the border of the two great Northern counties, and in those days, and those immediately preceding them, it seems very possible that the Yorkshire and the Lancashire were practically one and the same bird; but the Yorkshiresmen wishing, like the Lancastrians, to have a breed named after their own county, took the finest and slimmest of Lancashire birds, and, by careful selection and mating, made them somewhat different from the originals. The style was undoubtedly introduced from the Belgian, which also supplied the fine head and neck and neat whip tail, so characteristic to-day of the bird of grace and elegance.

Not content with effecting improvements in the contour and carriage of their birds, the early Yorkshire breeders wanted to make them more attractive still, and thus resorted to the Norwich to obtain colour and quality of feather.

In those days the Norwich, as it was naturally produced, was far more a bird of colour than it is to-day, for the breeders of the rich-hued ones often dipped into the Lizard blood to improve both quality of feather and richness of colour.

This would account for the shortening of the Yorkshire compared to its progenitor, the Lancashire. I cannot remember the bird itself more than forty years back, but I have known and talked with fanciers who could speak of fifty and sixty years ago.

Old Time Yorkshires.

From them, and from illustrations which I have seen of the early Yorkshires, that is, in the days when the breed had become established, it was a smaller bird than it is to-day. The Lancashire undoubtedly is a bolder, stronger, and more massive fellow than his ancestors of the time of which I write, and bears now the same relative shape and size to the modern Yorkshire that his forefathers did to the forerunners of the slim and graceful ones.

Some years ago there passed to that bourne whence none return one of the oldest of the old Yorkshire breeders and exhibitors, Mrs. Luke Belk, of Dewsbury. Mrs. Belk had in her possession an illustration which I believe was the first ever produced, in a newspaper, of a Yorkshire Canary. The originals were a pair of birds owned by this lady's husband, and had some renown as winners of copper kettles, which were the principal prizes in those days.

These birds were much smaller than the Yorkshires of to-day. When I say smaller, I mean they were less both in substance and length, and they were not so upright in carriage. Except that they were not so neat in the head, they were somewhat similar to the Border Fancy of to-day, although rather more robust and rotund.

Judging from my conversations with Mrs. Belk, and my sight of the drawings of those old-time champions, I should say that in those days the Belgian had been used to get the fineness, but that the after introduction of the Norwich, which most probably was made from the hen's side, had destroyed the erectness of carriage which one would associate with the grafting of the Belgian stock on the original Yorkshire.

In those days, as now, there were turbulent spirits in the Fancy, men who, not content with improvement by natural selection and evolution, sought to change the breed by the introduction of more alien blood. They wanted something larger. This craving led to the reintroduction of the Lancashire blood, with its attendant looseness of feather, heavy, flat heads, strong beaks, and broad shoulders. Such was the bird at the time when I first remember it forty years ago.

Just previously to this the Fancy had been given the first edition of the late R. L. Wallace's Canary Book. This, the first work published dealing with the Canary Fancy from a general Fancy standpoint, was published in 1875, and was followed three years later by "Canaries and Cage Birds," the Canary section being from the pen of that most versatile and brilliant writer, the late W. A. Blakston.

The Real and the Ideal.

Although only an interval of three years separated the publication of these two works, the illustrations of the Yorkshire Canary in each were vastly different. In both the drawings were quite unlike the winning birds of the period, the artists presumably sketching from an ideal and not from life.

Certain birds were sent from Yorkshire to the artist for Blakston's great work, I know, but the plates given were not portraits of the same. If it were otherwise, how comes it that the type which breeders are striving to perpetuate to-day is that given in this work of nearly forty years back?

Those of my readers who remember the Yorkshire at the time mentioned will, I think, agree with me that they were not, except in the imagination of the artist, the fine slim birds which were portrayed as representative of the breed at that time. The old idea that a Yorkshire should pass through a lady's wedding ring was the lofty ideal at which breeders of the day aimed but never attained, and this has not yet been attained even by the more keen and scientific breeders of the twentieth century.

NICKNAMES OF WILD BIRDS.

From an interesting article in the "Nottingham Guardian," by Mr. Arthur Sharp, we extract the following:—

It is extremely interesting to note that in different localities people have given various names to birds which are particularly conspicuous by some distinctive trait or mark of plumage. Some of these local appellations have a peculiar interest as showing how some country dwellers have observed the little oddities of our feathered choristers, and given them pet names, or nicknames, which have been handed down from one generation to another.

Whilst many of the appellations have little or no meaning beyond the sudden fancy of some rural observer, or beyond expressing some distinctive feature or characteristic of a particular bird, others possess certain legendary value that is a welcome addition to British folk-lore.

Amongst the familiar small birds of the hedgerow the pretty little Chaffinch is happily blessed with quite a delightful list of appropriate names. Every boy worth calling a boy is well acquainted with this perky little fellow and its beautiful cup-like nest of moss and lichen, so fragile, yet so wonderfully fashioned beyond the skill of mere man.

This little warbler is commonly known as "spink" or "spinky," in many places, whilst in Wales it is often called the "pink," owing, no doubt, to its familiar call of "pink-pink!" In Northumberland it is sometimes termed the "apple-sheeler," and in other parts as the "sheeler." "Weetie" is yet another pretty name by which it is recognised in the north country, and is evidently derived from its cry of "weet! weet!" which it is said to utter on the near approach of wet weather. "Pinky," "scobbie," "flax-linnet," and "French Linnet," are amongst other names by which the Chaffinch is known in different localities.

That wee pretty warbler, the Wren—and what a delightful little song it gives us!—can boast broadly of a host of names. "Jenty" or "Jinty" is a popular term in parts of the Midlands, given, no doubt, on account of the little jerky way in which it flirts its straight-up tail when sitting on a tree-branch; for a similar reason it is called "stump-tail" in various districts. "Jenny Wren" is another familiar name, and one that is most appropriate. Then it is termed "cutty" in Wales, and "kitty-ma-wren" in the North of England.

Have you noticed that pretty yellow-green bird flitting about the low hedgerows and the banksides during spring and summer, or swinging on the lower branches of some tree, trilling its long-drawn-out cadences: "A—little—bit—of—bread—and—no—c-h-e-e-s-e!" It is the Yellow Bunting. Although so familiar, many people fail to locate its cunningly hidden nest beneath the hedgerow or in a tussock of grass. Many of us, however, are familiar with the curiously-marked eggs of this warbler. What peculiar zig-zag markings and blotches they have, as though someone had been sketching upon them with pen and ink and sketching in a careless and zig-zaggy manner! Owing to this peculiar feature it is known in some parts as the "scribbling lark," and also as the "yolding."

The Mistle Thrush, so often heard singing its loudest in early spring, prior to a storm, is often called the "Storm-cock." "Sycock" is another name it rejoices in, and it used to be known as the "Mistletoe Thrush," which has evidently been construed into the latter-day name of "Mistle Thrush." There is a tradition that this bird first brought over the seeds of the mistletoe from Normandy, hence its name. In the North it is occasionally spoken of as "Jeremy Joy," or "January Joy," probably from the fact that it often sings at that early period.

Capturing the Canary Trade and Helping Wounded Soldiers.

The Chairman's Views on the Organisation: Thanks from the Wounded, and Further Offers of Help.

A grandly representative meeting of the Committee was held at CAGE BIRDS Offices, 154, Fleet Street, on Monday, May 22, when there were present Messrs. F. Carl, G. Crabb, T. East, H. J. Fulljames, H. W. Gutierrez, J. Jeffrey, H. J. Kybert, G. H. Maclellan, J. W. Ramsden, J. Robson, T. R. Trower, and W. H. Vale.

Mr. Carl was elected Chairman of the organisation, and after thanking the committee for the compliment, explained the objects of the double scheme of affording assistance to wounded or otherwise disabled soldiers in making a fresh start in their hobby, and of so organising the breeding of Canaries in England that we should be able to supply from our own resources the world's demand for singing birds.

He said that the two schemes, though related, were distinct the one from the other. The success of the charitable part depended upon the goodness of heart of the British public, especially that portion of the public who were readers of CAGE BIRDS. Much had been done even in the first week or two, and already many men who had done their bit for the country had reason to thank those who had at once come forward with their gifts either in money or in kind.

The success of the wider scheme of capturing the world's trade in Canaries for the benefit of English Canary breeders depended upon the endeavours of those he was proud to see around him, and of those who had offered their help and advice though unable to attend the meetings of the committee.

There was much to be done, but he was sure that there were no obstacles that were insurmountable. No effort of his own would be spared, and the work of himself and staff was at the disposal of the committee. Efficient organisation and well directed efforts could accomplish wonders; he would just mention as an instance the National Egg Collection, which he had started for the purpose of supplying new-laid eggs for soldiers in hospital. In the first week of its existence the contributions of eggs amounted to thirty-six. In Queen Alexandra week more than a million were collected through the organisation, and during Easter week the eggs sent in reached the enormous total of nearly a million and a half.

The National Egg Collection was simply a charitable organisation, and the eggs collected represented gifts from all parts of the country, the remotest villages contributing their share. What had been possible in the name of charity was surely probable as a matter of business, and patriotic business at that. He was sure that in time the organisation of the supply of British Canaries could be made a profitable undertaking, and though at the beginning there would be difficulties, and perhaps not much to show, yet difficulties were made to be overcome, and results would increase until perhaps the success might be as far ahead of original anticipation as had been the case with the National Egg Collection.

The members of the committee as already constituted were all men of great practical experience in the rearing of Canaries, and among them were long-headed men of business, whose business experience would be of inestimable help. He had no doubt of the success of their endeavours, and he appreciated the honour they had conferred upon him by electing him their chairman.

The report of the sub-committee who had enquired into the cost of production of Canaries and the amount of profit which might reasonably be expected was read, and an interesting discussion ensued, during which everyone present gave his views. As a result the figures given by the sub-committee are to be revised in some degree, and will then form a basis upon which recommendations will be made.

It was decided to appoint a treasurer and establish a banking account, and it was agreed that Mr. R. L. Cole be invited to fill the position of hon. treasurer.

It was agreed that for the present at least the committee should meet weekly at CAGE BIRDS offices, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., the next meeting to be on Monday, May 29, at 7.30, at which meeting in a report of progress to date will be prepared for publication in CAGE BIRDS of June 3.

Some Letters of Thanks.

SIR,—Thanks to the generosity of the readers of your valuable paper, and one kind lady, Mrs. Wolferstan, in particular, I am the recipient of a pair of lovely birds, viz., Norwich Crests. I am more than delighted with them. They have already nested, and you can guess I wish them luck. Well, sir, I hope all the boys will be as pleased with theirs as I am with mine. I wish your paper the success it so richly deserves, and again thank Mrs. Wolferstan and all connected with the scheme.

The Submarines Missed These.

SIR,—I write to inform you that I have received quite safely the pair of splendid green Yorkshires, the kind gift of Mr. Rossignol, of Jersey. It is hard for me to express how grateful I am to you for your efforts on my behalf, but you may rest assured that everything done for me has been greatly appreciated, and I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

An Ilkeston Soldier Returns Thanks.

SIR,—I received the pair of birds from Mr. Thornton this morning, May 19. I shall be pleased if you will, through CAGE BIRDS, thank both Lieut. Pyman and Mr. Thornton for their kindness. I have written thanking Mr. Thornton for sending them. Good luck to CAGE BIRDS, and I hope your scheme will be a huge success.

Some Suggestions from a Huddersfield Reader.

SIR,—We must all unite in thanking you for the wonderful way in which you are striving to materialise a scheme for the production of British-bred Canaries, and to oust the German Canary trade from our midst.

It will need the assistance of every individual member of the Canary Fancy, and I hope that all will seize the opportunity now and be determined to do their best to help you and your colleagues to bring this important undertaking to a successful issue.

What Germany has done, we can do, and do more. First of all we must consider the question of giving material assistance to the disabled soldiers, and obtaining sufficient funds by public subscription for the maintenance of the scheme. It will mean perhaps several years of hard work before there is a profitable return.

Much has been said already, and various reasons have been suggested for the furtherance of the scheme, but as time goes on fresh ideas will formulate that will be a benefit to all concerned.

For the inexperienced breeder, the method most likely to produce a maximum amount of birds, at a minimum of cost, is to put a Norwich cock to two Roller hens. The young from this cross are hardy, make excellent songsters, and are above all prolific breeders.

For the more experienced, it would be advisable to take up any of the well-known varieties of pure-bred birds. Invaluable advice could be given by the experienced men that would be a great help to the scheme.

After the breeding season I would suggest there being a receiving centre, a place fixed upon where the birds could be sent to be classified, and after breeders have been supplied for the following season, let the surplus go to the dealers for export.

Why not form a Canary-breeding Society, and call it the British Canary-Breeding Association? A small subscription could be charged for membership, committees formed, and the system if thoroughly organised would be bound to be a success. As has already been suggested, it would be necessary to work it on co-operative principles; it would be expected of everyone concerned to work jointly without a thought of individual profit.

If I lived nearer the metropolis I would willingly offer my services as organiser, but it wants someone within easy reach of London.

E. FAIRHURST.

With regard to the three Norwich hens offered by Mr. T. C. Crawhall in our last issue, Mr. Crawhall writes that he has given the No. 1 yellow hen to Quartermaster Sergt. J. H. Cockayne, of the R.F.A., who was wounded in the first battle of Ypres, and is permanently lame. Mr. Crawhall's letter is reproduced below.

SIR, Since writing making my offer of the three hens I had an enquiry from a wounded soldier (B.Q.M.S. J. H. Cockayne, 2nd Reserve Battery, R.F.A., in Reserve Brigade, R.F.A., Newcastle-on-Tyne) for a yellow hen, and as he is now in Newcastle I invited him to come over to my place. He came over last night, and I gave him the yellow hen I offered.

Q.M.S. Cockayne was wounded in the leg at the first Ypres battle, and is permanently lame, though able to do fighter work in the Army still, and as he is in a position to pay something I have asked him to send what he thinks to your fund. He has been a fancier all his life, and I sincerely hope that he may be able to rear a nest of youngsters from the hen. Up to the present the season is going very well for me. I have hatched 41, of which 38 are alive and doing well, and I hope that after the moult I may be able to offer you something more for your fund. These will be younger, though I dare not say better than I have offered this week.

Knocked Out But Not Finished.

SIR, You will see by this letter I am in hospital. I had the misfortune to run up against some German shrapnel at Ypres, so I got it in the thigh and groin, but I am almost fit again, and I expect will shortly be in the line once more. I have been reading in CAGE BIRDS of your grand scheme of helping our wounded men to start in the fancy. I am a time-expired artillery man, but rejoined at the outbreak of war. I kept a few pairs of Yorkshires, and was just about to embark on some classical stuff, but I had to part with them when I rejoined. I would be thankful if you would put me on your list for a re-start, or if some of your readers would sell a small stud cheap at the conclusion of the war. I wish CAGE BIRDS and all the fancy a successful year. Enclosed is a small group taken in the hospital grounds, with your humble marked X.

Sgt. HUGH CATHCART, R.F.A.

[The photograph is of a group of wounded soldiers and their nurses, taken in the grounds of the Beaufort War Hospital, Fishponds. It is only postcard size, and there are fourteen figures in the group. We regret, therefore, that the faces are too small to permit of satisfactory reproduction in our columns, for we should have been very glad to publish a very interesting little picture.—Editor.]

SIR,—Re your fund "Canaries for Wounded Soldiers," I have an Alexandrine Parakeet and cage, costing me 35s., for which I can show receipt. I also have a talking warranty with the bird. If you can sell it I will give any surplus over £1 to your fund.

Who Wants a Cycle Frame?

SIR,—I have a lady's cycle frame, 22in., to dispose of. It is in a good condition, it has two brakes, and these with the handlebars cost 7s. 6d. a short while ago. I think the frame complete will be worth all out 12s. 6d. If anyone wishes to bargain for it, they may send their offers to you, and half of the purchase money will go to the fund. I will give further assistance later on.

E. FAIRHURST.

SIR,—I promise you a good Norwich cock later on after the breeding season. I have been a reader of CAGE BIRDS for 12 years, and have got much information out of it.

A. SCOTT.

SIR,—I have 10 double and single breeding cages I will part with if you have any wounded soldier for them; stained and varnished outside, painted light blue inside, all ready for use (might want washing out). I will sell the 10 cages for £1, that would be about half price, all complete with nest pans and hangers, drinkers, sliding partitions, etc. I cannot afford to give them, but will accept this low price to help some poor cripple, and I hope you will get a bigger offer so that the surplus may go to your fund.

"CAGE BIRDS" ROLL OF HONOUR.

A. E. Raper, Gorton.

SIR, I am sorry to have to report the death of one of our members, Albert Ernest Raper, of Gorton, who was killed in action at the Dardanelles, June 4 (previously reported missing). Our deepest sympathy goes out to the family and relatives in the loss of their loved one.

SOME NOTES FROM A SOLDIER FANCIER.

Mr. A. Kuaggs, Guisborough, kindly sends us a letter received from a soldier member of the Guisborough Priory C.B.S., now in Egypt, a portion of which we have pleasure in publishing for the interest of our readers. It is as follows:—

Dear Friends,—When I look back upon the pleasant times we have had together I think I am justified in addressing you as such. Since you last saw me I have become a traveller on a very extensive scale, much larger than I ever dreamt of. I am going to try and give you a brief outline of the bird life as I have seen it out here, and in the places I have been to.

The first that interested me was at Malta, where we stopped for a while. Natives came crowding around the vessel in small boats, selling all kinds of things. Canaries in wicker cages I noticed most of all. Some of them were singing, and others I could see at once were hens. That little deception is not confined to us English fanciers altogether, it seems.

The price of them was very small indeed; I forget exactly what it was now. The crew bought some of them and fed them on hemp seed alone. They seemed surprised when I told them the birds would eventually go sick and die if fed on that alone. They thanked me, and began to look around for some white seed at once.

When I landed at Mudros I was struck by the desolate appearance of the place. All rocks and crags and a brown, dusty soil that seemed to turn our men the same sickly colour. The number of Larks I saw was enormous, and there were a few Linnets and Wagtails as well, but as far as I could see there was no vegetation whatever such as birds seem to delight in. There were little lizards as sharp as lightning, snakes about two feet long that seemed to be half dead, and centipedes that appeared to be seeking something to sting with their numerous legs, each one of which carries a sting, so I am told. The people seemed to be one hundred years behind the times, except in making bargains, in which they were one hundred years ahead—of us, at any rate. It was here that I first met a few of my old acquaintances, which is a very pleasant experience I can assure you out here.

When I was drafted up to the Peninsula we were sent straight up to the reserve trenches or gullies, and at daylight next day I was able to see what kind of a place it was. I found it very mountainous, and covered with brushwood, varying from one foot to eight and ten feet in height, an ideal place for wild birds in time of peace.

I noticed a lot of big Missel Thrushes, and a few Blackbirds, and once more I saw flocks of Linnets flying about. I may add now that later on, when the guns of both parties used to cease fire as if by mutual agreement at breakfast time, I have watched a cock Linnet drop his wings and sing for all he was worth not ten yards from our dug-out. He seemed to take full advantage of the little bit of peace. And when the big guns started banging again the little flock would rise up, startled for a moment, and then settle down again quite unconcerned. But let a shell burst near them, and they were off to fields afresh at once. A lot of them must have been killed at different times by artillery fire, because dirt and stones and pieces of shell fly all over the place, but they would not be driven away altogether, as I saw them as unconcerned as ever on the day we evacuated.

When I got off the Peninsula to an island named Imbros, along with the rest of the men from Suvla, I took quite kindly to the place, as I had begun to get a letter or two from home, and I was able to thin the red mite out a bit with some stuff the wife sent me for that purpose.

I was strolling over to the beach one day when I walked into the finest flock of Goldfinches that it has ever been my lot to see. If I had been an ardent mule breeder (which I am not) I should have turned green, I do believe. As it was I stood among them admiring the fine blazes, etc., of the best of them. They were quite tame, and went on feeding without taking the least notice of me so long as I stood still. Wagtails were common, too, Linnets also, and another black and white bird that I don't know the name of. I saw quite a lot of bird life on that island altogether.

I was next shifted to the place where I am at present, namely, Egypt, the land of camels, Arabs, and fine horses, to say nothing of sandy desert, oranges, tomatoes, eggs, and numerous other things.

I have not seen many birds yet, but I may do so later on. I received a note from my wife that you sent informing me that I had won the novice special, for which I thank you most heartily.

Neighbours for Fourteen Years.

SIR,—On paying a visit to my old friend Mr. John Green, of 31, Hawthorn Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester, I was agreeably surprised to find his cock Goldfinch and Yorkshire cock Canary still in the land of the living.

For fourteen years these two birds have hung side by side in their box cages, and they still look well, their appearance not suggesting they bear such a weight of years; in fact, the Goldie would take some beating if put on the show bench to-day. Surely it must be a record for two birds of these respective species to be close neighbours for such a long period?

You may be sure I asked particularly as to his method of treating these birds, and I found he gave them all the year round a generous seed mixture, plenty of groundsel in season, and fresh water twice a day, frequently during the warm weather three times a day.

Any local fanciers will be welcome to call and see these birds, but they are not for sale. I hope they may live another fourteen years, and sing well for my friend and his wife.

Readers, "Step Forward," Please.

SIR,—I am sorry you are at last compelled to raise the price of the only "birdy" paper, but it must have been anticipated by most of your readers, and there will be few indeed who will stop taking it because of the price. After all, it is a temporary measure only, and it is better than reducing the size or increasing the advertising rates, for advertising keeps the money moving. At a time like this, when we are trying to capture trade from the Huns, a trade paper is absolutely essential, and you must keep the flag flying. Apart from the purely commercial aspect, there is the social side of CAGE BIRDS. You have thousands of readers who are only bird-lovers, and to whom the many delightful articles are meat and drink. It might be a good plan to utilise as many unpaid contributions as possible during the war from such readers. There must be a wealth of pleasurable experiences to be gleaned among them, and if they got an invitation to "step forward" they might come out of their shells, and furnish some good "copy." This week's issue is splendid reading, and the previous week's coloured plate was a fine eye-tonic, though it gave me some covetous qualms into the bargain. I wish you continued success at the new price.

Predatory Wrynecks.

SIR,—I have always respected the beautifully marked Wryneck as a well-conducted bird, but from a letter written by a Hampshire reader to "The Spectator," it would appear to be as bad in its way as its "mate," the Cuckoo. I am sending you the cutting in the interests of readers of CAGE BIRDS who may not be subscribers to the "Spectator."

GENERAL READER.

"I have this morning watched a performance on the part of a Wryneck, which, as it is not recorded by any bird book in my possession, may perhaps be of sufficient interest to justify publication. Last year a pair of these birds noted some nest boxes in my garden as likely building sites, and kept three of them vacant for some time: I watched them eject bit by bit the entire nest of an unlucky Blue Tit, but to my disappointment—I never really sympathised with a house agent before—they departed elsewhere after about a week's hesitation. This spring they have reappeared and resumed the same tactics. A few days ago they made an attempt on a box occupied by a pair of Nuthatches, but were defeated, either by the efforts of the owners, who, though alarmed, struck at the intruder repeatedly, or by the small size of the entrance, which had been reduced by a mud wall built after their fashion by the Nuthatches. This morning my eye was caught by the sudden appearance from another box of a Wryneck and a Great Tit, locked in unequal combat. The poor Tit had no chance in the open, and made off at once. The Wryneck returned directly to the nest, which she started to throw out piecemeal, and three times at short intervals emerged with an egg in her beak, which she carried to an adjacent branch and ate, dropping the empty shell to the ground. An hour later the inside of the box was absolutely clean, from which it would seem that the tenancy, and not the eggs, was the prime object of the attack. At the same time, the charge of egg-snaking is a serious one to bring against any bird, and it would be interesting to know if it can be substantiated against the whole species, or is only the bad habit of a stray individual."

More Exemplary Sires.

SIR,—I have two pairs down now, one Yorkshires, and the other Norwich cock and Roller hen, and they both feed the mother and chicks and look well after the eggs before they are hatched, getting on them as soon as the hen gets off. I had the misfortune to lose a Golden-capped Lizard last year, and it practically died on the nest, for they both used to roost together, and she had to fight him to make him get off. I congratulate you on the penny rise in the price of CAGE BIRDS; it is worth it.

RITA HOLLAND.

SIR,—As I notice that "T. Williams" is surprised at his cock helping to rear the young birds, I send you a sketch I have made of one of my cocks brooding his young; he also, as far as I can see, does all the feeding.

I was very pleased to see from letters in last week's CAGE BIRDS that a fancier has noticed my painting of Love Birds in the Royal Academy.

Bournemouth Treasurer Joins the Colours.

SIR,—I shall be obliged if you will announce in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, that, having joined the Army, I have resigned as hon. treasurer and assist. sec. to the Bournemouth and District C.B.A., and all correspondence now should be sent to Mr. J. W. Jones, Hon. Sec., 156, Holdenhurst Road, Bournemouth. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

A Canary Air Balloon.

SIR,—I enclose a Roller Canary "freak." It was 12 days old when it died, and was bred by Mr. Cottam, shoemaker, Albrighton. Do you think the Zepps. frightened the hen, or do you think the hen is giving the Government a lead in producing airships?

Wolverhampton.

WM. HERWOOD.

[The skin of the young bird was inflated with air to the point of bursting, and was quite transparent, so that the actual body of the bird could be plainly seen inside the air space. How such an object could possibly live for twelve days seems a mystery. The light feathers were nearly a quarter of an inch long, but except for these and a little fluff on the wings and skull there was no trace whatever of feathering.—Editor CAGE BIRDS.]

The Constituent Parts of Bird Seed.

SIR,—I have to thank Mr. Hunt for his courteous and satisfactory reply to my enquiry as to the figures he so kindly contributed. I am sure his article will prove of great assistance to all who study it. The most important factor of all in the successful rearing of any kind of live stock, poultry, pet birds, or anything else, is to feed them intelligently, and in order that we may be able to accomplish this successfully it is absolutely necessary to know the properties of the various foods which we are able to offer them, and Mr. Hunt's article will, I am sure, go a very long way in this direction. PER CENTAGE.

Will Mules Breed?

SIR,—In reply to E. Forrester, allow me to inform him that it is possible to get young from Mules. There have been several instances on record of the fertility of Mules, but they are of very rare occurrence. I know several of the wisacres say that such a thing is impossible, but that does not alter facts. One case that came under my own observation was when young ones were bred from a hen Goldfinch Mule and a cock Linnet. If E. Forrester intends trying his luck in this direction I should advise him to introduce a third species, and not pair, for instance, a hen Goldfinch Mule with a Goldfinch, but rather with a Linnet, Greenfinch, or Redpoll, as I have an idea that herein the secret lies. If successful I hope he will let CAGE BIRDS readers know.

Any Roller Fanciers in Walthamstow?

SIR,—As an old reader of "our" paper, I am pleased to see it again containing something special to read each week. It is still cheap, so don't worry about the price. To me an interesting instalment of an article this week is "The Roller Canary," by Jessie Lawson. It seems there is far too little in the way of books and articles on the breeding and training of this particular bird, and under the exceptional circumstances, with Germany excluded, we might get a move on. The writer of this week's article says that Roller breeding is the most important topic among bird fanciers. That may be in the North of England, but such does not seem to be the case in this part, for after the notice you were kind enough to put in "Twitterings" I received only two replies, and one of those was from an enthusiast as far away as Seven Kings. Still, ours is a patient game, and if any reader this way cares to communicate with me with a view to forming a club I shall be pleased.

Flogging a Dead Horse.

"The Boys' Own Paper" for May contains a delightful article by Mr. T. H. Ferrar about two pet Starlings. In this Mr. Ferrar says: "I feel it incumbent to point out the absurd fallacy that generally exists that in order to enable a bird to talk it is necessary to slit or cut its tongue!"

Mr. Ferrar is, of course, correct in stigmatising this as an absurd fallacy, but he is certainly wrong in saying that it "generally exists." It would be more correct to say that it was once believed by a few, but that few, indeed, now believe in the absurdity. However, the writer of the article stones for the mistake by giving the following explanation of the origin of the fallacy:—

"I have heard that the fallacy of cutting a Starling's tongue in order that the bird may talk originated in the following story:—A man had a number of Starlings in a large cage marked up. 'Fine young Starlings, only one shilling each,' and as each would-be purchaser arrived the man would say: 'There's a fine one there, sir,' pointing out one of them, 'but I shall want half a crown for him, sir, because he's the only one I've got with the tongue slit, so he's bound to be a talker, he is, sir.' He would then proceed to catch the bird and show the slit tongue, and invariably succeeded in effecting a sale. This dodge would be repeated as each new customer arrived and departed, rejoicing at his good bargain. The reader is, perhaps, unaware that all Starlings have a very peculiar formation at the extremity of their tongues, which gives the appearance of a little piece, of a V-shape, snipped out of it; the humour, therefore, of this fraud will be easily appreciated."

At the conclusion of a very interesting contribution Mr. Ferrar tells two amusing stories of his talking Starling "Jack," one of which is as follows:—"Periodically, a gas-inspector calls to check the gas-meter, which is placed immediately over Jack's cage. On one occasion the inspector mounted on a chair to read the index for the amount of gas consumed. Jack called out from below: 'Whatever is it?' when the inspector replied, without looking round, 'It's two thousand less than the corresponding quarter, sir.' 'Whatever is it?' repeated the bird. 'It's two thousand less than the corresponding quarter, sir,' came the answer again. For the third time Jack put his irritating query, when the man, bursting with indignation, turned round to find Jack laughing as heartily as myself at the joke he had played upon him!"

Sugar Birds

By MISS
DYDDGU HAMILTON

Among the many gorgeously-plumaged birds which are to be seen in the Foreign section at any important show, the exquisitely beautiful Sugar Birds, of which several species have been exhibited, are perhaps the most admired of all, and Miss Hamilton in this article contributes some interesting particulars of these delightful birds in a state of nature, as well as telling how to keep them in captivity.

THREE centuries ago, it was universally believed that somewhere in the far interior of northern South America lay the golden land called El Dorado, with its fairy city of Manoa, all gleaming with gold and precious stones.

Sir Walter Raleigh and many travellers and adventurers after him started in search of this new country of fabulous wealth and monstrous inhabitants; nor was it until the beginning of the 18th century that Humboldt finally dispelled the mythical beliefs concerning this rich country far away in the direction of the setting sun.

The Home of the Sugar Birds.

Yet even now a veil of enchantment hangs over the immense stretch of impenetrable forest, and over the grand and fantastically-shaped mountains of the region where Sugar-birds are found, and our knowledge of a great part of their native land is still shadowy and indefinite.

It is a region rich in bird and insect and vegetable life, difficult of access and deadly in climate, a region of abundant rains and rapid rivers. It is but thinly peopled by small tribes of Indians, who are invincibly disinclined to undertake long and arduous journeys of exploration, and therefore this most interesting country still remains the least known parts of the tropics.

The family of Certhiidae, or American Creepers, to which the Sugar-birds belong, is divided into eleven genera, containing 75 species. Their range extends from South Mexico on the north to the Gulf of Guayaquil on the western coast of South America; and to the southern limits of the wood region of South-East Brazil, and the Amazonian valley, on the eastern side of the Andes.

Fifteen species are peculiar to certain of the Antilles, several of them to one island only, and Cereba flavola, the Banana Quit, the type of the typical genus of the family, is found nowhere but in Jamaica.

All the members of the family are called Honeycreepers, or Quit-quits, and are small, brilliantly-coloured birds nearly allied to the Tanagers. The male is always distinguishable by his plumage from the female, who, after the usual manner of bird-kind, is less showily dressed than her mate. The colours are mostly brilliant yellow, blue or green, combined with lustrous black in the wings and tail.

In their wild state these birds feed upon small insects, ripe fruit, and honey. They also frequent caving-houses where sugar is kept, being attracted thither by the abounding swarms of flies and ants.

Perhaps, and Perhaps Not.

Sugar-birds build their domed nests in low trees or bushes where wasps have constructed their paper habitations, and it is said that the birds' object is to secure a position rendered safe from intruders by the presence of these formidable insects, with whom a "league of amity" is established. But considering the greedy way in which the little Sugar-birds devour wasp grub, I have my doubts as to the league of amity.

The most interesting, perhaps, of the species seen on our show benches is the Purple Sugar-bird, Cereba carolinæ, from Caracas; partly because it has been less often seen in England than the Yellow-winged or than the Blue Sugar-bird. The cock bird when in full colour is a beautiful purple blue, much the same glaucous colour as that of the large bell-shaped Centropus aculeatus so common in the Alps.

In the adult male the beak is long, curved, and polished black. The eyes are black. The legs and feet are bright yellowish green, with black nails. Above and below the feathers are a beautiful purple blue; the throat, wings, and tail are a velvety black. The whole length of the bird is about three and a half inches.

The adult female is dull green above; lustrous below she is pale yellowish with dark green variations. Her throat is rufous, and her green legs and feet exactly match her plumage.

If the bird be compared with the lovely little spotted Emerald Tanager, Calliope guttata, the very strong likeness between the Sugar-birds and Tanagers will be readily recognised.

The Prettiest of All

Even more exquisitely beautiful is Cereba cyanæa, the Sul or Yellow-winged Sugar-bird. Its eyes and beak are shining black; its legs and feet coral-red with black nails. The crown of its head is bright turquoise-blue. The inner webs of the secondaries (except the terminal portion), part of the inner webs of the primaries, and part of the under wing-coverts are canary-yellow; the rest of the wings, the tail, the lores, orbits, hind-neck and back are deep black; all the rest of the plumage is a uniform deep sky-blue. The hen is plain dull green above, and pale olive-green below; the wings are partly yellow, as in the male.

The cock bird has a pretty warbling song, and his flight is so rapid, and when hovering on his wings he vibrates them so quickly, that it is almost impossible to perceive the bright daffodil yellow colour from which he derives his name.

Dacnis cayana, the Blue Sugar-bird, has been more often kept in England than either of the other two. It has black eyes and beak, reddish-brown legs and feet, lores, throat, back, flights and tail black; all the rest of the bird bright blue, of much the same shade as the Indigo Bunting. It appears to thrive upon a diet of bananas, sponge cake, yolk of egg, and a good insectivorous food. It is also fond of honey, and would no doubt eat small insects readily.

At the Zoo all the Sugar-birds are fed upon her, but in 24 hours she recovered, and is to-day as fit as a fiddle, and in perfect trim. The cock is still in full colour, and the two are usually caged side by side, but separately.

Both belonging to the long-billed race of this species, they are exceptionally elegant in form, and the male, although not as large as the biggest I have seen, possesses remarkable sheen.

Yellow-winged Sugar birds are quite easy to keep, and excellent "livers." If properly treated they reach a good age, and are a good investment, because they will always fetch at least their original cost price. This pair have been exhibited out of colour twice, singly once, and in full colour together once, at this year's Holborn Show, where they obtained premier position.

I give no solid food except banana, and the artificial nectar in general use I always supply without the usual sponge cake. My Sugar-birds are similarly fed, except that they get a grape instead of a piece of banana, and less or often no milk in their food, and that about half the usual strength.

My cages for these birds are of open wire about 36 by 24 by 14 inches, with three perches at different heights. A "border" pot holds sufficient food for 12 hours, and an inch of banana will last three days. Sawdust is best for the draw covering, and perches should be cleaned by washing every other day.

I supply no artificial heat, and the warmth of an unheated but comfortable and dry living room is sufficient in winter. My bird-room is over my kitchen, and is seldom uncomfortably cold. During excessive cold a "per light" from a gas burner at night is about all the extra warmth that has ever been supplied.

soft food mixture, grapes, oranges, bananas, and a delicious-tasting mixture of syrup and meat juice. I have watched the Purple Sugar-bird feeding upon this, and he sucks it up in long draughts, without raising his head to "say grace," as so many birds do when they drink.

Although they appear such fragile jewels, they are probably no more difficult to keep than our own small insectivorous birds, and while I would not recommend a beginner to spend his money on either, yet to those who have had experience the keeping of the Sugar-birds should offer no insurmountable difficulties.

If kept in a good sized box cage in a warm, well-ventilated room, and carefully fed as recommended above, they should do well and live long, things of beauty to delight the eyes of all beholders, and a joy for ever to their fortunate owners.

Some Additional Notes by Mr. Allen Silver.

The two birds depicted in the accompanying drawing were reported during the spring of 1914. The cock I purchased from Mr. Frostick, and the hen I selected from a succeeding consignment. There were only two hens in the batch, and one of these, bought by Mr. Maxwell, afterwards passed into my hands, then into Mr. Frostick's, and from him back to me again. This bird, I believe, is still alive in a friend's possession. The hen of my pair was almost dead when I bought

The Influence of the Cinnamon.

About thirty-five to forty years ago great efforts were made to improve the quality of feather, and much was done by the use of the cinnamon blood, which had for some time been used by the breeders of evenly-marked Yorkshires, a breed which seems to have almost died out.

These experiments met with great success, and a change for the better was quickly apparent so far as feather properties were concerned. Still, the big birds held sway, despite the efforts of some who were striving even then to reach the wedding ring ideal.

In those days colour was not thought so much of as it was later on, and of the many efforts which have been made to work improvement in the Yorkshire I remember none which have met with more immediate and successful results. For several years the champion birds were really all that one could desire as far as quality of feather was concerned, and even to-day the winning Yorkshires are not upon any higher plane so far as this one property is concerned.

A Deterioration in Feather.

A few years later the size craze again gained the upper hand, and with it disappeared much of the beautiful silkiness of feather which had been produced by the cinnamon blood. The introduction of the "K-N" feeding process had also been closely followed by Yorkshire breeders trying what they could do to vie with their Norwich brethren in the matter of colour.

Thus between the fight for colour and that for size the feather properties were somewhat lost sight of. The birds grew gradually larger and stouter, and were reverting to the old Lancashire-Yorkshire type, fostered in some measure by certain judges who were inclined then, as some have since been, to favour size at the expense of more valuable properties.

Everything comes to those who wait. The lovers of style and quality had waited long for the reaction which came in the closing years of the eighties, and culminated in a series of meetings in different parts of the county in the year 1899.

These meetings, which resulted in the birth of the Yorkshire Union, roused Yorkshire breeders as they had never been roused before. They were made to see that they were on the wrong tack, and that the large, coarse birds were not the beau ideal of what the champions of the breed should be.

From those meetings resulted the Yorkshire Union of Ornithological Societies, a Union which brought the breeders of the county into closer touch with each other, brought about a feeling of keener rivalry, yet at the same time did much to promote good feeling between the different societies constituting the Union.

Fixed Standards Instituted.

Immediately it had settled the formalities connected with its institution and constitution, this body turned its attention to the drawing up of a standard for the different sub-varieties of the breed.

Much enthusiasm was engendered by the work of the Union, shows became better supported, and fanciers attended in larger numbers than they had done before. This led to the greater exchange of ideas, with corresponding improvement in the breed. The Union had said the Yorkshire Canary as it then existed was too long, too stout, and not fine enough in feather, and to this all agreed.

Better still, all set themselves to correct and remove the faults which they acknowledged were in existence. In a couple of years great improvement was seen in the birds which were being shown; they were tighter in feather, displayed more nerve, and were slimmer and finer in body. Gone were the flat skulls with overhanging eyebrows, much of the objectionable breast frill had disappeared, wings and tails were more tightly braced and smartly carried, while there was much improvement in the carriage and deportment of the bodies.

Where the Belgian Came In.

Much of this was due to the introduction of Belgian blood, which certainly gave finer heads and necks and vastly improved the crectness of carriage, even as it conduced to the neater wings and tails.

The Belgian, however, was not responsible for all the improvement. The lovers of colour and silkiness of feather had worked back on to the cinnamon blood, and this was to be seen in the vast increase of birds with pink eyes and cinnamon-marked plumage. So numerous did these cinnamon-marked Yorkshires become that in the third year of its existence the Yorkshire Union Council had to set about the drawing up of a standard of perfection for cinnamon marks, or, as they were more generally called at that time, cinnamon ticks.

It is strange how the craze for size will every now and then rear its dragon-like head and attempt to dominate all breeds. Here was the Yorkshire Canary making rapid progress towards the goal of perfection when the size mania again seized some ardent spirits, and so insidiously and swiftly did they accomplish their work by production of some large birds of good feather, that ere the majority of the breeders could think or act these big birds had caught the judges' eyes, captivated their fancy, and were securing the bulk of the prizes.

Exit Size: Enter Style.

The Yorkshire Union, however, brought matters to a crisis by sending forth to the judges its ukase that the big ones were to be barred. This brought about the dismissal of the big, heavy-feathered birds, since when the Yorkshire Canary has been bred consistently upon better lines, and is to-day a better proportioned, a finer-feathered, and a more stylish bird than it has ever been since the days when it was first divorced from its Lancashire progenitors.

A great factor in this has been the establishment of the Yorkshire Canary Club, which, by its many specials in kind, its cash specials, and its challenge trophies, has given such an impetus to the breeding of Yorkshire Canaries throughout the length and breadth of the kingdom that to-day I venture to say more birds of the variety named after the county of cricket and football fame are bred in one year than a short time back were produced in half a decade.

Queries Answered

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must be written on separate sheets of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—Queries received during any week, up to the first post on Saturday morning, will be answered in the issue bearing date of Saturday in the following week.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

E. W.—Answered by post.

CAPING FOR BREATH (G. L.).—The bird is probably suffering from advanced bronchial trouble, but you should have given some details as to where and how you keep and feed it. See that it is kept in a comfortable place, free from direct cold draughts, heated and irritating fumes of burning lights, and do not allow it to hang in a window nor high up near the ceiling. Then treat as follows. Every second day for a fortnight or so, in addition to the staple diet, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days during the first week add to the drinking water six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. After this give instead five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia and sweet spirit of nitre every second day for a fortnight.

CAGE IN GREENHOUSE (Puzzled, Liverpool).—(1) Possibly the cage in the greenhouse was too much exposed to the gaze of all outsiders, either in or out of the greenhouse, for the taste of the hen. If this was the case you would have got over the trouble, in all probability, had you shielded the nesting site in some way, such as placing some light covering over the portion of the cage immediately in front of the nest, or standing some obstacle in front of the cage in such a way as to shut off a full view of the nest. Anyway, you will almost certainly do much better with breeding in the ordinary breeding cage than in this place, which, by the way, you seem to have rather overcrowded with perches. I should imagine half the number of furnishings would be sufficient. (2) The aviary will accommodate five birds, not more, the size of a Norwich Canary, or, say, six Rollers or Border Fancies. If you mean British or Foreign birds, send a query marked with the class referred to, so that it may be dealt with by the proper expert.

UNSATISFACTORY HEN (S. Clayton).—(1) The hen was obviously not in breeding condition, and this would be the real cause of her refusing to notice the nest-box or the inducements of her mate. Whether she will come into condition later on when the season is more advanced, time alone can tell. It is quite possible she may do so, but something must naturally depend upon her age and physical condition. (2) This hen, too, is very much out of condition, and I would not advise you attempting to breed with her in any case. You may treat her the same as advised to "G.L." in this issue for two or three weeks, and in addition see that she has a little freshly gathered greenstuff daily—preferably chickweed, flower heads of groundsel, crisp young lettuce, or dandelion.

SEED SAMPLES (G. C.).—(1) Sorry, but the samples you sent were too much damaged to form any just opinion as to the quality. I can only say that the little rape that was left does not appear to be summer rape, but I cannot say this much with any degree of certainty. If you will send another sample I will do my best to assist you. Please wrap in separate packets. Meantime, you may give the birds that waste so much seed six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in the water every second day for a week, and then six drops of tincture of gentian and four of dilute sulphuric acid every second day for another week. (2) The best contest singers are kept largely on rape alone, except for occasional tit-bits, or at most a mixture of two parts rape to one part canary. Personally, I prefer a mixture of two parts canary to one part summer rape, as a far more complete and wholesome dietary.

SIZE OF EGG AND CHICK (Embryo).—(1) No, I do not think the size of the egg affects to any material degree the size of the chick which may be hatched from it. Mere physical stature depends far more upon the amount of pabulum supplied and assimilated by the chick in the first few weeks after it has left the shell, and it is quite possible for a strain of birds producing exceptionally large specimens to lay quite moderate or small eggs. The largest breeds of poultry habitually lay quite medium to small-sized eggs, and the smallest breeds, Bantams, of course, excepted, lay the largest eggs. (2) This raises a question much too large and scientific to deal with in these replies. For all practical purposes I incline to the opinion that when a hen has produced and deposited a perfect and normal ovum she has done her part as far as fertility is concerned, but it is rather a moot question whether every egg laid is potentially fertile, or whether it is possible for the hen to produce eggs from which the female reproductive elements are lacking. But this much is certain, that there may be a lack of affinity between two individuals of opposite sex that precludes any union proving fertile, and this element of discord may exist in either sex. It is by no means limited to the hen. (3) Real infertile eggs invariably remain clear and unchanged after incubation, unless they should dry up in the shell owing to some defect in the latter. Those which become cloudy are added, and have been fertilised, but the germ has ceased to develop at some stage. The earlier this cessation takes place, the less change you will find in the eggs themselves. When the yolk appears broken and dispersed there is probably some weakness or defect in the egg itself, for which the hen is most likely to be responsible.

VERY LIGHT BIRDS (Novice, O.H.).—(1) The birds in question may be very pale buff, or it is just possible that they may be a sport tending to a white strain, as the "whites" have cropped up in this way several times in late years. It is not possible to say definitely what they are from the particulars you give, but if you have any fancy for whites you should mate the cock with one of these light youngsters next season, if one proves to be a hen, or both, if both are hens, and in the following season pair the progeny of the one with those of the other, when you should find you have made a great stride in fixing the "white" element. (2) It is not possible to name the value of these sports without seeing them, nor even then always. As a rule it may be said to be just what one can get for them.

LOSING FEATHERS SUDDENLY (O. K., Barking).—Simply a very active spring moult is the cause of the phenomenon, and the cessation of song is merely the consequence of the moult. Probably the weather had much to do with the sudden onset of the moult, but if you keep them fairly warm and free from direct cold draughts, there will be nothing to fear. Give a morsel of egg, or bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, every third day until the plumage is reproduced, and add to the water 20 drops of chemical food twice a week, and you will doubtless find them resume singing in a short time.

YORKSHIRE COCK DYING (G. J. Hatton).—Only a post-mortem could satisfactorily reveal the cause of death in such a case as this. There is a great possibility that it was due to septic disease germs, and if you have another loss I cannot advise you better than to send the body at once to our post-mortem examiner, as per rules under that heading, and thus make sure about the cause. You do not even say how the bowels were affected, but if constipated, as seems to be implied, a better treatment than that you gave would have been to give a liberal supply of crisp young lettuce or flower heads of groundsel, and to have added ten drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence to the water every second day until the droppings were normal.

NO EGGS (H. Robbins).—No, the trouble of hens pairing, building a nest, and then failing to produce any eggs is not a peculiarity of the Lancashire. It is common to all breeds, and may even be found among the nondescript mongrel, which is of no particular breed at all. If the hens sit in the empty nests continually, give them a small clutch of common eggs to hatch out and rear as far as they will do so, and then they may go to nest of their own accord and fulfil their duties all through the next time. Otherwise treat them for a few weeks, or until they have laid a clutch of eggs, the same as advised to "Disinterested" in last issue.

NOISE OF CISTERN (Uncertain).—So far as the noise made by the cistern at certain times is concerned, I do not suppose it would have the slightest effect on the nesting habits of the birds. They would very quickly accommodate themselves to it and go about their duties just as well as if the noise were non-existent. But the fact of having to keep the birds in the window—and an east window, too, is much more likely to seriously affect the health and condition of the birds sooner or later. The latter is the real risk you have to decide for or against, and, personally, I should be among the "noes."

DESERTING YOUNG (Jux).—I rather fancy you will have found by the time this sees the light that the hens were about getting forward for nesting again. If this is so, it would explain their behaviour, and there is practically nothing you could do to make them resume their duties. I take it you left the cocks with the hens whilst they were sitting, and only tried removing them when this trouble was obvious. If this is so, try removing them next week when the hens commence to sit. Also surround when the hens green food on the third day after the young are hatched, and if the hens show any signs of leaving the nests too long exposed, offer a bath in which you have dissolved enough common salt to give the water a slightly saline taste, and allow it to stand in the cage for an hour each day for a few days. They will probably show more desire to use it when the weather is warmer. But if they do not then bathe, add to the drinking water ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for one-half of each day for a week. For green food adhere to crisp young lettuce or the flower heads of groundsel. In all other respects continue your present management as regards food, etc.

TRAINING YOUNG ROLLERS (Roller).—It will depend to some extent upon the singing powers of the two old cocks towards the end of the season how you should use them for training the youngsters. If both keep in equal song I should give No. 2, with 25 points, the major portion of the training, say, let him sing to the birds for a day and a half, and then give him a rest and let No. 1 sing for a day, or, as it will be, for two half days, before going back to No. 2. You should also try as soon as No. 2 shows signs of dropping into moult to get him through fully as quickly as possible, by allowing frequent baths, and keeping him quite on the warm side and covered over cosily most of the time, so that he may resume singing and take up the training as early as possible after the moult, as you would probably find the best results accrue if this bird could finish them off entirely at the end of the moult.

OUT OF CONDITION (Alex. Brown, Newfoundland).—The poor quality of your seed during the winter may have helped to bring about the condition of your birds, but the principal cause is keeping them close to the radiator. Now they are removed to a more equable position they will doubtless show more rapid improvement. See that the large space under the door is not responsible for cold, cutting draughts, or divert the current of air from the cages if necessary. Then treat as follows for a week or two: Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. Give separately every second day to each bird half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and also half a teaspoonful of summer rape, which you may scald for a change twice a week. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle, and broken groats, and a morsel of banana. Give a little green food, preferably dandelion, daily. In the water dissolve a crystal of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea every second day until a few days after the feathers have quite ceased dropping.

LIZARD MOULTING (E. M. T.).—(1) I take it the Lizard you say has moulted out almost yellow is a "gold," in which case a gold hen was not really a suitable mate for him. It is rather unusual for Lizards to moult out clear, or nearly so, as they get older, but there are many such cases known. If you are so attached to the bird that you must keep him as part of your breeding stock, I see no reason why you should not do so, but I would advise you rather to mate him with a non-capped and rather heavily-spangled bird for preference. (2) Give the birds that are shelling the seed and rejecting it a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days a morsel of banana and a pinch of mixed seed. These in addition to the staple diet. Give two leaves of young dandelion to each daily. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda, the size of a small pea, every second day for a week, and in the next week give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. Then repeat the two weeks' dosage in the same order.

VARIED (Roller).—(1) Your first query is answered elsewhere. (2) You should take out the old nests, burn the material, and thoroughly clean and disinfect the nest-box or pan and give fresh material for the second nests, also for the third—if there is a third. By doing so you reduce the chances of red mites getting the upper hand. (3) In selling birds to dealers, if the quantity is sufficient they may be taken away by hand. If sent, it would not be necessary to send each in a separate cage. Cages or cases to hold half-a-dozen, or even more, might be used. In fact, you could suit your own convenience so long as they were not overcrowded. (4) If you cannot get into touch with any Roller breeder, the best way out of the difficulty would be to attend as many shows as you could where Roller singing competitions are held.

DIARRHŒA, ETC. (J. E. H.).—(1) You should have said how you feed the bird. Do not give any very succulent greenstuff for a time, and add to the dietary a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, maw, and crushed arrowroot biscuit, given dry. In the water add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of opium two days in every three until the droppings become normal. (2) Carelessness, certainly, is the cause of insects infesting clean and new cages in rapid succession. You are not sufficiently careful to do the job thoroughly without omitting any part of the appliances belonging to the cage, and also the hook or wall on which the cage hangs. Thoroughly overhaul the cage, together with every appliance which comes in contact with it, and also the position where the cage is placed, as per the instructions often given in this column in detail, and you will certainly get rid of the pest. After the overhaul dip the ends of the perches in and touch the joints of doors, etc., and all likely harbours with a solution of an ounce of camphor in half a pint of methylated spirit twice a week for a few weeks. (3) The proper seeds for a staple diet are three parts canary to one part summer rape. All other seeds should be given only as a tit-bit in small quantities now and again.

VIGOROUS COURTHSHIP (S. Clayton).—If the hen was really in good condition when you put the birds together, responding to his calls, etc., you need not worry at all about the apparent violence of his attentions now. Such vigorous courtship, as it is really nothing more serious, is quite common with cocks in high breeding condition, and is by no means a bad sign. Just let things go their own way; give a small tuft of hair to play with until you see the hen taking it eagerly into the nest-box, and making serious attempts to form a nest with it. Then give a nest-bag and leave them to their own designs. You will find things work out all right in a week or two.

WATER RUNNING FROM BEAK (Miss Dora Whitaker).—This seems a rather uncommon case, and it would have been better had you given fuller particulars of your dietary and any substances you give the bird to nibble at. Is there any coating on the wires or cages which the bird picks off and eats, and what kind of grit do you use? Try the following treatment for a fortnight or so, and if not better in that time please write again and give this information. Keep cage floor covered with clean gritty sand, see that the bird is not exposed to a dusty atmosphere, or one that is loaded with irritating fumes from burning lights, or otherwise. Also see it is not exposed to direct cold draughts. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give half a teaspoonful of mixed seed twice a week, and on two other days give a similar quantity of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. Withhold green food for the present, and give instead a morsel of banana four times a week. In the water add five drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a fortnight.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

LOSS OF FINCHES (First Year).—I am inclined to think your birds died from congestion of the whole system, brought about by improper feeding with unsuitable food. But do not rely too much upon my opinion. I may be mistaken, not having seen the birds. If you lose any more, send one to Mr. Yates for post-mortem examination. Your hemp seed, of which you send a sample, may have something to do with the trouble. The stiff grains I examined were quite good, but upon making a second examination I found that out of a dozen grains only two were really good; the others were dried up and discoloured—evidently old stock. Such seed as this, given in the quantities you were allowing, would scarcely be conducive to health. The birds would digest it with difficulty and the organs become congested. It would probably account for the state of the birds' crops when opened. I would advise you to discard all this seed and procure some elsewhere. Open a few grains and see that each grain contains a full white kernel, and if you have any doubt, set a little to germinate in a warm corner, noting if it does so freely. Reduce the quantity to half what you have been giving, and allow a little more sunflower, and discontinue linseed during the summer months. Give all your remaining birds ten drops of syrup of buckthorn in an ounce of water. Let them have it for six or eight hours, and then repeat two days later. A good supply of wild food, including dandelion heads, should help them to pick up.

GREENFINCHES IN AN AVIARY (John Ford).—My experience with Greenfinches is that they are quite safe to turn in with other birds, for although they are strong, with formidable-looking beaks, they are not quarrelsome; in fact, mine are bullied most unmercifully by a cheeky Siskin. I would advise you to turn in a matched pair, when you will find they will keep a good deal to themselves and not interfere with the others. Give plenty of wild food, and abundance of moss, etc., for nesting purposes.

WHAT BIRD? (D. Cawton).—Your bird is the Greater Tit, which is quite an interesting species and not difficult to keep in confinement. Your general treatment is correct, although you might add to it a grain or two of sunflower seed and hemp, and a pinch of maw seed. They eat quantities of caterpillars when at liberty, so let him have any you can manage to collect.

KEEPING SOFTBILLS (Spike).—All the birds you mention can be kept under the conditions you suggest, although it would perhaps be kinder to take in the 'Gale during very cold weather. This is not absolutely necessary, as I have known them to be kept in a large outside aviary all the year round. The cage for the Thrush should be about 30 inches long, 24 inches high, and 11 inches wide, with one top perch and two on a level with the front board. There are many designs for Lark cages, but I prefer one about 18 or 20 inches long, 10 inches high, and 9 inches wide, of course without perches. The stock cage for the Nightingale should be 24 inches long, 12 inches high, and 12 inches wide, and a similar cage would do for the Blackcap. The 'Gale and Blackcap would require best quality insecticide food, and the Song Thrush and Lark soft food of not so good a quality. I am unable to give you full details for each bird, as space is limited, so I would advise you to send for our Nutshell Booklets dealing with them—No. 25, Smaller Insectivorous Birds; No. 3, The Skylark; and No. 4, The Song Thrush; each booklet 2d. post free from this office.

GOLDFINCH LOSING FEATHERS (G. A. R., Southampton).—Your bird may be going bare round the neck through insects. Examine him carefully, blowing up the feathers on the underpart of the body, and see if he has any lice. If so, well dust him with insect powder until you get rid of them, and let him bathe frequently, adding a spoonful of strong quassia solution to the water. Failing these, make a change in his diet, giving plenty of wild food and a spoonful of egg and biscuit three times a week, adding daily a few drops of fresh lemon juice to his water. Just smear the bare place with vaseline.

PLUCKS HER FEATHERS (Lunet Lover).—(1) It depends upon the cause of the plucking whether the hen will be of any use for breeding or not. Thoroughly examine the cage to see if it is infested with red mites, and if so, take the necessary steps to eradicate them, as you will have seen given frequently in this column. If no mites are discovered, give a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar every second day, and on the alternate days add to the water 20 drops of fluid magnesia, and give a large fat mealworm, if you have any available. Crush the head of the worm and secure it to the end of a perch until the bird has learnt what they are. Continue this for a fortnight. Only the actual experiment could prove whether she would pluck her young if you bred with her. (2) No, syrup of rhubarb is not the same thing as tincture of rhubarb. The syrup is preferable for cage birds, and is obtainable from practically any chemist.

ADDITION TO AN AVIARY (L. Scott).—You should have no difficulty in adding another bird or two to your collection; of course, the strongest will always be the master bird. A good plan is to place a fresh bird in the aviary in a cage for a day or two, and then one morning open the door and let him out; by this means they get used to each other before they come in contact.

PARROT WHEEZING (Mrs. Cole).—Keep its bowels quite open by giving doses of fluid magnesia as often as may be required—one teaspoonful in the drinking-water every fourth day should suffice. Get the following mixture: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills and glycerine in equal parts; for use take half a teaspoonful of the mixture to each fluid ounce of the drinking-water—give this for a fortnight on the days you are not giving the magnesia; then for another week put the same quantity of chemical food in the water, except when giving the magnesia. Give daily a piece of bread, biscuit or plain cake that has been lightly spread with cod-liver oil emulsion. Keep the bird strictly out of draught in a warm room, where the temperature is as even as possible night and day. Do not omit to keep up a regular supply of grit and cuttlebone. A chunk of wood should be continually in the cage for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon. In about three weeks report progress, fully describing the bird's condition.

SWELLING IN MOUTH (A. Pollis).—Your bird is a Blue-fronted Amazon, and you must expect it to do much talking till it is quite fit. Keep it in the midst of your home-life, yet not where it will be scared by noisy movements—it will pick up many words and sounds from what it hears going on around it. You can also teach it by constant repetition of such things as you wish it to say, while you are attending to its wants, and also when it is in a restful mood. With regard to the lump in the mouth, my difficulty is that I have practically no data to make a diagnosis from. The trouble may arise from a splinter, seed husk, etc., fixed in some part of the mouth, and calls for immediate attention. I advise you to take it to your local vet., who should be able to give some immediate relief. The other alternative is to put a little honey and borax into the mouth twice daily, and to keep the bowels well open by occasional doses (one teaspoonful in the drinking water) of fluid magnesia as often as required, and trust to Dame Nature to do the rest. If further unfavourable symptoms develop, quite possible, write again at once, giving full details. Your cage appears quite satisfactory.

GREEN PARROT WITH FITS (Mrs. Ball).—Add a good portion of canary seed and white oats to the Parrot mixture you procure for this bird. All the other items of diet you name are in order. Do not omit to keep grit, cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood, for it to exercise its mandibles upon, continually in the cage. Do not give any more castor oil, but every fourth day put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking-water. Get a dozen 3-grain powders of bromide of potassium from your chemist, give six of these in succession, dissolve one daily in a little syrup, then stir into the drinking-water, which must not exceed one fluid ounce, but omit the powder the day you give the fluid magnesia. Follow this by lightly colouring the drinking-water with chemical food on days the magnesia is not given. In the morning the cover should not be removed from cage till the room has been swept and aired. Give it as much ripe fruit (any kind) as it cares to take. You must be careful that it is not exposed to the full glare of the sun when in greenhouse, or heat apoplexy may supervene. Report progress in fourteen days, describing the bird's condition as clearly as possible.

PARROT UNCONSCIOUS (Mrs. A. M. B.).—I am quite helpless to assist you, as you give me no details save the one fact "it has fallen off its perch and is still unconscious." If it still lives and is unconscious when this reaches you I advise your taking it to a local vet. at once. If alive and unconscious then, give it three drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the beak, and repeat this every four hours till the bowels have been well moved. Send me at once the fullest details you can—period you have had it—how kept, fed, and generally treated, and give as fully as possible its symptoms prior to the attack and since consciousness has returned. I shall then be pleased to try and assist you. For an ordinary fit, the application of cold water to the top of the head is generally efficacious. After treatment, of course, depends on what occasioned the trouble.

BUDGERIGARS AS PETS (E. L. S.).—Budgerigars are quite hardy, and numbers are bred annually in outdoor aviaries, where they live all the year round. I should say bird No. 1 is a hen, and most certainly if you cage her up with No. 2 they would attempt to breed, on the cage floor if no other spot were available; moreover, I expect they would become less tame if put together for breeding. If you are feeding them according to the booklet they will need nothing further while in the moult; but you cannot give them too much seedling and flowering grass while it is available. As regards a bath, you cannot do better than get a turf of longish grass, well water it through a fine rose, then place it on a tray and allow the birds to roll about in it; this is their natural way of taking a bath. If you require the birds to have liberty only in the room their wings need not be cut, but you must see that all windows are closed and that the fireguard is in position. They are such alert birds that I think they would keep out of reach of the Parrot's mandibles. They can certainly go outside on suitable days, but as they are confined within the limits of a cage, the cage must not be stood where a current of wind will blow directly into it or through it. I am afraid no matter how tame they become you will always be liable to the more or less playful bit. Talking Budgerigars are very uncommon.

AMAZON PARROT WITH COLD (Omega).—It is probably a touch of asthma, or it may be digestive trouble. It will be well to continue the cold mixture for a little longer, and to keep the bird as snug as possible during the changeable weather of the next two months. It should not be necessary to use the glycerine mixture any longer unless there should be a recurrence of the running at the nostril. Get a box of honey and borax, and put a little in its mouth (not much at a time) once or twice daily so long as the box lasts. Also keep its bowels properly regulated; there should be quite free movement without watery looseness—a dose of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful) in the drinking water occasionally will easily secure this. A little cod liver oil emulsion spread thick on a piece of bread, biscuit, plain cake, or anything similar the bird will take well to. I see no reason why the bird should not become quite sound again. It will be well, however, to take special care of it during any cold, damp spells which may occur during the remainder of the winter.

AILING GREY PARROT (T. W.).—In such a case it is always best to let a vet. see the bird, and I advise you to take this course at once. It is quite possible he could give the bird immediate relief—he would have sterilized instruments and antiseptics to hand, which would be main factors to a quick healing of the wound. Of course, if you call a vet.

in you must follow his instructions as to treatment afterwards. It would be well, however, to add ripe fruit to your dietary, also pieces of biscuit, stale crusts, and a little plain cake; and on any of the three latter it will eat to spread thinly cod liver oil emulsion till the bird is quite fit and strong again. It will also be important to keep the bowels open by supplying fluid magnesia (water and the magnesia in equal parts) once or twice a week, and on the intermediate days to put a little ammoniated quinine into the drinking water. Cuttlebone, grit (not sand), and a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon should be continually in the cage. Meat is a great aid to ailing birds, and it would be well to keep it in your warmest room, keeping the temperature as even as possible day and night. If you cannot get a vet. then you must foment the swelling with hot water (as hot as you can bear your hand in without discomfort), drying afterwards with a soft cloth; as soon as the sore appears ripe then lance it and exude the pus by gentle pressure, well cleanse with warm water, and lightly anoint with antiseptic ointment. A little honey and borax in the mouth daily, or oftener, will keep both the mouth and throat clean.

AMAZON PARROT DROWSY AND SNEEZING (A. J. R.).—Continue the treatment in every respect as already advised, but if the bowels become abnormally loose then the fluid magnesia must be stopped for a time, but the condition you describe is not abnormal. Put two or three chillies amongst the daily supply of seed. I repeat, you must keep the bird as warm as possible, yet in a room where the temperature is as even as possible both night and day; once you have got it properly established it will do perfectly well in an unheated room, but warmth is needed for a bird out of tone, and also in the process of acclimatisation. Dissolve three drops of tincture of opium in a little syrup, and add one-third ounce of water and well stir together; let the bird have a few sips of this mixture—that is, satisfy its thirst at least once daily with it; it should be mixed fresh every other day. I think you will be able to bring the bird round all right by nursing it up for a few weeks as above, and it will be well to report progress again in a few weeks; but, being a comparatively recent acquisition, it would be well to write at once if any of the symptoms should become more acute or other adverse symptoms develop. Continue to try to induce it to take ripe fruit at intervals, and you can let it have as much of the biscuit as it cares to take. Keep it amused and interested as much as possible, as activity is a great help in getting and keeping these birds fit.

BUDGERIGARS MOPY (Brushwood).—While your arrangements seem pretty good, there is evidently something not quite to their taste. Is the atmosphere at all close? Is it at all damp? If both these faults exist, you must remove them by a system of thorough ventilation, but you must secure this without draught. I think you would improve matters by putting a good sized square of glass into one of the walls of their enclosure, of course, covering it with wire netting in the inside; then if the flight is fitted up with straight perches, remove every one of them and put in some twiggy branches. The position of the hawks is not important, but they should be not less than 6ft. up and their openings should face the light, also they should be as far apart as possible. Keep one or two millet sprays hanging up in the aviary, in such a position that the birds must fly to cling to the sprays to get at the seeds. You must keep up continual supplies of cuttlebone and grit, and as soon as you can get it free from frost supply as much seedling and flowering green as they will eat. It is the most common practice to keep up continuous supplies of food for small birds. During the winter supply a little frame lettuce as green food, but cut out the thick fleshy stem from each leaf before supplying to the birds. Budgies are not large drinkers, so take out the ordinary drinker and bath while giving medicines; put one teaspoonful Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water daily till the bowels have been well moved, but stop short of watery looseness. Also when not giving the magnesia put a little chemical food in their water. An occasional dose of the magnesia is advisable whenever the voidings become at all stiff. The birds should certainly nest with you this season.

AILING BUDGERIGAR (E. C. W.).—You cannot do better than persevere with the treatment; the bird is evidently picking up as quickly as one could reasonably expect. Budgerigars do not bathe in the ordinary sense, that is, by splashing about in a shallow dish as most species do. In a state of nature they bathe by rolling and throwing themselves about amidst wet grass, and in an outdoor aviary they do the same. Many times have I witnessed this charming scene when I kept a flock of these pretty feathered creatures. The abandon with which they frolicked and threw themselves about amid the dew-laden grass and herbage is one of the most charming of the many interesting episodes I have witnessed in my aviaries in the course of many years. Keep the bird in as even a temperature as possible; let him take all the exercise outside his cage he is inclined to, and about twice a week give him a light spraying (on sunny and warm days only) with tepid water. A "mist" sprayer is the best for the purpose.

ALL ABOUT BUDGERIGARS (Nicholls).—It is quite impossible for me to write you an article on these birds in this column. The Editor would not permit it; besides, if you cannot extract any information from your book, I am afraid you are hopeless, or else you have read it very superficially, and it will repay a second reading. I have made it clear many times in "Cage Birds" that those who expect wild species of any description to nest and rear young as readily as Canaries (domesticated for many years), are doomed to disappointment. Budgerigars' natural breeding season is our winter, so every inducement should be offered them to change it by not supplying them with breeding larks (they use no material) till the end of March or first week in April. Of course, if you have the accommodation you can separate the sexes during the winter, but they should not be kept in adjoining compartments. These birds, like many other wild species, do not pair and go to nest at once when the sexes are put together, but take some time to settle down. Once a commencement is made they will often go on breeding all the year round. The dietary is fully given in your book. Budgerigars have been much written about, but in books containing accounts of other birds. "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 7th. post free from our Manager, deals rather fully with them, so do several of the late Dr. W. Greene's books, e.g., "Foreign Fancy Birds," 8d. post free, which the Editor would obtain for you.

SICK PARROT (Dickinson).—Pleased to note there is an improvement. Continue the treatment till the cure is complete. Try it with the milk mixture without bread, mixed to a consistency for drinking, and give this the first thing each morning in lieu of the drinking water. The latter can be supplied about noon. If it is removed each night when the bird is covered up, the bird will be quite ready to partake of any liquid which you supply the next morning. Give such fruit as banana, apple and grapes frequently, and the same as to biscuits. Do not give any more suet, it will be better without this; in fact, this has probably contributed to the trouble. The other items of diet you mention can all be given. I should try it with a mixture of canary, white millet, sunflower, hemp, oats, and shelled monkey nuts in equal parts. You can also supply other nuts freely as extras, such as walnuts and Spanish (Barcelona) nuts, and I usually prefer to supply them shelled. A piece of raw carrot is very wholesome, and most Parrots are very fond of it. In all other respects continue to treat as per our previous reply.

PARRAKEETS IN CAGES AND AVIARIES (Lausanne).—(1) Parrakeets are mostly bred in aviaries, and it is in such that the principal successes have been made; but Red-rumps have been bred quite successfully by an aviculturist in France in a roomy cage; a pair of Swainson's Lorikeets also successfully reared young in cage, 5ft. long, 3ft. wide, and 5ft. high, for several years in succession; and a pair of Red-collared Lorikeets successfully reared one young bird, which is still living in a cage about 3ft. square and 4ft. high, but these are rather isolated instances. I also saw a brood of healthy young Quaker Parrakeets (unfledged) in quite a small cage—the young were fully reared. (2) I have sent you a rough ground plan of a range of houses. The nature of the structure must depend on climate, etc. Either logs, barrels, or boxes with concave bottoms must be used for nesting purposes. In the suggested range of aviaries I have provided for eight separate flights and a central flight large enough for six pairs. (3) The three Parrakeets you mention have always been unique in England, but a near relative of one of them, the Black-headed Golden-shouldered Parrakeet, is sometimes to be obtained. (4) Largely a matter of individuality, and each aviculturist must experiment for himself in this respect. One aviculturist may keep together single pairs of six species with success, and another, making the same attempt, fails utterly owing to the pugnacity of his respective pairs. Most of the Lorikees need a separate enclosure for each pair. Hybrids, as a rule, result either from the chance mating of odd birds, or the deliberate pairing of odd birds of different species shut off from communication with others of their own species. (5) Turquoisines, I fear, must be extinct, or nearly so, as none have reached the English market for some years. I have dealt with your queries as fully as space permitted, but it would mean almost writing a book to enter into them comprehensively. However, I shall be pleased to reply further upon any points of difficulty.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Mr. G. Rattigan.—Red-crested Cardinal (hen) succumbed to septic fever. Both the liver and spleen were badly affected with this disease.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES. 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES. 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES. 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. B. Swick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT. 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS. 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL. 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS. 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS. 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL. 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1, "Hardbills," and Part 2, "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK. 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS. 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed especially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid. FANCY'S PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist
MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. K. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Boulton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kitch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/6, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateles is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardhills" and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part: price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said: "It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCY'S PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business note-paper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memo., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/6, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

BLACK-CHEEKED LOVEBIRDS.

The Black-cheeked Lovebird is a comparatively recent introduction to our show benches. After its first appearance, it suddenly became rather common, as the birds were imported in numbers. Lately, however, it has again been somewhat of a rarity, and a good pair is pretty sure of recognition by the judge. The very fine specimens here portrayed won 2nd prize at the Holborn Show for Mr. C. T. Maxwell, Herne Hill, London.

The Tawny Owl in Captivity.

By D. STEWARD.

An appreciation of a bird which is very rarely kept as a pet; with particulars as to its housing and feeding.

CONSIDERING how well Owls thrive in confinement, and the small amount of trouble and expense they entail, it is surprising how really few people one comes across who go in for these exceedingly interesting birds, or, indeed, know anything about them.

I know of no more lovable or entertaining fellow than the Tawny, or Wood Owl (Syrnium bluco), provided that he is brought up from infancy by hand; otherwise, if one gets a half or full grown specimen, it is apt to make a freer use of its strong beak and equally strong talons than is quite pleasant, and its temper is not likely to prove so sweet and pliable as an early adopted child from the woods.

In other words, it will probably remain untamable, and I know of no more discouraging, not to say irritating, sight than that of a bird or animal that stubbornly resists all one's overtures of kindness and friendliness.

I could never succeed in taming a full-grown Tawny that was bought to keep another young one company. It perpetually snapped its beak whenever anyone approached it, and on attempting to handle it it would sit up on its tail—after the manner of a hawk—and woe betide any finger that came within reach of its beak. I have spent hours in trying to coax the stupid bird into something resembling good feeling, but without the slightest success—it was too suspicious for anything.

Discriminate in Friendship.

Now the young one, which was sent to us as a fluffy ball of down, was as different as possible; as sweet and innocent as the other was sour and suspicious, and as fond of me as it is possible for any bird to be of its owner.

I could do whatsoever I liked with him, stroke him, ruffle up his feathers the wrong way, play with him, tease him, and handle him with impunity—not that I often did this, for the less handling a bird has the better—and as for getting angry, why, he simply did not know how.

He was always on his best behaviour with all the members of the family, but he had no fancy at all for the garden—I never fathomed the reason for this—nor did he like visitors, especially when they went and gazed curiously at him through the wire door.

He would open his big eyes very wide indeed on such occasions, and in the semi-twilight of the aviary, from a perch at the far end, he would return the stare; in fact, he was an adept in this art, and would out-stare anyone, craning and twisting his head into the most fantastic positions—in which occupation the sour one joined—in order to get a clearer view of who the strangers were and what they were doing.

An Undeserved Reputation.

I think he must have entertained a very hearty contempt for those—ladies generally—who sometimes remarked: "Really, what queer birds they are. I don't care for Owls, you know—so uncanny, aren't they?"

In a state of nature the Tawny Owl is said to be of rather a vicious disposition, because during the breeding season it will boldly attack and inflict severe blows on the heads of unsuspecting individuals who venture too near its nest. However this may be, the Tawny Owl hardly deserves to be described as belonging to a vicious species, because I take it that this bird, at other times, is peaceful enough if unmolested.

Moreover, it is but following the natural instinct which prompts both animals—perhaps I ought to say mammals—and birds to become more wild and savage during the breeding period, in order the better to protect their helpless young. In some species this instinct is more pronounced than in others, and the Tawny Owl simply belongs, in common with many others, to the former class.

Some Very Tame Owls.

This fact need in no way deter anyone from keeping this Owl in an aviary, for if, as I have said, it be taken young, preferably in the down, and reared by hand, it will become as tame and easy to handle as any other bird under similar conditions.

This, apart from my own experience and that of some people I know, is borne out by a case of some Tawny Owls that were captured near Blackburn. One of these Owls when fully grown was quite tame and gentle, and could be handled with ease, although in their wild state Wood Owls are decidedly vicious. This particular Owl's former owner used to take it perched on his shoulder for cycle rides, and it was not dismayed by passing vehicles.

This reminds me somewhat of a friend of ours who once had in his possession a couple of Tawny Owls. I forget how he obtained them, but the birds were very tame, and much attached to him, and he frequently used to take them with him, perched one on either shoulder, for long walks, and they never attempted to fly away.

One night he thought he heard one of his pets calling and booting in a peculiar manner, but being half asleep he paid no particular attention, and soon dozed off again, much to his subsequent sorrow. The next morning, after considerable searching, the poor bird was found drowned in the water butt. How it managed to fall in remains a mystery.

Both the Tawny and Barn Owl—personally I prefer the former, as being much prettier both in shape and colour—will thrive in captivity equally well in country or town, for the aviary need only be quite a simple affair.

The Necessary Accommodation.

Those who live in the country usually have a stable or outhouse, of which they can utilise a portion as an aviary; but the town or suburban dweller is not always so fortunate in this matter. However, to most houses there is a garden or yard of sufficient size to admit of a small shed—a lean-to or otherwise—being erected, and this will meet all the requirements necessary.

Probably a lean-to shed is best, where space is limited, as it takes up less room; also it can be made fairly high, which gives the birds a better chance of exercising their wings, though, as a rule, I think they prefer an enclosure narrow rather than wide, not particularly high, but as long as possible, so that they may have a good flight from one end to the other.

A good stout perch should be fixed up at the end farthest from the door, and then on a level with the perch a wooden box should be nailed against the wall, for the birds to retire into. The box, however, is not an absolute essential to their well-being—after they are fully grown, that is—for they do not require it for sleeping in, but they sometimes like to go inside to eat, especially when they have anything in the butchering or quartering line to perform.

For the floor any sort of coarse grit may be used, but the bare earth, turned over occasionally, does very well. The inner part of the doorway should be fitted with a frame door of wire netting, so that the outer wooden door, which should be closed at night, may be left open during the day, for Owls appreciate a certain amount of light, and it is a fallacy to suppose that they sleep all day long and cannot see in daylight.

How to Feed Owls in Captivity.

With the aviary in readiness, the birds themselves are the next consideration. Procure them as young as possible, put them into a small basket, and make them cosy with plenty of straw or hay—of course, strict cleanliness must be observed.

Feed them at fairly frequent intervals with small pieces of fresh, raw meat. I used to feed mine on shin beef, but as this may be considered rather expensive, any fresh butcher's scraps will do, and if you care to dissect a mouse or small bird for them, well and good.

When they grow older they will, of course, be equal to performing this pleasant job for themselves, and then the floor of their apartment will be found littered with pellets of indigestible matter, such as skin, fur, and feathers, that they have cast up. No other food is required, and the number of meals may be gradually lessened, and a larger quantity given at each meal.

At three or four weeks old the white down of early babyhood turns brown; a little later the birds begin to moult, and very soon are ready to be removed to the aviary.

When fully grown, they only need to be regularly fed twice a day, morning and evening, with raw meat, the best plan being to give them this piecemeal, letting them have as much as they can eat.

In addition, as often as possible, a small dead bird or mammal should be given whole, the object being not so much for the sake of extra food as for providing healthy occupation for the birds. Failing either of these, let them have a raw bone to amuse them, for occupation is a prime factor in keeping live stock of any sort in good condition. Water they do not appear to have any need of: at any rate, I could never get mine to touch it.

Rough on Rats.

When rats or mice happen to infest a place, an Owl is a really useful investment. Our stable was overrun with these pests, and the Owls had a glorious time with them during the night, until the rats grew more wary and religiously left their part of the stable alone; but, all the same, every now and then one fell a victim to the watchful birds.

Some people may not like to hear the hooting of the Owls at night-time, and think it has an eerie sound, but I think this is foolish prejudice. I, for my part, like to listen to their curious cries, and through long, wakeful nights I have often lain listening with a real sense of pleasure to quite a chorus emanating from my own and some wild Owls which, doubtless, attracted by the captives, need to frequent the grounds during the night in large numbers, to induce by the sound they made.

With regard to Tawny Owls breeding in captivity, I have had no experience of this, but I see no reason why they should not breed—indeed, I have heard of cases where they have done so, and successfully reared young.

REMEDIES OF SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

Communicated by J. ROGERSON (Ashton-in-Makerfield).

Below are reproduced some remarks on "Diseases and Treatment of Cage Birds" as they appeared in an old work of 1842, entitled "The Bird Fancier." To the present-day bird-keeper some of the remedies will appear to be of a drastic nature, but the frequent recommendation of bread and milk is especially valuable. From the frequency with which our experts have to prescribe this homely remedy it would seem that even to-day it is not sufficiently known.

CAGE birds, from their artificial mode of living and want of exercise, are subject to many disorders; the following are the principal, and their usual remedies:—

The pip, or cold.—The nostrils are closed, the head ruffled, the beak often open, and yellow at the root, the tongue hard and dry; it is usual to remove the hard skin from the tongue, and to open the nostrils by passing a small feather up them; a mixture of fresh butter, pepper, and garlic will generally cure it.

Asthma, or difficulty of breathing, is caused by too dry and stimulating food, keeping the birds too warm, and very often by too much hemp seed; sudden frights are also very injurious, and often produce complaints of the lungs. The best means of relief is a refreshing and aperient diet, leaving off hemp seed entirely, and giving them rape only, with bread and water and vegetables. Bread and milk boiled to the consistency of pap, and given when cold will keep them open; when very bad they should have this every day.

Atrophy, or wasting away, is caused by unnatural food; a very great appetite is a sign of it. The most likely way of curing it is giving them more proper food, plenty of green meat, and a spider now and then as a purgative. A rusty nail in their water will act as a chalybeate and strengthen their stomachs.

Costiveness.—The most usual remedy is a spider; if this is inefficient, anoint the vent with the head of a pin dipped in linseed oil; birds that eat mealworms may be relieved by giving them one bruised in sweet oil and saffron. Boiled bread and milk will prevent it.

A Little-known Remedy.

Sore eyes.—The juice of red beet-root as a drink, and also as a liniment is of great use in this complaint.

Diarrhoea, or excessive looseness, is a dangerous complaint, if not taken in time. Birds just caught are very subject to it; they are continually voiding a white slimy matter, which sticks to the feathers near, and produces inflammation. Boiled bread and milk, with plenty of lettuce or other green meat, will often cure it if not too far advanced. Chalybeate water, mixed with milk, for their drink, is also recommended as a certain cure.

Obstruction of the rump gland.—This gland, which contains the oil they anoint the feathers with, sometimes gets hard and inflamed, the matter becoming, from want of use, sour and acrid; it is often caused by want of water to bath in. The usual cure is anointing the part with fresh butter and letting out the matter by running a needle in it.

Epilepsy.—This is very common, and is occasioned by want of exercise and over-feeding. The best cure is to plunge them in cold water now and again, and cut claws short enough for blood to run.

Swellings and ulcers on the head may be cured by touching them with a red-hot knitting needle. Should the matter not be formed it may be brought to a head by rubbing the part with fresh butter; it may then be opened, and anointed with essence of myrrh, giving at the same time beet juice to drink.

Giddiness is caused by a trick many birds have of turning and twisting their heads round till they fall off the perches. It is easily cured by covering top of cage so they can see nothing above them.

Moulting. All should have bread and milk, and kept warm and bathed. Those that eat insects should have more mealworms and ants' eggs.

THE IMPORTANCE OF STEADYING YOUNG BIRDS

—by—
The Rev. C. Jolliffe
(Cardiff).

An article which should help many young fanciers to success in the coming show season.

WE are now looking at the first-round youngsters on the perches, and calculating that in a month's time we shall have half a dozen of them at the Nest Feather Show. The problem, of course, is—Which six? So we go over them and imagine we can pick out winners for next season, and when we have found the "toppers" we set about training and steadying them.

Here is our great mistake. No one can pick out winners at this time of the season, and the moult usually plays "Old Harry" with our early opinions. Many a 1st at the N.F. Show has been seen no more after the moult, and the "weed" for which a modest 7s. 6d. might have been accepted, as far as face value is concerned, has stepped up into premier position.

Don't be in a Hurry.

Let me advise no breeder to sell and no buyer to purchase birds until after the moult. The classic phrase is "Wait and see." The importance of training and steadying all young birds is, therefore, fundamental to all success, as I shall endeavour to show.

Young birds are like young wives; they can be made good, bad, or indifferent, according to their training; and as nothing worth doing is done without pains we shall, perforce, be put to a little trouble. After all, the trouble is quite trifling if we adopt commonsense methods.

As soon as the young birds leave the breeding cage, usually at about four weeks of age, subject them to careful and judicious handling. Never permit them to get into that nervy, frightened condition which they soon will do if two or three weeks go by before you take them in hand.

Begin by handling, winning their confidence, putting them into the show cage, and running them back into the stock cage without handling them. It is really wonderful what they will do in that direction in two days.

At five weeks old teach them to run into the show cage by the aid of a stick. If Yorkshires or Border Fancies, with open wire cages, this is comparatively easy, as all you have to do is to leave the show cage hanging on the wires for the birds to run in and out of their own free will. If Norwich or Mules, it is not quite so easy. You will remember always to hold the show cage with the wire front facing the window. Birds are like children, they do not care to face the dark.

It is advisable to have one show cage with round doors cut in both ends. It is, further, most helpful if your fronts on the stock cages have a swing door on a level with, and beside the perches. Your birds will the more readily run into the show cage from the perch than from the floor of the stock cage. Put them through this practice for at least ten days on end, and they will rarely ever forget the lesson.

Some Very Necessary Precautions.

When six or seven weeks old give them a whole week in the show cage, spraying them in a clean cage daily, and it is well if the fronts of these show cages have seed holes as well as a water hole. Young birds after being in a show cage for a prolonged period are apt to forget the seed hoppers when put back into the stock cages, and unless food is placed on the floor of the stock cages when they are returned you will find them going back in condition, if something worse does not happen. By-the-by, remember the size of the perches and the little feet which have to grip them, and provide suitable perches for your youngsters.

Also, it is not wise to leave young birds without a small portion of soft food, I do not say egg food, for even one day until the moult. If you do you will probably meet with trouble during the moulting season.

I would like to add a word of caution. Do not leave them in the show cage until they come to recognise the show cage as their home. Let them have the flight, when their wings are strong enough to carry them with ease.

For the first fortnight I put my youngsters into two-foot cages, and afterwards in four-foot flights. They must have long flights in order to develop their wings, and if you can give them a flight where they can fly upwards for several feet it will greatly aid to perfect wing carriage. You rarely see bad wing carriage in newly caught Britishers.

Having put your birds into show cages, see that they do not stand in a draught, and never above the level of one's shoulders. If you have a good mantelpiece, eight to 12 cages will stand thereon quite easily. If one bird should prove a little less tractable than the others, keep him down low; it tends greatly to check their wildness if you stand above them, but, remember, do not put them on the floor.

Next we must get them used to artificial lights. Shadows have a tendency to frighten them, and so, perhaps, the kitchen, where there is light and movement, is as good a place as any. I have heard of a fancier standing a meat-jack on the table and hanging half-a-dozen cages on it so as to accustom the birds to every possible and variable outlook by its revolutions.

No; we have not yet finished their education. Put them into the show-cage case, remembering never to put the wires of one cage face to face with the wires of another. Stewards of shows kindly note this; I am specially referring to Norwich and such-like cages. Now carry them up and down stairs, put them down with a gentle bump, a bit milder than the railway porter does.

Next take the good wife, or the sweetheart, for an evening's stroll or a tram ride, and let a couple of birdies go with you; they are not the little birdies who tell stories, etc. It is all part of the business through which they have to go.

Nothing Like the Show Bench.

But of all the forms of training through which the birds should be put, none can equal the show bench. If you have a really good bird, send him out to every show where you are sure he will get attention. It is a foolish blunder to believe birds are always sent out to win. I remember two beautiful buff cocks at the last Cardiff Annual Open Show, one the property of Mr. W. Spillman. He was excellent on the bench, but the instant you moved him to the judging table he tightened up sufficiently to look long. The other belonged to Mr. E. Allsopp. This bird I had seen in the stock cage, and believed almost unbeatable. Alas, at the show he was quite unrecognisable.

These birds had both been well trained, but, surrounded by hundreds of other birds, many people, and in a strange place, they were excited. If they had been down a little in condition they must have won, and I am not so sure that our judges are not deceived sometimes in this matter of condition as far as it affects the Norwich variety.

A Tip for Sellers.

Some one will ask why we should go to all this trouble if the bird is not worth showing. If, of course, he is but a stock bird, there need not be quite as much trouble and painstaking, but I venture to point out the importance of steadying even a songster if you are going to sell him.

Nothing is so distressing as a wild, restless, nervous bird. If you send a bird on approval the first thing your client does is to put him straight from the travelling box to the show cage. Should he be unsteady, and in excellent condition, straight he goes as a poker, and your Norwich will pass for a Yorkshire a wee bit fat. Next thing you hear is, "I am sending him back; regret not satisfactory."

A word to purchasers: Always try the bird in a stock cage, and do not come to rash conclusions. If you wish to sell to advantage there are two conditions essential: (1) Put your bird through all the essential elements of training and steadying. (2) Try an advertisement in CAGE BIRDS. Remember, to the majority of purchasers face value is the only thing that counts.

How Steadying Improves Hens.

Lastly, but by no means least, remember the steadying of birds, especially hens, will go a long way towards making good feeders. The unsteady, nervous hen is usually the despair of us all. If she happens to be off the nest feeding, and hears the click of the latch, or the turn of the lock of the door, back she goes to the nest of eggs or young, often with disastrous results—eggs punctured or young trodden on. She will sit for hours glued to the nest and young ones, and if you turn her off she sulks about the bottom of the cage, immovable. She has no confidence in you, herself, or her surroundings. The only chance you have with her is to put the food in for the day and leave her absolutely alone, and in this case place her well over your head. For my part I would say unless she is really tip-top part with her. If you had steadied her it may have been different.

I think you will see that steadying birds is far more important than the average fancier thinks, and if anything I have written is not as clear as some could wish I shall ever be happy to do my best to explain.

The Girl Bunting, although resident with us throughout the year, is very local in its choice of breeding quarters. It is known as a nesting bird throughout our South Coast counties, from Cornwall to Kent, but in Northern districts it is rarer, according to latitude. In Wales it nests in some of the counties, but in Scotland it is only known as a rare winter visitor, while Ireland can boast of only one solitary visitant, in 1902.

HOW TO SUCCEED ON THE SHOW BENCH.

By R. P. BROOME.

WE are not only told, but we see as well, that this is an age of specialism, and as a rule the fancier who specialises on one variety stands the greatest chance of success; he becomes more quickly accustomed to the one variety; he has only one standard to adhere to; he has only one set of appliances to purchase suitable to the one variety he takes up; he also, as it were, comes in touch more frequently and often with the one set of breeders of his own variety.

Every writer or essayist must, to a great extent, deal with the ethical side of the question. No man can dictate to another his mode of procedure. Twelve different fanciers may have twelve different methods in the way of diet, management, etc., and each meet with the same success.

It is generally acknowledged that the fancier, however persevering, however painstaking he may be, must have, at the outset, some idea of what he is striving after, and to do this he must see in flesh and blood some bird nearly appertaining to the ideal, and this means visiting one or two good shows.

It is no use a fancier staying at home week after week, breeding year after year, without getting about and seeing on the bench the required type of bird. I emphasise this most strongly, because every man must have a pattern to work by. If we are asked to make anything in our trade, or estimate, or, in fact, do anything to earn our daily bread, we must have data to work upon. Never mind the ideal bird that is drawn in various papers. Go and see the birds that win in good company, and strive to bring your stock up to the point that they may, with some degree of certainty, produce such specimens as are shown on the bench.

After all, it is not the task some would have us to believe. We see working men fanciers of five, and even less years' standing, who hold the proud position of being able to face all comers in the cage bird fancy.

To come back to the birds themselves, and, of course, the most practical part of the work, the breeding of exhibition Canaries, or, for the matter of that, any Canary, must be carried out on a system. The fancier must get in that way the experience which strict attention to his birds gives as a matter of course. That is to say, he feeds and waters the birds, and generally looks after them without, as it were, noticing the fact. He must not give them all attention one week and none the next. The most apt way I can illustrate my meaning is that a fancier should use his business life as an example for the management of his bird room. For instance, if we turned up at our work one morning punctual, the next day not at all, and the next in the afternoon, we should quickly find our employers would dispense with such erratic service. Whereas we do, or the majority of us do, go about our daily routine of work without in any way noticing it.

The modes of pairing, the eventualities that are likely to arise in different varieties have been so thrashed out from time to time that it becomes difficult to advocate any sure and short road in breeding show specimens. Like ourselves in every-day life, the fancier who is gifted with keen intellect in the required direction, and who, with that intellect, gives application, stands a very good chance of producing the bird to catch the judge's eye.

We are told that brains, economic conditions, and money play a great part in the success of fanciers to-day; that they do is to a great extent true. A man may be gifted with the highest intellectual powers; he may have a superabundance of brains that are of the greatest possible use to him in other branches; but put him to breed exhibition Canaries, and he is the greatest duffer out unless he has the natural aptitude and the love of his subject.

Brains in this case would play a very subordinate part, and would quickly put a fancier of this description on the same level as the ordinary hard-working-man fancier who has natural ability, combined with the love of his subject.

The same with economic conditions. I know, and can give instances, of working-men fanciers who have, and do, practise great arts of self-sacrifice and denial, who are overburdened with heavy rents, and still at the same time exhibit the utmost enthusiasm for their hobby.

Economic conditions play a part, it is true, probably stifle a working-man's outlay in procuring fresh stock, etc.; but to say that economic conditions curtail the average of producing show specimens is purely a matter of conjecture.

Again, money is not a blessing in every case. A man may find, and at the cost of bitter experience, that for all his outlay he has not nearly so approached the standard of certainty in producing exhibition specimens as his brother fancier of less wealth. Discrimination must be used in the process of selection, and after the birds have been purchased the proper management of them must be carefully attended to.

I would advise fanciers to give their subject all the time and attention possible, to be as broadminded as possible, and, as far as their time and pocket will allow, to visit the best shows in their locality.

We are told the novice is the backbone of the fancy. With this theory I must agree, as every fancier must have, at some time of his career, been in the ranks of the novices.

At the same time I think credit is not sufficiently given to the exhibiting fancier. If it were not for him the fancy would soon die out, or, at any rate, greatly recede. Honour and credit are due to the man who is willing to risk his specimens long journeys, and devote his time to a subject which is not only elevating but instructive.

All who have not bred for show I would heartily advise to do so, as in a sense it is a sport. We experience uncertainties, and enjoy at times success. In our struggles we all unconsciously better our natures. They teach us to survive and to overcome trials and disappointments of our domestic life. At least, that has been my experience.

The show of the Kendal C.B.S. has been fixed for Dec. 26. Mr. C. A. House will judge.

The Sheffield O.S. ramble through Beeley and Greno Woods is fixed for June 4, writes Mr. E. C. Job. Sec. Meet at Park Hotel, Hillsboro', at 2. Tea at Norfolk Arms, Greno-side; 1s. 6d. each.

The London and Counties A.C.B. is holding its First Feather Show on Saturday, June 3, at Victoria Hotel, Charterhouse Street, E.C.4, judge, Mr. J. Hazled, writes Mr. W. Gilbert, Hon. Sec. The show opens at 7, and admission is free. Fanciers and friends will receive a hearty welcome.

Our new season's colour foods have arrived by steamer "Juliana," writes Mr. J. Walsh, Blackburn. As usual, the sample is of the best quality, and we are again offering to our clients the very best at the most reasonable prices. We are direct importer, and, therefore, are in a position to accomplish the above; we will send samples to any of your readers on application. (A sample each of hot Natal and tasteless paper sent out with this note, and the quality is guaranteed up to the old standard of excellence.)

In our issue of May 9, 1916, appeared an article by Mr. Arthur Benson of Bedford, entitled "Canary Breeding in England." The article commenced with the words: "Although an amateur." Three weeks ago I had here and there all the difference, for I should have commenced "Although of the amateur amateur." The article is a long one, and for all the advice given, I am glad to see it in the time to which it refers. Mr. Price is now, of course, far from London, and it is only fair to him to make the correction and to apologise for the omission of the words in question.

A BRITISH GOLDFINCH.

Winner of 2nd Prize at Reading Show. Exhibited by Mr. J. Gough, Oxford.

I notice CAGE BIRDS is twopence, but if it were threepence I should take it just the same, as it is invaluable to fanciers.

Earby. WM. PARKINSON.

Artillery Has Its Limits.

A French soldier, writing to the "Y.M." the Young Men's Christian Association weekly, says: "I was on guard from midnight till two o'clock on the edge of a wood. Moonlight, springtime—and a Nightingale near me, in a hawthorn bush, sang its trills in infinite variety. I tried to count the variations, and did not succeed. The cannon boomed quite near, but this bird took absolutely no notice of them. And I thought how little man is when the most powerful implements of violence that he has invented cannot even silence the song of a little bird."

OBITUARY.

A WELL-KNOWN FANCIER'S SAD BEREAVEMENT.

It is with the deepest sympathy, writes Mr. W. T. Mattinson, that I announce the death of Mrs. Bentley, the wife of the well-known fancier, Mr. Albert Bentley, Great Harwood. Her presence will be much missed, as she was always ready to lend a hand in making our social evenings a pleasure. Our sincere and deepest sympathy is extended to Mr. Bentley and family in the loss of such a wife and mother.

A GREAT WAR FAIR AT ISLINGTON.

On Tuesday and Wednesday next, June 6, 7, the Caledonian Market, Islington, will be given over to a great "War Fair," at which everything between live animals and tons of coal will be offered for sale.

The Lord Mayor has promised to visit the War Fair in civic state at noon on the first day. Two thousand men of the National Guard, Colonel Cobbett commanding, will be in attendance. A continuous amusement programme will be maintained, military bands will play on both days, and restaurants and refreshment tents and stalls will be provided to suit all purposes.

The numberless stalls will be presided over by enthusiastic lady "salesmen"; for instance, Lady Markham will sell five hundred tons of coal, and Lady Mary Paget will be the seller of the animal stall. The whole of the profits will go to the fund of the Wounded Allies Relief Committee, and in connection with her own department Lady Paget, the head of the stallholders, writes us as follows:—

"I am holding a sale of animals for the benefit of the wounded Allies, on June 6 and 7, at the Caledonian Market, Islington, and I should be most grateful if you could see your way to get me some birds to sell there. There will be four men in charge of the stall, who will feed them and take every care of them. The birds should arrive at the Caledonian Market, Islington, addressed to Lady Paget's Animal Stall, on the evening of June 5, or not later than 10 a.m. on the first day of the sale, June 6.

Believe me,

Yours faithfully,

MARY PAGET.

We are sure that many of our readers have a bird or two which they could spare for so good a cause.

The May issue of the "Avicultural Magazine," the organ of the Avicultural Society, is an especially interesting one. An article which should be widely read is that by Miss Rosie Alderson, on the sending and receiving of birds by rail. Mr. A. A. Goodall writes on "The Birds in a Suburban Garden." Dr. Graham Renshaw contributes an article on the rare Owl Parrot. Capt. P. Gosse tells of "Birds Seen in Flanders," and Dr. A. G. Butler puts forward a theory that the markings of birds' eggs vary according to the degree of sunlight to which the laying bird is exposed. Among the other articles is an account by Miss E. F. Chawner, recounting "Three Attempts at Breeding Sugar-birds."

"Please thank those who replied to my advert. in CAGE BIRDS of this week. The birds were sold first post Saturday morning."—DAVID E. WILLIAMS (Denbigh).

"I should be obliged if you could thank all those who applied for the birds advertised on May 13th. I had numerous inquiries, and all were soon sold."—H. HOOD (East Horling).

Up-to-Date.

Several daily papers have recently had the following "news": "A pair of Swallows, on returning to their last year's nest, found it occupied by a Sparrow, who resisted all attempts to effect him. A council was called, and the result was a large army of Swallows closed up the entrance of the nest with clay, leaving the Sparrow to perish therein." These Swallows are presumably lineal descendants of those which were doing the same thing, according to our school books, a half-century or so ago.

Yorkshire C.C. Patronage.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Y.C.C. at their coming shows should apply as early as possible, writes Mr. J. Greaves, Sec., 279, Hollings Road, Bradford. Will members fill in the nomination papers from the centre of the club's handbook (not forgetting nominations for secretaries, as both are retiring), and forward at once to the Sec. The voting for officers will be at the annual general meeting, Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, June 17, at 6.30, when all fanciers are invited to attend.

Humanitarianism Gone Mad.

It has recently been suggested that the collection of small British birds in the aviary in Victoria Park, Portsmouth, might be increased, and the secretary of the R.S.P.B., Miss L. Gardiner, has used the suggestion as a basis of a letter to the "Portsmouth Evening News," taking the authorities to task for permitting or encouraging the confinement of wild birds. In this she says as a climax "It is perhaps worth while considering what must be the effect of this official incentive to the caging of our wild birds. The Lark or Linnet in its seven-inch cage against the hot brick wall in a stuffy street is only a translation into back-street language of the municipal aviary."

Was there ever such piffle? Will Miss Gardiner tell us where she has ever seen a Skylark in a seven-inch cage? In any case, Skylarks are not likely to be included among the birds in a municipal aviary, and a Linnet in such a collection would be having the time of his life.

"Bird Notes" for May, the Journal of the Foreign Bird Club, contains a beautiful coloured plate of Sunbirds from the brush of Mr. H. Goodchild. Mr. E. Hopkinson continues his very interesting "History of the Budgerigar," and among the other articles are "Bird Life and Sport on Achill Island," by Mr. F. Dawson-Smith, "Bird Catching in India," by Mr. Douglas Dewar, and "The Amazon Rail," by Mr. W. Shore Bailey.

Kindly notify in "Twitterings" in this week's "C.B." that I have again removed from 2, Barrack Street to 20, Selkirk Street, Hamilton, and that fanciers will please note change of address, writes Mr. D. Hamilton. Re your note as to the price of CAGE BIRDS, I beg to say that I, too, am pleased to see the paper at its usual size, and I do not grudge in the least to pay twopence for my copy. I echo your correspondents' words in last week's issue, and wish for continued success at the new price.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing in our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

Boys and Bird Nesting.

According to a return sent to the Press by Mr. E. Tasker, Huddersfield, of 419 eggs counted by him last spring in 94 nests of British birds, only 19 were hatched. He attributes the loss of the 400 eggs to the depredations of bird-nesting boys.

What Happens to Rare Birds.

A correspondent writes to the "Preston Herald," that he has shot a common House Sparrow at Newton-with-Scales, with pure white feathers, red eyes, and yellow legs, and sent it to Preston for the purpose of being stuffed.

SENDING DEAD BIRDS BY POST

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., whose post-mortem examinations of birds are of such value to our readers, writes that he has received a letter from the General Post Office as follows:

General Post Office,

May 29, 1916.

Sir,—I am directed by the Postmaster-General to inform you that his attention has been drawn to the announcement in CAGE BIRDS, in which the sending of bodies of birds for post-mortem examination is invited.

As the post is intended to be used for their transmission, I am to inform you that the bodies of animals and birds intended for post-mortem examination are regarded as deleterious substances, within the meaning of the regulations published at page 18 of the Post Office Guide. The Postmaster-general does not desire to prohibit entirely the sending by post of such bodies by members of the general public, but he can only sanction their transmission on condition that they are sent at the letter rate of postage, and are packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. Packets containing such bodies which are not packed in this way, or are sent by parcel post, will, if observed in transit, be destroyed, and I am to suggest that you should make this known to the readers of CAGE BIRDS, and to any other persons who may desire to send bodies to you for examination.

N. MASTERS,

For the Secretary.

Readers should carefully note the contents of the letter, and should be careful to comply with the regulations therein stated. Wise bodies of birds addressed to Mr. Yates may never reach their destination.

A Bird of the Crag.

On the crumbling marl-cliffs at Caldy a pair of Rock Piptits were playing (says "F.Z.S.") in the "Liverpool Daily Post and Mercury," the male offering attentions when not engaged in satisfying his own needs; it was exceedingly pretty to see him collect a beakful of insects and then, right at the edge of the cliff, present it to his mate, who received it with open beak and shivering wings as if she had been a fledgling instead of a full-grown hen. In spite of the fact that the male bird was giving these amorous gifts, suggesting to his mate that very soon she would have to attend to the material needs of clamorous offspring, the Rock Piptit's nest will not be built on those steep and unstable cliffs. This bird likes a hollow or niche in some rugged rock face, and nests on the Welsh coast. Probably, however, this pair were on their way further north, for in Cheshire the Rock Piptit is a bird of passage, and, indeed, is very seldom seen. On the shore, where the dried litter of past high-waters collects insects and small crustaceans, the Meadow Piptit constantly feeds, and on the marshes at Burton it finds suitable places to nest; but the Rock Piptit is a lover of the crags whose feet are constantly washed by the waves.

The Parisian Frilled Canary.

By Mons. P. AUBEC (Paris).

This little-known variety of Canary is herein dealt with, not only from an exhibition point of view, but with an eye to commercial possibilities. The author points out how he made nearly £100 profit in one season from two pairs of Parisian Frills, and shows that English breeders could make large profits in cultivating a breed to which very little attention has hitherto been given in our country.

THE standard for these birds has been fixed many years, but owing to the progress made by the Parisian fanciers during the last few years, revision is necessary, and is even now under consideration.

In order to get good birds the parents must be chosen carefully, for if the birds are paired haphazard in a few years the characteristics of the breed will disappear. It is therefore necessary to select the birds carefully, this selection being based on the law of compensations.

For a very long cock, high on its legs, and rather scanty plumage, a hen should be chosen which is large and stout above all, and which has a fine long plumage.

Subjects perfect in all respects do not exist, and never will exist. Each bird will have some weak points which can be discovered by examining the bird closely and analysing each detail. When these faults have been noted, a mate should be chosen whose faults lie in the opposite directions. In pairing two birds with opposite faults there is hope of seeing these failings counteracted in the progeny.

Yellow to Buff as Usual.

Care should be taken also with regard to the colour of the birds. The best results are obtained by uniting the two extremes of yellow. A deep yellow cock, for instance, should be paired with a pale yellow hen, and in choosing subjects for breeding the saying should be borne in mind that "the alliance of two birds of the same colour always leads to certain degeneration."

If in order to improve a strain of Parisian Frills a breeder is obliged to introduce a bird from another stock, he should never hesitate on account of the price, but should take the bird which he requires, and no other. If he does not buy the best mate to suit his own bird, his strain will degenerate, and he will not obtain good birds.

In the breeding of Parisian Frills, as in all other pure breeds, inbreeding is necessary to retain all the characteristics of the breed. The introduction of new blood is very dangerous, because it leads to the degenerating of the breed and to atavism. At the same time, inbreeding should not be carried too far, as, sooner or later, it will lead to sterility or to an abnormal amount of dead in shell, or else the production of feeble youngsters incapable of reproduction. One can counteract, to a certain extent, the effects of inbreeding by a severe selection, scrupulous hygiene, and the best food, but these are only palliatives; it is necessary to have recourse to new blood, and this requires very great care.

Two Classes of Breeders.

In Paris many Canaries are bred by the poorer class of people, employees, office boys, concierges, doorkeepers of galleries, museums, etc. Other Frilled Canaries—these are the best—are bred by shopkeepers, artisans, and professional people.

The difference between these two ways of breeding is very great. Those who breed in a small way, with one or two couples, generally keep their birds with them, either in the kitchen or in the dining-room, but this way of rearing is not advisable; it is too hot in the living rooms.

Much better results are obtained if the birds are kept in a room specially reserved for them, in which a fairly regular and rather low temperature can be maintained, and where a fire is lighted only when the cold is too intense. Experience has proved that birds bred "hard" have much finer and better curled feathers than those which are always in a heated atmosphere.

In Paris, the breeder of Frilled Canaries, whether he be a young employee or a merchant, never leaves anyone else to attend to his birds; he does it himself. He has such a high opinion of his birds that he places them before everything. "My birds before all."

Although this may seem rather arbitrary, I must admit that these breeders are right, they know that Canary breeding more than any other requires the eye of the master, and that if they allow an employee or servant to clean out their birds and look after the young ones, the work will never be done with the care necessary for success. Besides, these breeders find in the care of their birds an agreeable relaxation.

Parisian Frilled Canaries required for breeding should be at least ten months old, that is to say, those hatched in the months of April, May, and June will be suitable to breed from towards the end of March in the following year, while young ones hatched July-August must be reserved for the year after.

The Parisian Frills are prolific to the same degree as ordinary Canaries, four or more clutches can be obtained each season, four or five eggs to each clutch. In order that the eggs may all hatch together the eggs are removed as they are laid, and replaced by porcelain eggs. After the third egg has been laid those taken away are returned to the nest.

The Care of the Young.

The market value of the Parisian Frills being very high, naturally great care is taken to obtain as many young ones as possible during the four breeding months, and to guard against misfortune.

Parisian Frills lay, hatch, and bring up their young very well, but now and then a hen will not feed her young regularly, and people have at once jumped to the conclusion that Parisian Frills make bad mothers, and that their young ought to be reared by another variety of Canary. For fear of losing their precious broods, the practice has become general, and now the young Parisian Frills are always reared by common Canaries.

One or two days before the eggs are due to hatch the eggs are exchanged, those of the Parisian Frill placed in the nest of the common Canary, and vice versa. This is why it is necessary to keep ordinary Canaries at the same time as Parisian Frills, and arrange to have eggs hatched simultaneously from the nests of the two varieties.

After the birds are hatched the young ordinary Canaries are left with the Parisian Frill for two or three days, not more, in order not to tire her, then the nest is taken away. This is always done, and succeeds very well, so the practice continues.

The period of incubation lasts thirteen days, as in all varieties of Canaries, but the young may be hatched out a day before or a day later, according to the temperature.

Immediately after the birds are hatched scalded crusts and egg foods, which should be made fresh every day, are given. The egg food, of course, consists of hard-boiled egg and biscuit in equal parts, the whole crumbled and mixed.

Believers in Green Food.

Eight days after the young are hatched a new nest is given to the Frills, and a supplementary nest to the Canaries which are feeding the young Frills.

The rearing of young Frills differs in one particular from that usually given to other varieties. Most Canary breeders advise that no green food should be given during the first week after hatching. Breeders of Parisians do not follow this rule; they do just the opposite. They give their Canaries chickweed all the year round, and especially at the hatching time. Their opinion is, "No chickweed, no Parisian Frills." They say that egg food alone makes the young grow too quickly, and without the chickweed they are subject to the inevitable enteritis.

The young Frills open their eyes days old, and at a fortnight old are bigger than their foster parents. But they should be seen at eighteen days old, when they come out of the nest and get on to the perches. They are then of extraordinary length, their legs are veritable stilts, and their slender bodies make them look miserable. What queer-looking objects!

A Critical Period.

It is just at this time that the mothers will pluck the young ones if they have not at their disposal a new nest and sufficient nesting material. They will find material on the backs of the young birds, and will pluck them without mercy. Breeders are glad, therefore, to see the twenty-sixth day, to be able to take away the young birds from the breeding cage and place them in an aviary, where they can disport themselves and strengthen their muscles.

The nest feathers attain their maximum length when the young birds are fifty days old. Then each bird shows what it is really worth; it is broad, strong, and very long, at least eight inches from the tip of the beak to the end of the tail, and the breeder chooses this period to classify his young birds. This condition only lasts about a fortnight, for immediately afterwards the first moult begins, and it is six or seven weeks before they are in full feather again.

The general aspect of the birds sometimes causes a surprise to breeders, and perhaps a bird which at first appeared to be a fine specimen is not nearly so good a specimen after the moult is finished. On the contrary the opposite may be the case, and an unpromising young bird may prove a champion. In a nest of four young ones, one is generally very good, two good, and one not so good. Thus all tastes may be suited.

A BIRD OF THE
"BULLDOG" BREED.

This portrait of a Buff Norwich Canary, which won 1st Prize at the Queen's Park Show for its owner, Mr. G. Butterfield, of Hammermith, shows well the contrast between the typical tightness of feather in British Canaries as contrasted with the artistic "frilling" of the Parisian birds.

THE DELIGHTS OF CANARY BREEDING.

By Miss A. HINTON.

ALL who see my birds compliment me on their glossy plumage and deep yellow colour. I have never gone in for colour-feeding, and may be termed old-fashioned for abhorring anything artificial. I have been told that by not doing so I have not as good a chance at the local show, but colour-feeding is not permitted with Border Fancy Canaries, and I felt very proud when my little Border hen, "Miss Kitchie," came out first and special, with her own natural colour. She is a deep yellow with a smart black-cap.

"Grandpapa" has only three sons living, so I must mention the eldest by his third wife. He is called Greville, and is quite the soldier in his demeanour—very active and slim; a deep yellow with evenly-marked black wings. His son, called "Baden Powell," has been kept, as he possesses an unusually fine voice.

I put my young cock in hearing of a good songster, and generally have one of the cock birds unpaired, as I find those engaged with their wives and families are too well employed to sing constantly.

Last year a pair of Yorkshires were introduced into my happy family. They had six beautiful birds, as straight and upright as a good principle. The father was said to have come from a prize strain, but their matron (as I call myself) was too diffident to exhibit their young at the show, as the Yorks competition is very keen.

My Goldfinch was paired last season to a clear hen called Mollie. They had four eggs in the first nest; Goldie was taken away. The little hen sat patiently over a fortnight, but with no results. In the second nest she had three eggs, and to convince myself whether she would prove as good a mother as her own was, one Canary egg was placed in the nest.

At fourteen days one hatched; hopes ran high, but it proved to be a dark green Canary. "Mollie" was proud of her solitary nestling "Bess," and kept her for six weeks. I hope for better success with Goldie this coming season. I shall mate my Linnet also; she is known by the name of "Con," is very active and gentle, and is about a year old.

I was rather loth at one time to keep wild birds; but, after much reflection, judged that, taken when quite young, they have not experienced the pleasures of freedom. All creatures were given by God for the use and pleasure of man, and therefore, if he desires to fill his home with melody, surely he may do so without offending the Great Maker, whose all-seeing eye lets not even a Sparrow fall to the ground unnoticed.

We take upon ourselves the responsibility of providing for their wants and attending to their ailments, and those who keep them should pay attention to them. They cannot speak, but their actions show us when anything is wrong.

At the request of several friends I ventured to write the above facts. I think that a lack of practical knowledge of the habits of the Canary is the cause of disappointment to those who are unsuccessful with them when breeding. It may be that very experienced fanciers may smile at my remarks, which are purely on the domestic side.

In conclusion, let me say that they merit all that can be done for them. With joy I enter my bird-room; the fluttering of wings, the tapping of the bills against the wires of the cages, and the burst of song which greets me, all these signs tell me that my labour of love on their behalf is not in vain. I am quite sure my feathered tribe, from "Josie" down to "Bess," appreciate all I do for them, and that those lost to me here by death will welcome and know me again on the other shore.

ORGANISING THE CANARY TRADE.

Further Progress of the Scheme.—Sound Advice for Novice Breeders—and Others.

EVIDENCE of the vitality of the movement which is being engineered with a view to capture the German trade in song birds by a business-like organisation of Canary breeders in the British Isles was provided at an important meeting held at the offices of CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, on Monday, May 22.

The meeting had two special objects, (1) the consideration of the report of the Sub-Committee (Messrs. Trower, Gutierrez, Vale, and Fulljames), who were appointed "to make full enquiries as to the questions which had arisen, especially the cost of production of Canaries for sale and to draft a scheme for the next meeting of the full committee," and (2) the appointment of an Organising Secretary.

There were present Messrs. F. Carl, G. Crabb, T. R. Trower, J. Jeffery, T. East, W. H. Vale, J. W. Ramsden, H. J. Fulljames, J. Robson, H. J. Kybert, and G. H. Maclellan.

Mr. Fulljames said it devolved upon the Committee to elect a chairman from amongst their number. There were present representatives of some of the most important London societies, and Mr. F. Carl, representing CAGE BIRDS. On the motion of Mr. Robson Mr. F. Carl was unanimously elected to the office.

Returning thanks, Mr. Carl said he was very much honoured by the privilege they had conferred upon him. He realised that it was a responsibility for which, perhaps, with his limited knowledge of the cage bird business as a business, he was not so well fitted as some other gentlemen who were present in that room, particularly Mr. Robson. But the responsibility for having brought them together rested primarily upon himself, and from that point of view he responded to their invitation to occupy the chair. He had no desire to occupy it permanently, for he was certain they had amongst them men of greater experience, men of better judgment, and men more competent to fulfil the permanent position of chairman. He was only occupying the position on that occasion in order to put before them his humble view of the situation, and the reasons which had animated him in calling them together as he did.

First of all, he thought he owed them some explanation and apology for not appearing at the initial meeting. Some of them were probably aware that he had at the moment a very heavy responsibility with regard to the National Egg Collection for Wounded Soldiers, and the provision of very large numbers of new laid eggs—amounting to thousands weekly—and his duties in connection with that undertaking unfortunately prevented him, not only from appearing in their midst at the last meeting, but from even letting Mr. Fulljames know the reasons for his absence.

At the request of the Chairman Mr. Fulljames read the minutes of the last meeting, which were eventually passed, and the meeting passed on to the consideration of the appointment of an Organising Secretary, Mr. F. T. Usher being, on the recommendation of the Chairman, selected for the office. After some discussion on the question of appointing a Treasurer to deal with finance, the office was eventually voted to Mr. Crisp, who was elected subject to his consent.

An interesting debate followed on the report presented by the Sub-Committee, the points of chief interest being the type of aviary most suitable to the breeding of Canaries on the colony system; the proportion of cocks to hens; the cost of feeding, and the number of young which might reasonably be expected to result per hen, and the prices to be obtained for the young.

With regard to the first point, the type of aviary favoured was one with a straight wire front reaching from floor to ceiling in the bird room, the advantage of the straight wire as compared with the mesh wire being that with the former the tails of the birds would not be so liable to sustain damage, which might render them unsaleable at a satisfactory price. A useful suggestion made in the course of the discussion was a boarded partition parallel with the window, the window being covered with straight wire, and an aperture at the back covered with straight wire serving as an observation point. The possibilities of using as cages ordinary wooden boxes with loose cage fronts so as to avoid the expense of buying breeding cages, were also favourably commented upon.

It was generally accepted by the meeting that from an aviary 16ft. long, 4ft. wide, and 8ft. high (320 cubic feet capacity), on the basis of two cocks and ten hens, eight young per hen per season might reasonably be expected, and at the end of the season these could be disposed of at remunerative prices.

A cordial vote of thanks was accorded the Chairman, on the proposition of Mr. Robson, who reminded the meeting of the fact that Mr. F. Carl not only allowed them to meet in his room, but had generously promised to "stand behind" the society movement for a period of six months.

The Chairman returned thanks, and explained that what he had undertaken to do was to underwrite the necessary capital expenditure to put the organisation on a proper basis during the first six months of its existence. If the revenue came in his liability would, of course, disappear.

GETTING TO WORK: ANOTHER IMPORTANT MEETING.

A most important discussion on the movement to capture the German trade in song birds occurred at a meeting of the Committee which has the matter in hand, held at the offices of CAGE BIRDS, Fleet Street, London, on Monday, May 29. There were present the Chairman (Mr. F. Carl), Messrs. H. J. Kybert, E. C. Last, J. W. Ramsden, H. W. Gutierrez, J. Jeffery, G. Crabb, T. R. Trower, G. H. Maclellan, H. J. Fulljames, and J. Robson, with the Organising Secretary (Mr. F. T. Usher).

At the outset the Chairman gave a brief resume of the position. The Committee would, he said, recollect that an appeal was made through the medium of CAGE BIRDS on behalf of wounded soldiers, for birds and material wherewith to start them in the breeding of Canaries, and also for funds wherewith to purchase stock. They had had, in response to that appeal, a large amount of correspondence, and he thought that it was only right that every application made by a wounded soldier should receive the careful consideration of that Committee before the application was responded to in the affirmative. Mr. Robson had pointed out at the last meeting how easily the well-intentioned benevolence of an organisation like that might go astray unless it was very carefully directed, and unless the applications were very carefully examined.

He had decided to submit to the Committee each week the applications received in order that the Committee might formulate their views on such applications. He might point out that in almost every instance when the application of a wounded soldier was received he was requested by the Secretary to furnish certain information, with a view to ascertaining from the Military Authorities the applicant's bona fides. (Specimens of Military certificates were here exhibited.)

The Chairman then invited discussion by suggesting that the members of the Committee should express their views on the subject, and especially with regard to the proofs to be provided before acceding to the request of an applicant.

Several points were raised, such as the financial positions of applicants, and finally it was agreed that, in addition to the production of discharge papers and certificates of character, by applicants, the Committee should require information whether an applicant already had birds, and, if so, how many; whether he is married or single, and, if the former, how many children has he, and that the Committee should also require an undertaking from the applicant that he would make a genuine attempt to breed birds from the stock awarded to him. It was understood that the investigation into these facts should be regarded as strictly private and confidential.

Matters of organisation were then freely discussed, and specimen cases were placed before the Committee. The question of providing the necessary funds and stock came up for discussion, and in reply to a suggestion by the Chairman on this phase of the subject, Mr. Last made a useful remark to the effect that the organisation should be worked through the local societies, of which there are about 800 in the country.

Mr. Kybert followed in a similar strain, and said he was sure the members of many local societies would only be too pleased to help in this way. At the same time he expressed the view that it is rather too late to expect wounded soldiers to do much with the breeding of stock this season.

This led up to a short discussion on the desirability of obtaining promises of stock at the end of the season, and it was stated that many such offers had already been received, and it was hoped that more would follow.

Methods of reaching the whole army of bird-keepers, including those not connected with local societies, were considered, and it was suggested that local societies, or the representatives of local societies, might get into touch with breeders in various ways, such as through the local corn dealers, and also with those who might support the scheme by subscribing to the funds.

On the motion of Mr. Trower, seconded by Mr. Kybert, it was decided "That local representatives be invited to serve in the interests of the Central Committee, in every district," and in order that effect might be given to this proposal the Organising Secretary was instructed to circularise every society for help in stock and funds.

cage—were young hens incapable of standing a journey longer than the distance to England, so that they need not be counted in the competition for the American trade.

Another point was made in a remark by Mr. Crabb that after the War a revolution in our Fiscal system would affect the question in an important manner. The London Chamber of Commerce was, he said, proposing that there should be duties on goods from enemy countries varying from 5 per cent to 30 per cent., and as Canaries would be likely, under such a scheme, to pay the maximum duty, it could be reckoned as a 30 per cent. handicap against the German birds coming here.

Announcing that the discussion would be adjourned, the Chairman made the interesting announcement that he proposed to invite several members of the bird trade to meet the Committee to assist in the ventilation of the subject.

Yorkshire, Not Norwich.

SIR.—The hens I offered in CAGE BIRDS of May 20 for your Wounded Soldiers' Fund are Yorkshires, not Norwich, as you have it in CAGE BIRDS this week. Though aged, they are in perfect health. If you do not get any applicants for them, I suggest that I pair them, and offer you the produce after the moult. I have really as many pairs up as I can manage, but for the benefit of so worthy a cause I shall not mind a little extra work.

T. C. CRAWHALL.

Referring to the letter we sent to the hon. sec. of the Highgate Hampstead C.B.S. inviting the society to appoint a delegate to serve on the Committee for organising the Canary trade and helping wounded soldiers to make a fresh start in their hobby, Mr. F. C. Knight, the hon. sec., writes that as there was only a small attendance at the last meeting our letter was held over for the attention of a fuller meeting. We shall be glad to hear from the secretaries of the other London societies who are not as yet represented on the committee. There is a good work waiting

This fine Greenfinch-Canary Hybrid came all the way from Glasgow to the show at the Holborn Hall, London, and won 1st prize for its owner, Mr. R. Heggie, of Stepps, nr. Glasgow.

A LONDON WINNER FROM SCOTLAND.

A publicity campaign was also decided upon, the idea being that it is desirable in the public interest that the scheme should have widespread publicity. An attempt will also be made to arrange lectures as the movement progresses.

Around the report of the Sub-Committee, referred to in the previous report, a debate ensued. The discussion covered a wide area of interest, and one of the special objects of attention was the comparative values of the German and the English Canaries, and an attempt was made to discover the reasons why the Germans had been successful so far.

In the course of the discussion it was argued that the cheap songsters sent over from Germany were "throw-outs"—birds which were weeded out on account of defects in song, the best birds being retained for customers willing to pay a higher price.

This brought up the question whether the public would be prepared to buy English-bred Canaries at a reasonable price, and it seemed to be the general opinion that if attempts were made to keep up the standard of the English bird as a songster, and to improve the song, there would, with the better colour of the English-bred bird, be no difficulty in competing with the German-bred bird, providing the bird dealers were thoroughly organised in this country.

Incidentally, one member of the Committee remarked that the Germans fed their birds chiefly on bread and water and rape seed, which did not tend to improve quality or stamina. Another observed that the birds sent over to this country—two in a wicker to be done, and all should take a hand in it.

A Chance for British Bird-Keepers.

SIR.—I regret I am not in a position to offer you Canaries at present, but I have about 1½ cwt. of splendid "wild seed," which I can offer you. I should think 1½d. per lb. would be a fair price, and all the cash received can go to your fund. I have always moulted my birds on this seed, but I am disposing of my British and Mules, so I have no further use for it. I wish your scheme the great success it deserves.

WM. HERWOOD.

Wolverhampton.

[We forwarded to our expert, Mr. Norman, the sample of seed as received, and his report is as follows:—The sample of seed submitted for examination is quite a good one, clean and well harvested. The bulk of the seed is charlock or wild mustard, well ripened, and sweet to the taste. Other seeds are thistle, dock, grass, shepherd's purse, corn marigold, and several useful varieties in small quantities. The charlock is quite equal to many samples of rape seed now being sold. As a food for finches it would certainly be very useful, and if a small portion of teasle, maw, and niger was mixed with it it would make an excellent substitute for the usual wild seed mixture. It would not be of much use for Goldfinches, as they care little for any kind of rape, but for Greenfinches, Linnets, Twites, and Redpolls it would be excellent, and the Bullfinch would find some of it to suit his taste. To keepers of the above birds it is worth considerably more than the price you mention.—H. NORMAN.]

New Secretary for Selby C.B.S.

SIR,—I regret to announce that, through unavoidable circumstances, I have been compelled to relinquish my post as secretary to the Selby and District C.B.S., and therefore all communications relating thereto should be addressed to Mr. W. Prankett, Fairfax Avenue, Armoury Road, Selby, who has been elected to the position vacated by me. I should esteem it a great favour if you would kindly give publicity to this in the columns of your valuable paper, and I should like to thank you most sincerely for the many favours which you have granted to the society and myself during my term of office.

Successful Breeding from a Hen Mule.

SIR,—Some weeks ago I wrote to you about breeding with a Canary Mule, and you kindly answered through your query columns. I have tried the experiment, and thought you would like to know that I have been successful. I had four eggs, three of which contained a chick; one was dead in the shell, the two hatched are going on very nicely. I might mention that I have picked up many hints from CAGE BIRDS, of which I am a regular reader.

W. CLIFTON.

Redpoll Mules Bred in an Outdoor Aviary.

SIR,—Being a reader of CAGE BIRDS I thought you might be interested to know that I have a Redpoll in an outdoor aviary which paired with a Canary last year. Three of their offspring are singing now lustily, and I was wondering if they should be shown at a bird show.

LAURA PIMM.

[The cross between the Redpoll and the Canary is not an uncommon one, but some of the young so produced are prettily marked, and stand quite a fair chance when they do not happen to run against greater rarities. Certainly you should show your birds; it adds much to the interest of their keeping.—EDITOR.]

The Evolution of the Yorkshire Canary.

A Question of Dates.

SIR,—Mr. Thos. Heath has sent me the enclosed note.

I have been reading your interesting article on the "Evolution of the Yorkshire," and, I think, if you look carefully through the First Edition of Wallace's book you will find this was published in 1879 or 1880, certainly not in 1875, as they have under their picture of a Yorkshire (of which yours in CAGE BIRDS is an exact copy), "1st Prize at the C.P., 1878." At the end of Wallace's book you will find a catalogue of books 1879, and the 2nd Edition of the book was published 1886 or 1887. There is no doubt the Yorkshire Canary was originally produced by crossing the Lancashire and the Belgian; in fact, they were first exhibited as this cross at the Crystal Palace Shows in the early seventies. I have both of these editions in my possession, and have also a book on Canaries published in 1713, and several others a few years later.

THOS. HEATH.

It is very nice of him to take the trouble of writing, but he is wrong in his dates. My authority was Wallace himself. My own first edition I gave away some time ago. My second is 1884 (Wallace did the work of revision in 1883), and my third edition is dated 1893. Blackston's book came out in 1878, and Wallace was before that date I know. It is quite possible that a reprint appeared in 1879, and as the text was not revised it was kept as a first edition; such things do happen.

Hand-rearing Young Starlings.

SIR,—I shall be grateful if any reader of CAGE BIRDS can tell me the best way to bring up a nest of Starlings. I had a nest of four brought to me, and fed them on Mynah's food (meal, breadcrumbs, dried flies, etc.); also tiny worms now and again, but all the birds died one by one; it seemed as though the food did not nourish them.

PEGGY.

The Value of Pedigree Breeding.

SIR,—I am sending you herewith a leaf out of my pedigree book representing the parentage of the pair of birds I have in my No. 1 cage for 1916 breeding. You will notice that out of all parents shown there are only three buff cocks. From this pair last year I only got two youngsters, both buffs, a cock and a hen. I am endeavouring, amongst other things, to try to prove the percentage of yellows to buffs, keeping the parents the same colour for generations.

So far as I can tell from the three in the nest this season there are two yellows and one buff, but, of course, it is only from continued observation of many pairs that inferences can be drawn. I should strongly advise those who can to keep a strict pedigree, observing the matings, and the results, not of one season only, but of many.

In this pedigree you will notice only one case of relations being paired together, but I am experimenting with several pairs, including two pairs, father to daughter, and several of uncle to niece, and the reverse. I think that we take too much what we are told for granted, and I am trying to see if there are ill-effects to be obtained from close relations, for I am sure that it is the chief means of retaining type in a strain, though I will not say it is the only way to produce exhibition birds.

Hints on Line Breeding Wanted.

SIR,—I wonder if any of the "old hands," could find time to write an article now, in the middle of the busy season, on line breeding and inbreeding with special reference to the Canary. I am aware that the subject is touched upon by Mr. House in his book on "Canary Management," and also in that splendid little work of his on Norwich Canaries, the breed in which I am particularly interested. The monograph on Norwich Canaries is a most admirable shillingworth, and I cannot find words to express my regret that I did not procure a copy until about a week ago. Had I been in possession of it earlier in the season it would have saved me many pounds, and, what is much more important, at least one season in the formation of a stud.

I cannot too forcibly impress on the novice the urgent necessity for every beginner to make himself conversant with the proper way "to set about it," and I have been struck by the manner I have received from various would-be sellers that the "birds are unrelated." My previous experience in breeding other stock, fowls, pigeons, etc., should have taught me that to secure the best results without loss of time was to go in for "line breeding," that is, to use birds which, if not closely related, are at least members of the same family or strain.

I have enough youngsters now well in the flights to assure me that the best for type and quality are those which have been bred from parents which were purchased from one breeder, and which bore a strong family resemblance to each other. To a certain extent I have been misled by conversations I have had with various breeders, each of whom bred "such and such" a good one from the cock he had from "so-and-so," and the hen he had from somebody else. Undoubtedly a good bird is occasionally bred in such a way, but, while I admit it is very difficult to breed all good youngsters from parents which are fine specimens and are related, I am now quite convinced that it is infinitely easier to breed a much higher percentage of good youngsters from related parents than from birds which are selected at random from various breeders with the view of an attempt to breed good stock by blending the finer qualities of each parent so procured.

I believe the best way to procure good stock for making a start is to buy them from a private breeder. But many of them buy ten times more birds for resale than they breed themselves, and the difficulty is to get to know who is the genuine amateur and who is the professional bird dealer. I have no quarrel with the dealer; he is a most useful person in his proper place, but, my opinion, for what it is worth, is that the best man for the novice to buy two or three pairs of breeding stock from is the man who breeds all his own winners, and sells only birds of his own breeding.

Another point: When that slashing good hen arrives, with the good head and other points for which you are asked a modest sum, put on your considering cap, and wonder why the apparent bargain is offered you. She may have been proved to lay an egg about the size of a pigeon's, but only one, or to be one who lays a full clutch, and is so proud of it that she won't come off them for several days, and when she does come off doesn't go back, or who makes an admirable nest, lays the full clutch, sits admirably, but won't feed.

I don't mind the latter a bit, especially if the seller is a decent sort of chap, and warns you what to expect. Feeders, good feeders, can be bought cheaply enough, and are not difficult to procure, and no novice should be without a pair or two of good "commoners" for feeders if he means to do any good in the Fancy, and "commoners" are very prolific, as a rule. A few common youngsters sold later on in the season help to reduce the adverse balance on the seed bill; they will fetch good prices next season I am pretty certain, for Canaries are to be a short crop. The London dealers don't send down men and women into provincial towns to buy up all they can get hold of at 10s. a pair if it were not so. I am not exaggerating when I say that dealers' representatives have been touting the various towns buying up all they can lay their hands on, just as they used to do before the war made "antiques" a luxury only to be purchased by wealthy Americans. I know one man, a "birdy" friend of mine, who has just cleared out thirty pairs at the price mentioned, with a promise to buy every youngster he can let them have at a very much better price than he has ever made before in the whole of his fifteen years' experience. I am afraid I have digressed somewhat from the original intention of this letter, but if I have conveyed a few hints to some novice like myself I shall have achieved something by helping a beginner to avoid some of my mistakes.

A Raid that Failed.

SIR,—The other evening a party of four, through an open window of a sitting room at Holm Park, the residence of Mr. F. W. Gardiner, headmaster of Warminster School, Mofiat, and though the room was occupied it fearlessly alighted on the top of a Canary's cage. Gipping the Canary with one of its talons, it tried to drag it through the bars of the cage, and before it could be caught or frightened away it had so torn and mangled the Canary that it was almost dead when taken from the cage. The Hawk escaped, and the Canary was brought to me either to cure or to kill, and I am glad to say it is almost all right again, and is singing splendidly, although one of its legs is not quite cured yet. It is a yellow marked Border Fancy Canary.

A. M. GRIEVE.

"Cuckoo, Cuckoo."

SIR,—Mr. Napper says: "If Mr. Craig had complained of my remarks, as I am constrained to complain of his, I could find pleasure in admitting frankly any mistake or misbehaviour I may have been guilty of." I complained about Mr. Napper misrepresenting me, but he admitted nothing about it. Comment is unnecessary.

Mr. Napper also says: "The fact is he wants to make out that the 'chucking out' by the nestling Cuckoo was entirely his own discovery." I want to make out nothing of the kind; in fact, it is the very opposite, as I quoted both Dr. Jenner and Mrs. Blackburn in the discussion in support of my statement. What I claim is that it required the photographs to settle the question. I walked more than one hundred miles in connection with the photos to prove my case.

There were two young Cuckoos in the Meadow Pipit's nest and, although not two days old, each of them was trying its hardest to oust the other out; it was a sight never to be forgotten. Eventually one of them was ejected. I replaced it in the nest, but after a short tussle the strong one ejected the weak one, which was somewhat weakened for want of food. Again I replaced it in the nest, but on the following day it was gone altogether. I procured a young Yellow-hammer about four days old, and put it into the nest beside the remaining Cuckoo, and the young Cuckoo immediately hoisted it on its back, and climbed up the side of the nest, and shot it over the side. During the operation Mr. Peat Millar, of Beith, took a series of snapshots. I replaced it in the nest again, and the young Cuckoo repeated the operation.

This particular Cuckoo was the best worker I have ever seen either before or since, and I have experimented with a lot of them. I could tell Mr. Napper a lot about the Cuckoo, but he does not seem to be an apt student.

Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR,—I said I would write again when my hen Bullfinch, which I have paired up in an outdoor aviary with a cock Goldfinch, began to go to next. I first noticed her building on May 4. She built a nice substantial nest in a bunch of bracken and sticks tied up in the corner under the roof, and laid her first egg on the 9th. Not wishing to trust her too far, but afraid of interfering too much, I thought I had better wait until the clutch was laid before removing and exchanging them for those of an old and trusted hen Greenfinch in my other aviary. I know that she laid at least three eggs, but, alas! when I went on the fifth day I found, to my disappointment, only one egg left, and that evidently unfertile, as the contents rattled about so the only thing to do was to put in a couple of wild Greenfinch eggs, just to test her, and see how far she could be trusted. This I did, and a week ago I found a broken hatched-out shell in the aviary, and felt a young bird in the nest.

So far she has sat admirably, and appears to be feeding all right, so I have hopes of some really good luck later on when the Goldfinch is in really high condition. Meanwhile, I shall try to prevent her going to nest too soon again, if she deserts before these fledglings are finished off. I hope "Canary Bullfinch" has also "got a move on."

I might mention that in my other aviary, I have already got a Linnets-Greenfinch hybrid out of the nest a week ago, which I am now hand feeding, as its mother went to nest again after rearing it for a fortnight. She is now paired with a cock Siskin. From the same Linnets (a pure white one) I have also got two Canary Mules, about twelve days old. They are brown, except for a few white feathers, but I have not really examined them as they are still in the nest.

Midget, Tottie and Scrap

A CHARMING STORY OF THREE WAXBILLS, TOLD BY MISS H. B. RUTT.

I MUST tell you about these tiny birds together, as, although they live in the cage with the larger birds, they keep themselves quite apart. Midget and Tottie are Avadavats, and Scrap is an Orange-breasted Waxbill. I will tell you about the Avadavats first.

They are very, very small—smaller than our Golden-crested Wren. I have had these a good many years, and they are both very old now. Tottie, especially, is so aged that she has turned almost white, at least her wings have, and it gives her a very peculiar appearance.

These little birds are seldom separated, as when resting on the perches they are always pressed close together. I have seen cages with twenty or thirty of them for sale, sitting in one long row on a perch, all squeezed together as tightly as possible.

Aged, But Still Happy.

Midget is a very handsome little fellow, or was in his youth; he is rather shabby now. He has dark brown, almost black, feathers, closely mixed all over with bright red ones, and over all are dotted small white spots, as if he had been splashed with whitewash. Red beak and red legs, and very bright, small ruby eyes.

His little wife, Tottie, is much more soberly coloured. Nearly all grey, with red beak and legs. She, too, has lost her youthful beauty, but they are both very happy and quite well.

Scrap, as I said, is quite another kind of Waxbill. He is still smaller, and I think I am right in saying that he is the tiniest bird that there is, except the Humming Birds. The upper part of his body is dark green, and his breast a lovely yellow and orange. He has, too, an orange streak over each eye like a large eyebrow. How wonderfully small his bones must be, and his little head, if we could see them without the feathers!

And yet these mites come all the way from Africa, and though I am afraid many must die on the voyage, a great many manage to live and enjoy good health for several years in this cold, damp country of ours.

Scrap is in beautiful plumage. He is not so old as the Avadavats, but I have had them all a good many years. Scrap had at first a wife, to whom he was devoted. Her name was Tiny. They all lived together then in a small cage. Each couple had its own rush nest, and they were quite friendly, but not on visiting terms. They never by any chance went into each other's houses.

Consolation for the Widower.

About three years ago Tiny died, and for two days Scrap was inconsolable. He was absolutely miserable. He was so cold, even in the nest all by himself, and I thought he would die too. But on the third day Midget and Tottie, after putting their heads together, made him a little speech. "Scrap," they said, "you cannot have your wife back again, and we can see you are miserable. Let us be a trio, as we can no longer be two pairs. There is plenty of room in our nest for three."

Of course, Scrap accepted their kind and generous offer, and they became a trio, and have been one ever since. But "plenty of room!" They could just squeeze in with the greatest care. They always, of course, get into the nest head first, then they all have to turn round, as they like to sit looking out of the door. Well, they said they were "nice and warm." I should think they must have been!

The Inseparables.

When they were moved into "Chateau Chez les Oiseaux" they felt rather strange at first among other birds, and with so many rush nests for choice. But they soon selected one, and still continue in unbroken friendship as a trio.

When sitting together cozily inside, the effect is quite as if there were only one very plump-breasted bird with three small heads—as the pretty, tinted feathers are all blended together, and the three heads, leaning one against the other.

In the winter, on fine days, the sun peep into the chateau soon after twelve o'clock, and shines upon it until nearly sunset. This is, of course, a delightful time, and especially to these three small people, who though they say they do not mind the cold, and who do live apparently well and happy through many winters, still I think, would confess sometimes to a longing for sunshine.

When it comes they are the first to greet it. One small patch, an inch square, is enough to begin with, and they are at once revelling in the warmth. At the hidden mice on their follow the sun-line, changing their position when needful.

These little tinies are not hurt by the other birds. It would indeed be hard if they were, they are so gentle and innocent. But they are a little bullied sometimes; even David, the Aristocrat, does not always behave to them quite as he should.

He is too active to care to sit still for more than a moment or two himself. But he seems to enjoy disturbing the Waxbills when they are thoroughly happy, basking in the sun's rays. He will hop quietly towards them, and with his closed beak just sweep them off the perch, as if they were a little heap of rubbish in his way. So they fly, and so does David the next minute. Then, in a second, the plucky little things are back again in exactly the same position, only to be disturbed again in a short time.

BEAUTY AND TALENT.

The Virginian Cardinal.

The Virginian Cardinal is one of the most gorgeously coloured of foreign birds, and at the same time one of the best musicians among seed-eating birds. The beautiful specimen here shown is the property of Mr. F. Howe, Wellington.

The Luxury of the Bath.

All my birds are passionately fond of their bath, but the Waxbills are the most eager of any. Except in the very coldest weather I give them the opportunity of bathing every day, if possible, between twelve and one o'clock.

Two good-sized baths, and one small one for the Waxbills, are hung outside the open doors of the cage, and then a fine water frolic begins. The moment they see the baths coming, the Waxbills are ready standing at their special door, fluttering their wings in anticipation.

It will give you a good idea of how small they are if I tell you about their bath. The bath room is a very small wire cage, with one side taken off. In this stands a round glass saucer, just three inches across. Not very large, is it? But into this filled with cold water the Waxbills hop, without the slightest hesitation, and always all three together. They manage to find room somehow.

A Co-operative Toilet.

Then, when they have had a thorough tucking, they cuddle up together and plume themselves; but whether Midget, plumes Scrap's or Tottie's feathers or his own is quite a matter of chance, and nobody seems to mind which way it is. Anyhow, in about ten minutes, three clean, glossy little Waxbills are sitting together, a little out of breath, and perhaps with heads tucked under their feathers for a well-earned rest after their exertions.

Do they sing at all? Yes, they do. Midget, in a very sweet, trilling little voice, in a downward chromatic scale. Then he ends with "Winnie!" in a calling voice. "Winnie" evidently means "wife" or "darling," or something of that kind.

When I bought him he did not begin to sing at once, so I named his wife Tottie. But Winnie would have been the best name for her had I known in time. She also sings quite prettily, but, of course, does not say anything about "Winnie."

It is very funny, when they are sitting in a bunch on the perch, to see Midget preparing to sing. He lifts his head and says "Tweet," then raises himself higher, gives another "Tweet," then stands up as high as he can, says "Tweet" again, and then breaks into the little chromatic scale, letting himself gradually down with the music, till when he finishes with "Winnie" he is down in the bunch again. In a few seconds this performance is repeated, and then once again. The Waxbills in all their ways are most quaint little people.

it was a pretty sight to see a row of forty or fifty of them sitting squeezed up together on the rigging of a large merchant ship in the harbour.

When the Nights Lengthen.

Near the Equator, of course, the days and nights are almost of equal lengths, and this is one trouble the Avadavats have when they come to our northern country, with its long winter nights. My little couple have a good supper about four o'clock. Then darkness falls, and they go to sleep.

But daylight will not appear till nearly eight. Their tiny bodies begin to cry out for another meal long before this. So when I go to my room at night, I let the light shine upon the cage, and down they fly, take another sipper, and up to bed again. Then about six o'clock there is a plaintive call for breakfast. Again light is given to them, and an early pinch of seed partaken of. Another nap, and they are ready for breakfast, when the sun rises at last.

The beautiful summer days that we enjoy so much are too long for the little folk, and a "fiesta" of two or three hours is taken about noon, the heads being tucked under the feathers as at night.

MONEY IN FOREIGN BIRD KEEPING.

There has never been a time during, say, the last ten years, says the "Yorkshire Post," when the price of all kinds of fancy birds has been as high as at present. Before the development of the foreign bird trade all sorts of fancy prices were obtained. Bird-lovers depended almost entirely upon the whims of traders. This does not mean that there is anything modern in keeping birds of every description in confinement. Aviaries were much more numerous in the 17th and 18th centuries than they are to-day. Almost every large country house, both in England and on the Continent, had its aviaries. It may be interesting some day to collect some of the descriptions of these aviaries and voleries, as they were often called, which have been handed down to us. The aviaries of the past were almost exclusively in the hands of the rich, who could afford to pay any prices for their hobby. Even at a later date the birds brought over from distant lands were probably all ordered in advance. They were brought by sailing ships, and received more careful attention than falls to their share to-day. On the other hand, the supply has greatly increased, and of late years a regular trade in this class of living merchandise has sprung up. Prices came down exceedingly, and as a result those who had a liking for beautiful birds were able to gratify their taste. This in itself would not have been wholly desirable, but for the fact that all the while the foreign bird cult was receiving the most thorough attention from scientists, who took it seriously. They were not content merely to keep caged birds; everything that was possible was done to supply the wants of the small strangers, and as a result during recent times almost every sort of imported bird has been induced to settle down and to nest in confinement. This, of course, is the supreme test. It is one thing to keep a bird alive, another to manage it so well that it will set about its domestic duties and rear young as beautiful and as healthy as itself. The present cessation of the bird trade has to a great extent put an end to all this, while it has naturally caused the increase in value alluded to. There is, however, still a fair stock of foreign birds in the country, and those fanciers who have thoroughly acclimatised specimens in their collection have at present a better chance of making their hobby remunerative than they ever had before.

A Useful Publication.

Books on gardening are numberless, like manuals upon every other speciality, and there are many weekly and monthly journals devoted to the subject. Most of these, however, are entirely above the heads of the tenant of a tiny garden plot such as is to be found at the back of the ordinary dwelling-house; they presuppose the possession of cold frames, greenhouses, and other appliances. A little work, entitled "The Small Garden, and How Best to Utilise It," has now been published by the Poultry Press, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C., which has for its object the teaching of how a very small piece of ground may be used to the best advantage. It is appropriate to the needs of the moment that very little space is devoted to flower growing, although enough is said to enable everyone to make his garden ornamental as well as useful. To the amateur who would like to know how to grow vegetables and fruit to supply the needs of his own family we cannot give better advice than that he should obtain a copy of this wonderfully useful little book. Incidentally, there are hints that should be to the advantage even of the more ambitious grower of vegetables, flowers, and fruit.

Scrap has no song, only one note, rather high, and, considering his size, very loud. I hear it every day, for he does his best, though this is all he can contribute to the tremendous hymn of praise that, like a cloud of incense, rises every morning to the Great King from His little bird-children all over the world.

Avadavats at Home.

Midget and Tottie were born beneath the burning sun of India. Here among palms, bamboos, and the sweet-scented magnolia flowers live a colony of Avadavats. The little nests are made in the tall, tangled grasses, and here the tiny eggs are laid, looking like sugar-plums.

Tottie laid several eggs in her rush nest, when my Waxbills had a cage to themselves, so I know what they are like. She did not think of sitting on them, and it would have been no good, as our climate is not nearly hot enough for them to hatch.

The eggs are, of course, extremely small, and more round than those of most birds, with the shells white and waxy-looking, and so clear that the yellow yolk shows through. I think the babies, when they first leave the nest, must be very sweet.

There are thousands of these little birds in India flying about in flocks. They mostly live in the torrid zone, not travelling much farther north than Calcutta. A friend of mine who had been living there told me that

HIGHGATE. HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting at Sec.'s residence, May 22. A good muster turned up and some good business was discussed. Result of the pair show was read and was very satisfactory. A suggestion for a ramble was next put forward and met with great approval, and it was proposed that a ramble should be fixed for June 4 to occupy about four hours; meet at Eastleigh Station at 9.15 and return about 1.30. Mr. E. Cook will lead. Bird life is now at its best, and no doubt all will profit by the walk. Decision for N.F. Show was held over till next meeting, and Sec. will be pleased to put forward any proposal sent to him before meeting night of June 13, and hopes that members will roll up in full force. A presentation to the Society was made by Mrs. J. Alderslade, in the form of a handsome rose bowl, and a hearty vote of thanks was accorded for the same. Our collection of trophies is on the increase, and there is every possibility of some very keen competitions for them.—J. Alderslade.

existence some time in your bird, put on a rubber band for a fortnight as a preliminary treatment. Make these by cutting slightly less than an eighth of an inch from the end of rubber tubing, such as is used on babies' feeding bottles. Hold the front toes all together and pass them through the rings thus formed, and, holding the hind toe back against the leg, pass on the ring up the leg until near the end of the hind toe. Then leave it there, so that when you release the bird the hind toe will be held back by the ring. After wearing these a fortnight, remove them, and give small, nearly round, perches, about the size of a lead pencil, and leave these to complete the cure by natural means. See that the perches are securely fixed and conveniently placed for the bird to get about them.

DROPPING FEATHERS (T. J.).—The birds were not in breeding condition, which is the cause of the clear eggs. It is absolutely useless trying to breed with them whilst the cock is dropping feathers and out of song. Remove the nest and material, separate the birds and treat them the same as advised to "Glasgow Novice" in this issue, except that you need give the buckthorn aperient for three consecutive days only, and then go on to the other treatment, which continue until the cock has quite ceased dropping feathers. Then you may try again, though I fear the season will be too far spent for you to get more than a single nest from them this year in the most favourable circumstances.

SITTING ON NEST (H. H.).—The hen is probably suffering from some ovarian disease, and will not be at all likely to do any good in the breeding line this season, if at all. Your best course to avoid disappointment would be to replace the hen with a lusty, vigorous young one before the season gets more forward. Otherwise, you may treat her the same as advised to "Glasgow Novice" in this issue, except that you need give the aperient for the first three days only and then go on to the other part of the treatment, and also do not give this hen any dandelion at all. For green food give flower heads of groundsel, chickweed, crisp young lettuce, or watercress.

TWO CLUTCHES CLEAR (A.M.F., Novice).—There is probably nothing wrong, except that the birds are rather late in coming into condition, which may be partly attributable to their ages. Two 1915 birds would have made more suitable mates for these two birds in point of age. Leave them together and feed and treat for two or three weeks the same as advised to "Glasgow Novice," but give the aperient for two days only, and, of course, you will allow the hen to share in the dandelion as she will remain with the cock. You may either omit the other green foods mentioned, or add them as a little extra variety.

NESTING DIARRHŒA (E. T. B.).—See that the water vessels are kept scrupulously clean, and also all foods and water. In particular see that any hemp you use is quite sound and sweet in the kernel. Then when the hens have laid their should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battley's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Avaries, Bird-rums, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Dissection of Cages, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2d.); No. 23 "The Boring Fungus," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. clutches do not give any very succulent green food, and instead of giving any egg food whilst sitting give half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts maw, hemp, and crushed dry arrowroot biscuit every second day, and on the alternate days add a teaspoonful of lime water to the drinking water.

ROLLER COCK BALD (W. G. T.).—(1) It would require much more detailed particulars to solve the cause of the bird's bald condition with certainty. It may be due to a certain extent to an inherited predisposition, to constitutional weakness, to skin disease, to the irritating effects of insect pests, or quite a number of other causes. It will not necessarily affect the breeding powers of the bird, but whether it is advisable to use a bird predisposed to the trouble as a stock bird is another question. You should read and digest the article on the "Principles of Breeding" in the current issue of our Annual. Let the staple diet consist of two parts canary to one part summer rape, and give all other seeds separately and in small quantities as extras, as you may see frequently detailed in these replies. Also hang on the bath for half an hour or so daily, and the regular appearance of it, coupled, perhaps, with the example of the hen, will eventually convert him to its use. It is useless trying to treat the baldness now, unless you separate the bird and give up attempting to breed with it this season, but if you will write again about the beginning of August, before the moult is due, and repeat the particulars, I will advise you how to treat it so that it may moult out into more perfect plumage.

(2) The red mite is a small insect which is parasitic upon birds, and hides away in cracks, etc. in the cage by day, and preys on the birds at night. In colour it is deep crimson, and size of adults about two-thirds the size of a letter "o" of this type. Examine the cages, and if you find any areas covered with a white powdery appearance around any joint, you may be sure there is a colony of mites there. If you look up a few back numbers you will find full details for exterminating them, as they have been rather frequently given.

SHELLED SEEDS (D. M. N.).—I take it you mean that the bird shells the seed and then rejects the kernel. First of all chew a pinch of the seed to see if it is sweet and free from mustiness. If so, then there is some digestive derangement. Treat as follows: In addition to the staple seed diet, give every second day a morsel of bread and milk with a sprinkling of soft sugar on it, and on the alternate days give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and maw, and also two or three crisp young leaves of dandelion. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and after this give instead of four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of columba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week or fortnight as may seem necessary.

EGG CAKE (R. B.).—(1) In my opinion an extra egg and four ounces less sugar in your recipe would make a better proportioned and more valuable egg cake for rearing young. Possibly half the quantity of baking powder would be an improvement. I prefer the very minimum of chemical ingredients in foods of this kind. (2) I think the amended food would be a very useful substitute for the orthodox egg and bread crumb, but I do not go so far as to say it would be quite as good, for the simple reason the constant "freshness" of the orthodox article, which is often a great inducement to birds to keep keen on feeding, is very largely lost in my prepared article.

THAT TIDE-WATER MARK (B. T., Cardiff).—(1) Try removing the drinker and offering the bath as before, with the addition of slightly bedewing the plumage with a spray when the drinker is taken off, and also, if possible, let him see another bird bathing. The instructions for hand-washing are too lengthy to give here now. You would find them in many back numbers, or in Part IV. of "Our Canaries." Impossible for me to say whether you are competent to do the job or not. Being a tyro you should practise on a worthless bird or two first. After washing, the only way to keep the bird from getting again begrimed is to keep in a scrupulously clean cage and surroundings. Even then the "tide-mark" will appear after a time. You have to wash the bird each time it is shown if the shows are at any distance apart in time. (2) Where only a single bird is kept, the packet seeds are most useful for the seed mixture as extras. (3) A little more generous feeding in the way of extras, and an occasional dose of 20 drops of chemical food in the water is all that is absolutely essential for the moulting season. If you wish to colour feed for show, get a copy of the brochure on "Colour Feeding," which our Manager will send you for 3d., post free.

SOFT MOULT (P. B.).—The little use of the gas fire you mention would not suffice to cause the moult, which is doubtless due to the weather conditions of late. Every second day give each of the birds affected half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with 4 drops of sherry and 2 of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days add 20 drops of the following mixture to the water, and continue this until a week or so after the feathers have ceased dropping. Mixture: Dissolve half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, add a teaspoonful of glycerine, and the mixture is ready for use. The hens will not be in a fit condition for mating until quite recovered from the moult; with luck they may be ready by the middle of April.

MISS G. T.—Replied by post.
NOT SINGING (G. R.).—It is not unusual for birds that have passed their youth to take a more or less long rest after moulting before resuming song, and this is probably the only cause of yours remaining silent. It will doubtless open out as soon as the mild settled weather returns. Meanwhile, the following will help it. Give in addition to the seed diet, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a fortnight or so, and on the alternate days give a morsel of banana or a small spray of watercress and a pinch of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame. In the water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for three consecutive days, and after that 20 drops of lemon juice and six of glycerine every second day for a week.

IS IT INFECTIOUS? (F. W.).—(1) No, a Canary suffering with asthma or bronchial trouble would not infect other birds that were kept in the same cage with it. It is not an infectious trouble at all. It would, however, be necessary to remove it to a cage by itself in order to treat it properly for its ailment. (2) No, it is not permissible in the best interests of the owner to pair up a bird—presumably a hen in this case—suffering from asthma or bronchial trouble, even if the male is perfectly healthy. By all means give a perfectly healthy bird a perfectly healthy mate, and weed out all the unfit and weaklings.

IN BAD PLUMAGE (H. J. W. Peck).—I am afraid the bird will be very little use for breeding this season, and probably none at all until late in the season. Keep him in a fairly warm place, free from direct draughts and violent fluctuations, and treat as follows for a month or so. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. Every third day give separately half a teaspoonful of the seed mixture you now use with one part of summer rape and one part linseed added to it. On the intervening days give first a pinch of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame, and a morsel of banana, and next a small teaspoonful of scalded rape. Give a little crisp young dandelion, chickweed, or watercress as soon as you can get them, and allow the bird to bathe freely in mild weather. In the water add twelve drops of lemon juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and in the next week give instead 20 drops Chemical Food. In the next two weeks repeat the dosage in the same order.

SILENT YORKSHIRE (Nurse).—I am inclined to agree with you that keeping the bird in an alkali wire cage hung in a window may have had something to do with the origin of the trouble. See that it is now kept in a cosy place, not necessarily overheated, well away from windows, and burning lights in the evenings. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed on it and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a month, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, millet, teazle and broken groats, and on these days add to the drinking water 20 drops of whisky, ten of lemon juice and three of eucalyptus oil well shaken together. It is doubtful if the feathers will now be reproduced round the neck before next moult, but you may slightly anoint the bare place with sulphur ointment twice a week for a month, taking care to avoid soiling the surrounding plumage as far as possible. The song will not return until the bird has quite ceased dropping feathers, but should do so soon afterwards.

SOILED PLUMAGE (A Reader of "Cage Birds").—There is no way by which you can restore the plumage to its original clean condition except hand-washing. When plumage has become dirty and begrimed by the birds being kept in a kitchen or any dusty or smoky atmosphere the ordinary baths as supplied to the birds to bathe themselves will not remove the dirty appearance. A good deal also depends upon the individual bird, as some specimens will keep themselves clean under almost any conditions, whilst others quickly get grimy when kept under the best conditions. Now the birds are placed in a more clearly atmosphere you may offer the bath three or four times a week, choosing the mildest days, and offering it early in the day, for a time, which will make an improvement, but you cannot expect anything like a spotless plumage to result now from anything but proper hand-washing. If you are able to do this it would make the transformation at once.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

R.I.C.—Answered by post.
NO PROGRESS (Glasgow Novice). The birds are evidently very far from being in proper breeding condition, and I rather doubt the wisdom of encouraging them to reproduce their kind, considering the barrenness of the cock. You should thoroughly examine the cage to see if they are infested with red mites, and if so take immediate steps to eradicate them before the breeding season becomes more advanced. Meantime, separate the birds for a fortnight at least, and treat as follows. In addition to the staple diet of canary and summer rape, give each bird half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and broken groats every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of egg food, with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure and sesame added to it. Stop giving apple now, but give the cock a small stool of young dandelion daily—leaves, crown, blooms, all together, and the hen a fairly liberal supply of chickweed or the flower heads of groundsel, but do not give her any dandelion at all. In the water add six drops of syrup of buckthorn and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for three consecutive days, and then every second day for the remainder of the week, and in the second week give instead six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel every second day. If in good condition and quite vigorous at the end of a fortnight, not otherwise, you may try mating them again, but on the whole you would be best advised to turn them down altogether and replace them with a sturdier stock.

HIND TOES FORWARD (D.E.).—To be successful the treatment for this trouble should begin as quickly as possible after it occurs, which, in young birds, is generally very soon after they leave the nest, though some will leave the nest with it already developed. If the trouble has been in

TWO YORKSHIRES (Enquirer).—(1) Judging from your description the bird is far from being in "very good condition." See that the birds are kept in a bright and healthy position. Give in addition to the staple diet a morsel of bread and milk with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and dusted with carbonate of bismuth every second day, and on the alternate days give a morsel of banana or boiled carrot as a substitute for green food, and also half a teaspoonful of sealed summer rape. In the drinking water six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea every second day for a week, and after this give instead five drops each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian every second day for a fortnight. If feathers have not ceased dropping in that time, stop the medicine for a week, and then resume, and give 20 drops of chemical food every second day for a month. (2) If still in good health and vigour next season I should advise you to try this hen with a fresh cock—"fresh" in both senses. Let him be young and vigorous, and just a little bit of a tartar in breeding cage.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

BULLFINCH AILING (M. A. Sykes).—I am sorry you lost your hen Bullfinch, earlier treatment might have saved her. As regards the young cock bird, if you gave him his liberty he would no doubt recover, as this is quite a good time of the year to set a bird free. But you must not do it near houses, especially if he is particularly tame. Take him out in the country along a hedgerow or in the open field, in a wooded district if possible, then open the door of the cage, stand some yards away and let him come out quietly. If you decide to keep him, I would advise you to let him live as much as possible in the open air, and bathe frequently. Continue your present treatment as regards food, not forgetting to give him his share of soft fruits as they come in season. Fresh air and natural feeding work wonders in many cases, and if you value the bird, why not keep him until the autumn? Then if you do not consider his condition satisfactory you could give him his liberty. There will be abundance of food for him at that season. I have known similar cases to be successfully treated by turning the birds into an outside aviary.

All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MULE ROUGH IN PLUMAGE (Cecil, Barrow).—I have met one, or two similar curiosities to the one you mention during my lifetime, and I am afraid I can only give you a theoretical explanation. If the bird has really missed a moult, the feathers are naturally worn and frayed, as they have done duty for almost twice the usual period. There may be a certain amount of irritation in consequence, and the bird might add to the untidiness by worrying its plumage. Although your friend says that the mule did not moult last autumn, it may have had what we term a soft moult, and the change of plumage would then extend over a long period and the owner possibly overlooked it. In the new growth some ancestral characteristic might assert itself, in the same manner as we find a well-bred Norwich Canary show rough and untidy plumage in its second moult, although formerly closely feathered. As the bird is in song I do not think any special treatment is necessary; if kept healthy it may have a full moult next autumn. The bare place should be just touched with vaseline and a few drops of fresh lemon juice added to the drinking water. A little soft food about twice a week would be beneficial.

LOSS OF GOLDFINCHES (A. T. Wright).—I do not quite agree with you with regard to the loss of your two Finches. That a third one is now in song is no certain proof that your treatment is quite sound; to me it is simply a proof that this bird is the strongest one of the three, and has become accustomed to your particular treatment. The swollen gland at the root of the tail would point to some derangement of the system. The gland you mention is an oil gland, and if very much swollen should be pricked with a needle, but before doing so one should make quite certain that it is out of order. As regards the subsequent treatment of your remaining Finch, I would advise you to carefully examine all of your seeds, and see that each variety is really good to taste and smell. Allow the bird plenty of wild food and a daily bath. If you have not a copy of our Nutshell on the Goldfinch I should advise you to procure one. Our manager will send you a copy post free for 2d.

KEEPING A RAVEN (Raven).—The Raven is not a difficult bird to keep in confinement, as it will eat almost anything. In a state of nature it feeds upon all kinds of vermin, weaker birds, come, poultry, and carrion. In captivity it would require meat of some kind, mice, rats, or small birds, and scraps from the table, including a good-sized bone with a little meat left on it. These birds are very powerful and not easily handled, and are destructive to poultry and small domestic animals. As rats they are very fearless and not easily put out. Take all the larger birds Ravens do not appear to full growth as early as the smaller ones, in fact it is doubtful if they are fully grown until the third year. There are many stories of the longevity of the Raven, but I am unable to give you any thing authentic, though I have known several that have been attached to certain houses for a number of years.

FINCHES IN AN AVIARY (Aviaries).—If you had all cock birds, you could keep twenty in an aviary the size you mention. Six large, six small, and six high, but of course they would require keen attention in the matter of cleanliness. As a rule it is much safer to underpopulate an aviary than to fill it to its greatest extent. Personally I should be content to keep a dozen in it. (2) If you make a self-filling seed hopper it should have about three feeding holes to it, or it would be better to have two hoppers each with two feeding holes, and these should be placed at opposite ends of the aviary.

BREEDING HYBRIDS (Angler).—There is no reason why you should not have a try for the Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrids in your small aviary, many have been bred under the same conditions. As regards nesting arrangements, knock out the end of the wooden cage, and lace it with branches of heather or box, and then fasten it up in one corner of the aviary, and if you can get an old Greenfinch nest put it inside. At the opposite end fasten another old nest (Blackbird or Thrush will do) and supply the birds with plenty of nesting material, fine roots, twigs, short lengths of grass, moss and cow hair are the most useful. The reason for fastening branches round the nesting site is to give greater privacy. Hope you will be successful.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

SWELLING ROUND EYE, ETC. (W. B.).—Pleased to note its general condition is improving. I am of the opinion that the eye trouble is part of the general disorder, and that it will gradually disappear as the bird becomes fit. Bathe the eye with a tepid solution of rose-water and zinc, and lightly anoint the growth with a little zinc ointment; it would not be well to use anything more drawing or it might affect the sight. Keep its bowels well open by the use of fluid magnesia as required, and continue the full treatment given in my previous reply. Also put a little honey and borax into its mouth once or twice daily, this can be given either by means of a small stick or feather, or lightly spread on a piece of biscuit, bread, or plain cake—it is a matter of convenience, and the bird's temperament which method you use. You must guard carefully against draught till the eye is normal again. In the case of any development write again at once giving as full details as possible, but I opine improvement will be continuous though perhaps somewhat slow.

WHAT ARE THEY? (Novice, D. Mc K.).—I cannot trace in any of my books the vernacular name you quote, and consequently cannot give you any definite answer this week. Your description reads very much like some species of white-eared or white-checked Bulbul, but you make no mention of a crest, and these have crests. Could you make your description a little fuller? The white-checked Bulbul has the head brownish-black, the cheeks white a deep yellow ventral patch, and tail tipped with white. I should call the back and wings dark olive-brown rather than grey; but I strongly suspect that your birds are this species. At any rate you will be quite right if you keep a little seed in their cage and also supply ripe fruit, insecticide mixture (soft food), and live insects. It would have helped if you could have said what part of India they came from, and also tell me how they have been fed since you have had them; presumably you are feeding as per instructions from your friend. Identification is rendered more difficult owing to the fact that birds are imported from India which are not Indian birds at all.

BUDGERIGARS IN CARE OF BOY (Esperance).—I have confirmed your dietary for these birds, and if while you are away you make one general mixture of all the seeds you are now supplying that will suffice. With the small flap doors which you had put in your aviary according to my advice, it should be perfectly safe for any schoolboy to open one of these and push in tufts of grass for them. If they get a continuous supply of seeds and flowering grass all should be well; soaked bread is not required, not even when they are feeding young. Some pairs will throw out their young, others their eggs, and if such habits are persisted in the only thing to do is to change such unnatural pairs. But where such practice is only occasional, frequently the young will be dead when found—I never trouble to hand-feed Budgerigars. If you impress upon the boy never to leave the doors unfastened, I consider if you had him in for one or two days before you go away and let him see you attend to them, you should then be perfectly safe.

in leaving him to look after them in the same way—seeing is much better than having method explained.

PULLING ITS FEATHERS (Barrowman).—You would do well to get our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 23d. post free, from our manager; it would give you the full treatment and dietary for these birds. The dietary briefly should consist of seed mixture, ripe fruit (any kind it will take, including English fruits in season), nuts, biscuits, crusts of household bread, and a little plain cake. Cattlebone, grit, and a chunk of wood (for the bird to exercise its mandibles upon) should be continuously in the cage. Feather pulling is a most troublesome disease or vice to cure. Continue to spray with the quassa solution. Do not give any more bread soaked in tea, but you can give bread soaked in chemical food and water in lieu thereof. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the drinking-water with chemical food. You must persevere with the treatment, as improvement will not be rapid. Report progress in about a month.

RUNNING AT NOSTRIL (Lugton).—Spray the bird's nostrils daily with a tepid dilute solution of glyco-thymoline till the running ceases; it will do no harm if the bird swallows a little of the solution. If the bird is tame, and can be handled with impunity, then the nostrils had better be bathed with the solution, as this will be quite as effective as spraying—do not wet the surrounding plumage more than you can help. You must keep this bird strictly out of draught, and the trouble should soon yield. Keep the bowels well regulated (not watery loose) by an occasional dose of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful in the drinking water). Do not give any tea, coffee or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Report progress in two or three weeks.

GREEN PARROT MOUTLING (Cunningham).—It ought not to have the sop, and you must gradually wean it therefrom. Give it a seed mixture of giant canary, white millet, white oats, hemp, sunflower, and safflower in equal parts, well mix, then to each quart of the mixture add half a pint of shelled peanuts and again mix; store in dust-tight tin and keep in a dry place. It should also have ripe fruit, any kind it will take—sweet apple is very wholesome—also pieces of biscuit, stale crusts and plain cake, but not any sops or messes or general table scraps. It must have water regularly, and while the moult lasts you had better lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food, except once a week, when you must put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the water to keep the bowels properly regulated. A little later, as it gets older, it will settle down into a normal moult.

WHAT SPECIES? (Querist, Winchester).—Owing to a change of residence I am unable to state exact species; the genus Serinus is a large one, with many of the species very similar, and it is not safe to venture on memory alone. It is not the true Cape Canary (Serinus canicollis), but some near species; however, this will not affect replies to your other queries. (1) It is a Canary in the sense that the Canary is one of the Serinus, but it is, of course, a wild species and therefore in demeanour widely separated from the domestic varieties. (2) There is a strong probability that a pair would breed in a cage; only Serinus have done so. (3) By its song it is undoubtedly a male. (4) Most of the Serinus readily cross with the Canary (some variegated variety would be the best), and the offspring are Mules or Hybrids, the males usually being good singers.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

St. C.—Enteritis or inflammation of the bowels. Give your remaining birds a little calcium permanganate dissolved in the drinking water every alternate day for a week or two, and procure a fresh supply of seed. Your trouble is evidently caused by some impurity in the food.

F. L.—Roller died of pneumonia; it was otherwise quite healthy, and there was no existing disease. I cannot see that the trouble can be attributed to you. The term inflammation is vague and indicates nothing, and is often very loosely applied. Inflammation may attack any organ, and is not a disease in itself. The body was well preserved; no evident decomposition. Change of environment, temperature, etc., was probably the exciting cause.

Miss Hood.—Inflammation of the bowels.
Miss J. E. MacCallloch.—Liver disease, probably owing to some impurity in the food.

THE

MANUAL.

By H. NORMAN.

The Most Thorough and Practical Work on British Birds ever Produced. Published in two parts, or complete bound in cloth. Part I. Hardbills. Deals in the fullest manner with Linnets, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and all other species of Finches. Part II. Softbills. With Blackbirds, Thrushes, Jackdaws, Larks, and most of the more commonly kept species of insectivorous birds.

This work, lucidly written by a noted specialist, contains fullest directions for Hand-rearing, Keeping, and Exhibiting the most popular of our British Birds. Each bird is dealt with separately, its nesting habits, etc., are fully explained, and these, together with a description of its general characteristics, will enable the novice to easily identify the various species. Each part contains a coloured plate and numerous black and white illustrations by the author.

Contains indispensable information of an entirely practical nature on the keeping, feeding and general management of the more common and popular varieties of foreign birds.

"BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATIELS."

By C. P. ARTHUR. 6d. post free.

Is a splendid guide-book to perhaps the most interesting and profitable side of foreign bird-keeping. It tells you all you need know.

Wisely fed birds are healthy birds, and healthy birds do you service. Avoid all errors of diet in feeding them, therefore will help you to feed them properly. It is especially valuable at the season when wild foods are to be had in such abundance, merely for the gathering.
"Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants for Cage Birds"

There are many sketches and illustrations of all the best known wild plants.

A HANDY BOOK.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS
make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

SMALL AND LARGE IN BRITISH FINCHES.

While the Lesser Redpoll is about the smallest of our British Finches, the Hawfinch is the largest. Both are well-known on the benches of our Bird Shows, and the Redpoll especially makes a charming pet bird. The pretty little Redpoll shown in our picture won 2nd prize at Watford Show for Mr. S. Corley, of Watford; and the Hawfinch is the well-known winner belonging to Mr. J. H. Camm, of Smethwick. Among its numerous wins are 1st and Medal, Horticultural Hall, 1914; 1st Birmingham, 1914; 1st Watford, 1915; and 1st at the Welsh National Show at Cardiff, 1915.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

The Publisher "Cage Birds Annual," 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

THOSE who have bought or those who are about to buy a Grey Parrot, should get "Nutsell No. 17," it only costs 2d. post free, but the tips it gives are priceless: from: CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. (2d. from agents, a list of whom is published frequently.)

GREEN Amazon Parrot, exceedingly tame, perches on finger and talks, fine bird, handsome, speaks very plainly many words and sentences, clever mimic, sing "Oh! Dear," whistles tunes, 4 years old; £2 15s.; exchange anything; fowls wanted: Charles, 137, Phytian-st., Liverpool. (483)

THERE is no more lovely seed-eater than the popular Gouldian Finch, which, however, is very difficult to establish. This trouble can be overcome, and the variety kept successfully. But you must follow the hints given in "Nutsell No. 14," from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C., post free for 2d. From agents (see list frequently published).

AVADAVATS: Avadavats are very charming little birds, but they need care. The "Nutsell" booklet, "Avadavats," contains full information on the management of these birds. You cannot do better than have a copy by you, and we shall be pleased to forward same upon receipt of 2d. Write, The Publisher, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THOUGH they can often be purchased for the modest half-crown, Pekin Nightingales are very beautiful in plumage, have a fine song, and make ideal cage or aviary birds. Some very helpful information on this variety will be found in "Nutsell No. 19," the author of which is Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S. Get it at once, 2d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d. from our agents (list published frequently).

BREED Parakeets: true pairs—Blue Mountain Lorikeets, £6; Pennants, £5; Rosellas, £4; Tinnies Parrot, £5 10s.; Ceram Lory, 70/6; Redrump, 35/6; all-blue Macaw (Lark's), £20; Yucatan Jay, £5 5s.; White Blackbird, £5; Bearded Tits, 25/6 pair; all finest possible condition; Adventural Magazine, Vols. 2 to 6, 50/6 lot; Bird Notes, Vol. 1, 21/6; insectivorous birds' food, 2/5 lb.; free: John Frostick, Naturalist and Importer, 203, High-rod, Streatham Common, S.W.

WAXBILLS (Golden-breasted, Orange-checked, Grey, and St. Helena). Than this interesting variety, which can be purchased at from 2/6 to 7/6 a pair, there are few more charming foreigners. They can be successfully kept, too, with little difficulty if you will follow the hints given by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutsell No. 20," 2d. post free from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Call at any of our agents and get it for 2d. (list frequently published).

AIDS TO SUCCESS.

Our Books and a Common-sense Application of the Advice therein MUST bring you Profit as well as Pleasure

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper building, fitting, and management of aviaries and bird-rooms, and the making of cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Also lately the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon pairing, breeding, moulting, and successful exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/4, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateils is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Birds," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid. FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos., with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired. 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

THREE ATTEMPTS AT BREEDING SUGAR-BIRDS.

By MISS E. F. CHAWNER (Lyndhurst).

As stated in our review published in our Twitterings columns of June 3, an interesting article under the above heading was one of the features of the May issue of the "Avicultural Magazine." By the courteous permission of Mr. H. D. Astley, the Honorary Editor of the Magazine, and of the author, Miss Chawner, we are enabled to republish this for the benefit of those of our readers who are not members of the Avicultural Society.

THE three species concerned are the Red-throated Blue Sugar-bird (Glossopsitta ruficollis), the Blue Sugar-bird (Dacnis cayana) and the Yellow-winged Blue Sugar-bird (Cyanerpes cyaneus), and though each attempt failed, they may be worth recording.

First in the field were the Red-throated Blues, bought Feb. 28, 1911, from the late Mr. Sutcliffe, who had privately imported them. They were in faultless condition and quickly made themselves at home in a small garden aviary with heated shelter. Their diet was the same as that of other sugar birds: sweetened milk sop, grapes, banana, and orange; the hen was very fond of maw seed and occasionally swallowed a mealworm, but I never knew the cock to take either seed or insect.

They were a charmingly pretty pair, and the cock had quite a nice song. When they were sent to me Mr. Sutcliffe warned me that the cock was "wheezing," which made me very anxious, but presently I discovered that the so-called "wheezing" was his alarm cry, though I must say that it sounded more like bronchitis. If I went near the aviary after dark he would "tune up" at once.

A Promising Commencement.

They began to look about for a nesting place during the second week in June, and by the 24th had built a neat cup nest of heather twigs, cotton wool, and bents, and lined it with hair (much like a Hedge Sparrow's nest) in the corner of a Hartz cage fastened high up in the shelter.

The cock continually accompanied the hen in her search for material, and mounted guard while she was building, but I do not think he actually carried anything or worked at the nest. When they had finished they pulled it to pieces and finally built in an old wicker cuff high up in the same part of the aviary where they were practically invisible from below.

The hen began to sit July 5, but was not at all steady, flying off as soon as the aviary door was unfastened. I was afraid to look at the eggs, though I longed to see them and ascertain their number. When I thought nestlings might be expected I swept all the flies and aphides and other insects I could and turned them into the aviary together with living ants' eggs, very tiny mealworms and ripe fruit, hoping that something might suit.

Success Nearly Reached.

On July 13 I found a newly-hatched nestling thrown out and quite dead. I fancied that the mother caught some insects and carried them to the nest, but next day I found another nestling thrown out and the nest empty. I hunted for egg-shells, but could not find a trace of any, probably some of the other birds had eaten them.

At first they seemed inclined to go to nest again, but the hen soon tired of it and took no more notice of her mate's blandishments.

Before pairing, the cock used to display, spreading his wings and tail and puffing out his feathers. After pairing had been accomplished both birds uttered shrill squeaks in the style of the English Robin. To my great regret the hen died of a chill during the autumn and I could not get another. The cock lived until 1913, always in beautiful condition. End of chapter 1.

Chapter 2 begins in June, 1913, with a pair of Blue Sugar-birds. These charming little creatures are too well known to need any description, but I may say that I have found them the most easily tamed of all the soft bills. This particular pair were finger-stam and absolutely without fear. Their method of intimating a wish for nesting material was to fly on to my shoulder and tug at my hair, and they showed much annoyance on finding it a fixture.

I supplied them with tow and they speedily chose a place in a thick bough of Cypress in the open flight, where, on June 3, the hen began to build a plain cup nest entirely of tow.

Another Disaster.

The first egg was laid on June 16, pairing having taken place repeatedly during the previous days. The egg was large for the size of the bird, long, with a white ground heavily ringed with rusty red round the big end. Another egg completed the clutch next day and incubation began. I had great hopes, seeing that the birds were so tame, that all would go well. But it was not to be! On the 20th I found the hen dead on the ground beneath the nest. On examination she was found to be very fat, and this, combined with the excitement of nesting, had caused her death.

I know that it is not uncommon for these birds to go to nest in confinement, and I have heard of several cases where young have been hatched, though as yet I believe none have reached maturity or even lived to leave the nest. Had my birds hatched out I believe they would have fed their nestlings on green fly and wasp grubs.

The chief difficulty appears to be that while Sugar-birds put on fat very quickly and are decidedly greedy, thus becoming liable to apoplexy, if they are not in high condition they will not go to nest and the golden mean is hard to attain. End of chapter 2.

The Story of a Third Attempt.

Chapter 3 deals with Yellow-winged Sugar-birds, of which I had a lovely pair last spring. The hen has lived in my aviary since the beginning of 1913.

Last June she and her mate began to be very noisy, squeaking at one another continually, the cock erecting his head feathers and spreading his wings to show the yellow colouring. Then the hen became spiteful towards the Blue Sugar-birds, and they had to be removed lest harm should come to them.

On June 18 the hen began to build a nest of tow high up in the corner of the shelter in a box branch, driving away the Indigo Buntings who also had intended setting up house there. She built the outer part and then came a hitch, for she could not find any lining material to her liking.

Hitherto rather shy, now she became bold and almost mobbed me to try and obtain something suitable. I tried soft dried grass, strips of bass, deer hair, cotton wool, moss, dead leaves, but none of them pleased. She would come and examine them, turn them over and then resume her search. At last I gave her some fine shavings of paper, such as are used for packing chocolates, and she took to this at once and worked away as busily as possible.

Repe Still Deferred.

The first egg was laid June 22, the second on the following day, and she began to incubate. For two days all went well and then she forsook, for no reason that I could discover.

The nest was a pretty object, a deep cup firmly woven to the twigs of the box bough; a great deal of the white paper was used, and altogether it was a rather bulky affair. The eggs were large and long, very pale brown, darkening with age, heavily spotted and mottled with grey at the large end. The birds did not make a second attempt, and soon after the cock went out of colour. So ends chapter 3.

SENEGAL SPARROWS.

A pretty species not often seen on our show benches. The pair here depicted were exhibited at Watford Show by Mr. J. Goodall, Watford, and were awarded an "h.c." card.

How I Got My Khaki Canaries.

By MISS DYDDGU HAMILTON.

BEFORE returning to England, after a prolonged absence on the Continent, it occurred to me that since no singing Canaries can now come to us from the Hartz Mountains, we ought at least to be able to rear our own songsters, more especially as the care of these lively little creatures would seem to offer an interesting and soothing pastime for our wounded heroes slowly convalescing in good old "Blighty."

I mention these ideas of mine because, to my great delight, I find that they had also occurred, and on an altogether wider and grander scale, to the Editor of Cage Birds, who, I gather from the first number of that favourite weekly to reach me on my return home, has already been providing pairs of Canaries to our crippled soldiers, to enable them to try their own luck at capturing the enemy trade. Could any plan be better? I think not. May it have every success, and prove not only an absorbing hobby but a source of profit to our brave men no longer able to return to the fighting line.

What the Khaki Canaries Are Like.

Well, what first put the idea into my head was the colour of my sister's Canaries, which is khaki. That is to say, only their breasts are yellow, the rest of them being as near a match to our soldiers' uniform as feathers can approach to cloth. Their eyes, too, though in most lights they appear black, are, when the sun shines on them, seen to be of a deep wine red.

My sister's bird-room opens out of the drawing-room, whence one can watch the birds through the glass door. "Whatever shall I do with all my Canaries when we leave this house next summer?" asked my sister; and I replied, "If you can spare them, do please give me a dozen at least to take back to England. I am sure that khaki-colour should be fashionable there now, and if only I am as successful as you are in breeding them I might be able to dispose of some to advantage." "The Khakis are almost all hens," answered my sister, "but you can have them if you like."

A Clock-maker as a Cage Maker.

So the village clock-maker made me a travelling-cage for them, a cage so constructed that custom-house officers could see at a glance that no letters or other contraband of war was concealed among the birds, while they themselves were not too much exposed to the inquisitive eyes of fellow-travellers.

The cage was none too roomy for a dozen Canaries; but we thought my homeward journey would not last more than a week. Owing to the sinking of the "Sussex" it actually took double that time, but the birds neither quarrelled nor suffered in health. The streets of Dieppe, where I was fated to linger for five days, provided plenty of fresh grass and groundsel, while canary seed and spray millet abounded in the grain shop.

At length we reached London without further mishap, my birds and I, and immediately I loos'd them from their small travelling-box into a large flight cage, thinking they would be pleased with more space for exercise. But all the use they made of their wider range was to fight like so many Kilkenny cats! Thereupon I had to separate them as far as I could into pairs, and without further delay nesting began.

How to account for these queer-coloured Canaries my sister does not know. Her aviary was originally built for some small Foreign Finches, which I took out to Switzerland many years ago. Later on, my mother saw somewhere advertised for sale a fine pair of pure-bred Belgian Canaries and bought them for the big sum of 100 frs. (£4).

A Canary Refugee.

They agreed perfectly with the Foreigners, and nested and reared young for several consecutive seasons. Then, one day, when the snow lay six feet deep on all our mountain pathways, an English lady appeared unexpectedly at our chalet door, and in her hands was a sad little bundle which proved to be a tiny Hartz Canary entirely denuded of feathers except for a few charred stumps in wings and tail.

The wretched little creature was smeared with oil and wrapped in a pocket-handkerchief, and this is the story the lady told us: Her little boy had had given to him on his seventh birthday a singing Canary, which pleased him greatly, as the bird was very tame, and would fly out of its cage and perch on his head or finger.

A few days previously the child, in a fit of mischief, had snipped off the poor bird's feathers with a pair of scissors borrowed (without leave) from his nurse's work-basket. Being told it was a cruel act, and his pet would catch cold, he carefully wrapped it in cotton-wool bound round with pink tape.

But the worst disaster happened when the nurse, going at the small boy's request, to see that the Canary in its artificial jacket was comfortable for the night, accidentally dropped a smouldering match among the cotton-wool, which instantly burst into flame. That the unhappy bird survived this second mishap seemed a miracle.

My mother, who is exceedingly tender to all animals, nursed it back to health, and before many weeks were over it was flying about the bird-room with its Belgian congeners, and it was in this way that the Belgian stock became mixed with Roller blood. But, still, all the young bred were either wholly yellow or variegated with pure, bright green markings on body or wings.

The French Hen Did It.

A few years since, my sister, in need of an extra hen Canary, was informed that a "Christian Brother," who had been turned out of France when the Religious Orders were expelled, was then working as a maker and mender of boots in the next village to our Champéry. When the war broke out this little man walked forty miles over rough mountain roads to join the colours in his native land. And they would have accepted him but that he was no longer young, and several inches too narrow in the chest! He was a keen bird fancier, and would probably have an odd hen to spare.

In reply to my sister's request he sent a dull green-coloured bird, who is, my sister thinks, the ancestress of all her Khaki Canaries, which first appeared in her aviary three years ago, but all that season's young proved to be hens.

Last year, however, two Khaki cocks were hatched, and these my sister gave to me, with hens of the same colour, and in addition a variegated pair, the cock bird of which couple sings more like a Nightingale than any Canary I have ever heard.

An Insult to the Cuckoo.

Referring to the Zeppelin raid of May 20 on the South-East Counties, Mr. A. H. Mathew, writing to "The Observer," says "The flare of the bombs, the weird whistling caused by their descending revolutions, and their final explosion on reaching the earth, caused numerous Nightingales, far and near, to cease singing until the tenth and last bomb had burst. Then, quite suddenly, with one accord, a thousand Skylarks, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Nightingales burst into loudest song. It was then a little after half-past two. The effect was thrilling. It seemed like a choral defiance to the Hun from countless little British songsters' throats, and a Cuckoo, aroused from his slumbers, added a jeering call to the retreating alien enemy, who so closely resembled that parasitic avian intruder into homes not his own!"

HOW I COMMENCED IN THE HOBBY OF CANARY BREEDING.

A page of reminiscences sent in by our readers, and which should be useful to those who have yet to gain experience in Canary breeding, as well as interesting to the older hands.

BY R. YATES, HULL.

WELL, really! a couple of Canaries as a present from a friend. What shall we do with them? This was a problem which required some little consideration, especially with no knowledge of Canary ways, no cages, and no spare cash with which to launch out on such a new enterprise.

Such was the commencement of my connection with the "fancy." With no separate room to commence breeding in, a compact with the "missus" had to be arranged on mutual terms, which gave me a corner of the kitchen to commence the hobby.

Having noticed CAGE BIRDS in a news-vendor's window just about this time, I possessed myself of a copy, but this did not provide a home for my new friends, although by the way it provided hints how to go about it, and consequently I set about it in the following manner:—

A twopenny box from a neighbouring grocer, 2 ft. wide by 14 ins., by 10 ins., a cage front, two glasses, and 1 lb. of bird seed constituted my stock-in-trade; total cost 1s. I think this must be a record for furnishing a home, even for Canaries.

Well, safely housed, the birds were carefully attended to, and, although at the first matrimonial relations were strained, they managed to rear 21 youngsters out of 21 eggs, and every one was brought up without a loss. This was the result of the information obtained from CAGE BIRDS and the booklet in the Nutshell series dealing with Canary breeding.

The second season was much the same, 19 out of 20, but I have not reached such a high-water mark since. Whether it is that the birds deteriorate in the number bred according to the higher class of birds bred I am unable to say. Probably some of the older enthusiasts will be able to explain why the higher the class of bird the less number is bred.

The point all beginners should keep in mind is to keep in touch with the doings of the members of the "fancy" by taking "C.B." If they equip themselves with the booklet mentioned they certainly will have all the information in a "Nutshell" that is requisite for the breeding of Canaries, and experience will give the other necessary qualifications to ensure success.

BY MISS A. M. COOK, KILBURN.

THE first bird I had flew in at the window; it was a large buff Norwich cock, and I got him a wife at the nearest bird shop. She cost me 3s., and was, or, I should say, is, for I still have her, most ugly and small, but she brought up a family that were not at all bad looking, and a great improvement on herself.

About the same time I bought a pair of Madagascar Lovebirds, and made them a large cage out of the nursery fireguard, with the back carrier of a cycle for a door. I put in a hush and some branches, and they soon settled down.

A little time ago I had hopes of a family, as the hen had made a nest, and was always in the hush, but during a period of cold winds I found her egg-bound. I was able to save her, but the egg was laid on the cage bottom, and cracked, and now she seems to have given it up.

I think it is wonderful they started nesting at all, as they are in a room that is the nursery of five children. They do not mind the children at all, whatever they do, but if they see me come in with a millet spray or some green food they get excited, and seem to know it is going in their cage.

I now have a room with a good many birds flying loose in it, and among them is a pair of Spice Birds, who have been hard at work making a nest of strips of bamboo leaves, which they pull off the plant, and any other odds and ends they can find, and have succeeded in making quite a good nest domed over the top.

I have found CAGE BIRDS the greatest help to me, and I have taken it in ever since I discovered it. I am afraid I have asked it a dreadful lot of questions, which have always been most kindly and fully answered. I do not know how I should have got on without it, as I did not know anyone who kept birds to help me over my difficulties. It has all my best wishes.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

BY H. VALENTINE, BEDFORD

IT is now three years since I seriously took up the breeding of Norwich Canaries, and as I managed to get into the money with seven of my birds (all related), I think I can safely say that I have now got a winning strain, and I will relate how I came by it.

I have always been a fancier, and have always been more or less lucky. Some years ago I thought I should like to breed Irish terriers, so I went out and bought a smooth-coated Irish Terrier bitch, which was more like a pig than a Terrier. They say "fools wander where angels fear to tread," but I had her pedigree, and I mated her back to her grandsire, a well-known winning stud dog, and the first litter brought me two pups, one of which won 4th in the puppy class at the Crystal Palace, medal for best Irish Terrier dog in show at Romford, and various other prizes.

I know this is nothing to do with Norwich, but I just want to point out what my experience is of strain and luck. I soon gave up dogs, as my business did not allow of me giving them the required amount of exercise, and I turned my attention to birds.

First Love, the Roller.

I was first of all captivated by the Roller because of its song. I had a spare room, which I at once fitted up as a bird room. I did not use the ordinary double breeding cages, but fixed shelves along the wall facing the window, and fitted loose fronts capable of being divided up into separate cages by slides.

The space from the floor to the first shelf cages being about three and a half to four feet high, and covered with wire netting, made a splendid fly to put the young birds in. This should also be fitted with sliding partitions, especially if it is a long fly, as it makes it so much more easy to catch up a bird.

I had got my bird room, so I set about getting my birds. I bought about five pairs of Rollers reputed to be of so and so's contest strain, and I can tell you I had some pretty singers, but I did not know what to breed for.

I did not know where the faults were: I did not know what I ought to like and what I ought to dislike. Perhaps if I had had a Roller fancier to coach me he might have taught me or he might have given me up in disgust and told me I had got no ear for music.

I tried hard to learn the names of the different tours the birds should sing, but several of them I could not pronounce, and as for knowing when a bird was singing any particular tour, that was beyond me.

I used to make a grab on my CAGE BIRDS every week, and hunt up everything about Rollers, adverts, as well, to see if I could find out what a German sounding word was like when a bird sang it.

Where the Pianist Failed.

Once my paper contained an extra long article on the Roller, and, much to my delight, a bit of music which could be played on the piano. This piece of music was a particularly fine tour of some noted Roller Canary, so I read the article very carefully, and as I cannot play the piano myself I persuaded my daughter to play it.

I listened intently for the Roller note, but I couldn't find it. I persuaded her to play it again, but still with the same result. I asked her if it sounded pretty, and she said "No." Then I asked her to play it over two or three times until I told her to stop, as I had not yet listened to it from the pretty point of view.

It was then I thought she looked at me rather strangely, but she played it over several times, and when I asked her if she had ever heard any of my birds singing it, she banged the lid of the piano down and flung herself out of the room. To this day nothing will persuade her that I was not playing a practical joke on her.

Then came the time when the young cocks should be separated from the hens and taught their song by the schoolmaster. I could not tell a cock from a hen only by seeing it sing, but the young beggars would not let me see them at it. I would listen outside the bird room door, and they would all be singing quite joyfully. Then I would very quietly turn the handle and open the door a quarter of an inch at a time, and when I had just got it far enough to get a view of one corner of the room, before even I had caught a glimpse of a bird, one little beggar would give a warning shout, and there would suddenly be a dead silence.

This typical variegated Norwich Canary won for its late owner, Sergt. W. Gardner, of the Army Veterinary Corps, 14 First Prizes and 9 Specials. Mr. Gardner, who is now in the military hospital at Merne Bay, writes that though he had to sell this noted bird, he still has some of its sons and daughters.

It would be no good trying to catch them singing again for at least an hour after that, so I would just go into the room then in an ordinary sort of way, as though I had not been trying to spy on them, but I could tell by their suspicious looks that they knew what I was up to. However, at last I managed to pick out all the cock birds (and some that were not, as I found out later).

Then came the training under the special schoolmaster, closing the cabinet doors if they got too loud, and opening the doors if they got too soft, or when they sulked and would not sing at all; hushing the children's voices while I got on to a chair to listen at a certain cage to hear what particular bird was singing, because now I had the young birds training in the living room, so that I could have a song for every meal.

Love's Labour Lost.

After they had finished their training not one sang like their tutor: I did not know the name of any of the tours, and I did not know which were the best birds to keep, all because there was no other Roller fancier near, and because singing contests were too far away for me to get into touch with other fanciers who did know, and who would have told me the names of the various tours as the birds sang them.

BY F. O'SULLIVAN, CORK.

I STARTED with a little Roller cock which was given to me by a friend early in the month of August two years ago. I procured a medium size buff Yorkshire hen to mate with the cock, who was of a very rich yellow, but kept both birds separate until the following spring, giving each bird an ordinary diet of plain canary seed, a little apple twice or three times a week, and a small quantity of egg food which I made myself.

When the long-looked-for spring came, I added to the hen's diet a little watercress and some cuttlefish bone, the former given about twice a week. I gave the cock larger quantities of egg food than before, and let him have it more frequently, and soon I decided to pair up the birds.

I made a double breeding cage, with a wire slide to fit in, and placed the birds into the separate compartments. The cock at first was very quiet, and would not even chirrup, but as time went on he made himself more at home, and began calling to his companion at the other side of the slide. Singing very loudly, he began to climb up the wires of the slide and tried to get into the hen's compartment. Seeing this was a failure, he fed the hen through the slide.

The hen soon began to settle down to work, and showed signs of nesting. Having put some cow-hair through the wires of the cage, I then put in a nest pan, fitted with a swans-down lining, and a few days afterwards she had made her home.

When I removed the wire slide the cock at once flew to the hen as if to tear her, but soon afterwards quietened down and began to feed her as usual. Seven days elapsed, and I noticed the hen lying very snug in her nest. I did not disturb her, although, like many beginners, I was anxious to see if she had laid an egg.

I put some dandelion at the bottom of the cage, some fresh water in her drinker, and waited patiently for her to leave her nest. Soon afterwards she came from her nest to partake of what was put into the cage. Having a chance to see her nest I went over to the cage very quietly, looked in her nest, and saw what I expected, an egg.

I removed the egg and placed it in bran, putting a china egg to replace the one taken out. Having done this until she finished laying, I put back the eggs, which amounted to five, to the nest, and kept her quiet to hatch them. I had in the meantime taken the cock away and put him out of hearing into another room.

Giving the hen a little Epsom salts in the water, and a little egg food twice a day, I left her quiet in her nest until seven days had elapsed. On the seventh morning I decided to try the eggs, and, going to the cage with a little egg food in a vessel, I easily coaxed the hen from her nest.

Whisky as an Embrocation.

Having looked at the eggs through a little hole which I made in the centre of a black cover of a book, I found the five eggs were quite black. On the fourth morning after trying the eggs I found the hen down at the bottom of the cage rolled up like a ball of wool and panting greatly. This startled me a bit, but I took things coolly, and decided to try and do the best I could.

I procured half a glass of best Scotch whisky, put a little in an egg drawer, and dipped her beak into it, but she would not open her beak, so I dipped my finger in the whisky and rubbed it lightly around her stomach. This seemed to have a little effect, and she got a little better, and I then heated some milk and soaked a little sponge biscuit with it and left it in the cage until I had my day's work finished.

Going to her after my work in the evening, I found that she was, in fact, worse than when I left her in the morning, so I repeated the treatment, rolled her up in a little flannel, and put her inside my shirt and left her there for a while. The heat of my body worked wonders, and in ten minutes she was as lively as could be. I put her back on her eggs, which I had covered with sawdust while she was away, and the following morning she laid a soft egg, which had been the cause of her sickness.

Three days afterwards she hatched out her five eggs, and reared the young on the egg food given her. This egg food, I may mention, was given three times a day, fresh each time, with a little maw and niger sprinkled over it. When the young were 17 days old two of them came out of their nest and sang in a broken melody; the other three came out the following day, those were hens. They all fed well with the mother until they were fully a month old.

I gave her a rest of a week, and put the cock back again. She laid seven eggs this time, and reared five birds out of the seven, one being dead in the shell and the other egg clear. This year the same hen nested, and hatched out ten young in two clutches. Next year I hope to have a few birds from her fit to exhibit.

The June issue of "British Birds," Messrs. Witherby, 326, High Holborn, 1s. monthly, opens a new volume, No. 10. Mr. J. H. Owen begins "Some Breeding Habits of the Sparrow-Hawk," by an account of some observations of the actions of the brooding hen in protecting her young from drenching rain; and Mr. Witherby continues his valuable "Moult of the British Passeres." Nothing could be more useful to the student of British birds than these authoritative statements as to their changes of plumage according to their age or to the season of the year.

Starlings and Fruit.

Those who cultivate land for profit are at this season of the year kept in a state of perpetual irritation by the birds, says "Country Life," and it is very à propos that a considerable amount of space should be devoted to them in the new number of the Journal of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries. Investigation into the feeding habits of birds has been going on at Wye College and at University College, Manchester. Both in Kent and Lancashire the Starling is very tenderly treated, which is a little surprising. Whatever any investigator may say, fruit growers know only too well that it is becoming annually more difficult to grow cherries in the open air without protection, and it is not very easy to place nets over a big cherry tree. On farms the cherries bloom profusely every May, a beautiful crop is brought to perfection, and then, just when it is going to be gathered, the starlings sweep down and in a single day clear the trees of every eatable cherry.

Allow me to thank you, on behalf of the members of Queen's Park (Glasgow) C.B.S., for publishing in your paper, CAGE BIRDS, May 6, a report of Mr. Walter Connelly's paper on Canary Management, given to the Club at the meeting on April 26, writes Mr. A. K. Hunter, sec.

Country Rambles.

The following rambles have been arranged, and friends who may not be members of the respective societies will be welcome to join: Queen's Park (Glasgow) C.B.S., June 10. Book to Thorntonhall by 3.3 train from Central Station; train calls at Eglington St., Strathbungo, and Crossmyloof. Halifax O.S., June 10, to Stockmoor and Kirkburton; meet at G.P.O., Commercial St., 2. Macclesfield C.B.S., June 18; meet at Park Green P.O. at 9. Garston B.B.A. and North Liverpool C.B.S., joint ramble June 11 to Oglet; meet Garston car terminus at 2.30.

Owing to the shortage of paper there will be no Second Edition this year of

VARIATED NORWICH CANARY.
Winner of 2nd prize at Warford Show for Mr. O. C. Smith, Reading.

A Beginner's Experiences in Canary Breeding.

By E. FAIRHURST, Kirkburton.

I HAVE kept birds a good many years, but until recently have not done much breeding. I started seriously to breed Canaries three years ago, and the first season saw me with one pair of Yorkshires. From this pair I had three nests, and all the eggs were fertile, but the young were dead in the shell.

The second year, that was last season, I had one pair of Yorks and two pairs of Norwich, and from them I had six nests. In four of the nests all the eggs were fertile, but they failed to hatch out.

After losing so many young dead in the shell, I decided to alter my tactics. I thought about it, and wondered whether it was through an inefficient supply of sand disabling the birds from making a proper shell to their eggs. That being so, the contents would soon be robbed of their moisture, and the inner skin of the shell would become tough and resistive.

I am a firm believer in using sawdust for the cage bottoms, and have come to the conclusion that that is what has been my biggest drawback. The last two nests I had last year I substituted sand in the cage bottom when the hens began to nest, and the result was that every one of the eggs were fertile, and all hatched out, though I only managed to rear two out of eight young birds.

Use sawdust by all means, but not when the hen is nesting, for that is the time when it is most essential to use sand. I have realised that since I used sand during the breeding season I have not had one case of egg-binding or of young being dead in the shell.

Whatever kind of nesting material you use, always see that it is well cleansed, and you will have no red mite. I generally use brown cow-hair and moss, but before using I thoroughly wash it in hot water, in which has been placed a little Ical, about half a teaspoonful to a quart of water, and after rinsing and wringing place in the oven to dry. This process removes all the dust, and makes the stuff antiseptic, and those who follow the same course will not be pestered with red mite.

I believe in everyone using his own judgment in regard to the feeding of young, but will give the results of my own experiments. I have discontinued the use of maw-seed since I lost six young with it. I give my birds for the first seven days two parts of hard-boiled egg to one part prepared egg food, or cod liver oil food. I use Liverine, Ltd., preparation.

After the first seven days I give equal parts hard-boiled egg, soaked rape-seed, and prepared egg-food, and a few dandelion leaves daily. I soak the rape-seed in boiling water, strain, and mix in the dry food to a crumbly paste. I have five sturdy youngsters this season, fed as I have stated above.

The Hoopoe in Surrey.

On May 17, says C. O. Capel, Surrey, writing to "Country Life," I was sitting on my lawn, at about 5.30, with a relation, and a Hoopoe came down close to us, and began digging into the grass and feeding busily. He was in beautiful plumage, with a fine crest. I have not seen the bird since. I have seen one before in Kent, but never here.

[The Hoopoe is known to have nested in all our south coast counties, and in Surrey and Wiltshire. It is to be hoped that the bird mentioned will escape the attention of the "man with the gun."—Editor CAGE BIRDS.]

THE BREEDING AND MANAGEMENT OF CANARIES.

By Mr. J. GRIFFITHS,

Chairman of the Tredegar C.B.S.

IF you are wishful to become a successful fancier it will be necessary to study your birds thoroughly. Success cannot be gained by merely giving seeds and water to your birds, and letting them go their own way. Study them, and if anything goes wrong in your stock you will be able to remedy it, though, no doubt, exceptional cases happen sometimes. As the breeding season draws near each year our expectations and disappointments begin, but my experience is that the more ill-luck a fancier has, the more he is determined to succeed.

Old birds are usually fit for pairing about the middle of March, but young birds should not be paired up before the middle of April, as they are not always fully developed until then. Let your breeding hens have plenty of exercise; I generally turn them into the flight until a month before pairing up (the first week in April). I then put them singly into a cage in which they are intended to breed, giving them a little inga seed, and a little egg food as the breeding season comes on. Some fanciers believe in mixing cod liver oil food with ordinary egg food, as it is more heating.

When I find the cock birds in full song, and the hens bouncing from perch to perch, I hang the cock birds in show cages on the breeding cages for a couple of days, and when I see them feeding through the cage wires, I at once turn them in with their intended partners. In nine out of ten cases they set to, and have a "battle royal," but it soon wears away, and peace is proclaimed.

As a general rule, you may look out for the first egg from ten days to a fortnight after mating up. I usually remove the eggs as they are laid; this I do by the aid of a teaspoon, and substitute a dummy egg in the place of each. On the evening of the third day the eggs are replaced in the nest, and the cock bird is taken away. I give hens whilst sitting Spanish canary seed.

I line my nest pans, not too deep, with thick felt linings, which I gum or sew to the nest pan, and I take care that all perches are fixed quite firmly in the cage, as slack, wobbly perches are the cause of a lot of unfertile eggs, through the hen not being able to keep steady during mating. For the cage bottoms during breeding time I prefer sand.

On the evening before the day the youngsters are due, I place in the egg drawer a small quantity of pure yolk of egg, so that the hen can feed early in the morning. I give pure yolk of egg only for the first three days, then I give egg and bread, dandelion leaves (some fanciers prefer watercress), and crushed hemp. I advise feeding three times a day, a small quantity to be given each time; if large quantities are given the hen gets fat and lazy, and neglects her offspring.

If you should ever have a sweating hen, I have found the following treatment most successful:—A dose of Parrish's Chemical Food every other day; keep green-food away, if possible, but if not, give sparingly. Also keep hemp away. Put a lump of flower of brimstone in drinker, and keep it in while breeding.

The method I adopt to wean the young birds is to leave same with the hen as long as not interfered with; if so, I hang on the nursery cage, and keep on the egg food, gradually reducing the same with rape (soaked for 48 to 50 hours, dry with a cloth before giving to birds), crushed hemp, and canary seed, until put on colour food. Their digestive organs are unable to stand the strain of hard seed, and if given too young the intestines, etc., become irritated, and they go off. I allow them water, and also a bath, which they appreciate.

To prevent birds getting pulpy, instead of egg food I give bread and milk twice a week. Do not overcrowd young birds together, not even in large flights, as at the age of six to eight weeks they have not the stamina to stand the strain of so much exercise, and it will also cause plucking.

THE BREEDING AND MANAGEMENT OF EXHIBITION CANARIES.

By J. A. GREENSLADE, Bristol.

A Lecture read before the members of the Bristol C.B.S.

WHEN desirous of commencing to keep and breed exhibition Canaries, or to improve existing stock, one wants to do so at the proper and best time, and, to my mind, there is no time like the show season to do so, as at that period one sees the birds at their best, and is better able to form opinions of what is required. There is also the opportunity of wintering the birds oneself, which I consider a great benefit.

Having made up one's mind what is required, the best way is to visit as many shows as possible, or if unable to do this, to carefully follow the reports of shows, with the idea of finding an exhibitor that is fairly successful in showing plenty of unfledged birds, both cocks and hens, yellows and buffs. (One good bird, although perhaps a champion, is not good enough.)

The Hall Mark of a Good Singer.

Another thing to watch for, if able to see his birds on the bench, is to look for a similarity of type, special good features and characteristics, running through all his exhibits, as, to my view, this denotes a fixed and reliable good strain.

Having found such a fancier, and they are to be found, put yourself in his hands, no matter whether he be a "great gun" or a working man. I feel sure he will treat you to your satisfaction, providing, of course, you do not expect such high-class stock as his would be, at little more than songster prices.

A good many beginners waste long years of patience, and a lot of money, buying from all and sundry, but the surest and quickest way to success is to buy all you require from one source, and not too many to commence with, say, two cocks and four hens, not necessarily to use two hens for each cock, but to have a spare hen by you if you should require it.

Having been suited, and become the proud possessor of what we hope is going to be a foundation of our own strain of winner producers, the next thing is, where to keep them. Many advise an outdoor birdhouse, but I have always thought to have one satisfactorily damp-proof, and one able to avoid great fluctuations of temperature, would entail a large capital expense, and I have, therefore, had to content myself with an upstairs room, and do my best to keep sweet the domestic powers that be, in which direction, I am glad to say, I have always been very successful.

A Southern Aspect Not Essential.

I have many times seen stated that we want a room facing south, but here let me say the lack of south aspect need not be a deterrent to any would-be fancier.

I have had rooms at different times facing practically all points of the compass, and at present due north, but I think, if I had the choice, I should have one facing west. It certainly would not be south for the following reasons. In the spring the sun brings your birds in breeding trim much too early, then, when the hot weather arrives, you find you have a difficulty in getting any feeding done, and lose many of the second round thereby. Then, when the moulting season is on (although granted they moult much quicker), you have a hard job to keep the colour from disappearing as soon as it shows, and before the bird is moulted enough to have the colour fixed, beside having much more trouble with insect pests.

Having procured a room to our satisfaction, either outdoors or indoors, we should first see that it is well ventilated, and if an indoor room is used under no circumstances entirely stop up the chimney, as it makes an ideal ventilating shaft. If at times there should be too much down draught, it is best scattered by fixing finely-perforated zinc to the fireplace on a wooden frame.

Regarding cages, the first important thing to bear in mind is to have every cage a uniform height and breadth, to make a neat stack, and economise valuable room; besides, nothing looks more unsightly than an assortment of odd sizes.

I advise at all times (of course, except when breeding) a separate cage for each cock, and to save room and expense it is a good plan to have your breeding cages so constructed that a division can be placed in the middle, thereby making each into two store cages suitable for cocks.

My reason for emphasising the separating of cocks is because, if not so kept, they fight and squabble, until one or more gets seriously injured, or if not actually injured, become so subdued as to be of little use when mating time comes, while the victor, or cock of the walk, is just the opposite, becoming too precocious, and spending his vitality singing and fighting, before you are ready.

The hens should be placed in flights, which should be at least 3ft. 6in. or 4ft. long, and the number of hens to each flight should not be too many, about six at the outside, less if possible. Cage economy can again be studied in the construction of flight cages, because if a division is also provided for in these, two admirable breeders can be made of each flight cage.

I am a great believer in a plain diet for both sexes all through the winter and early birds are lost annually even by old fanciers through not having sufficient grit regularly handy for the birds to swallow, and thereby keep their gizzards full enough to grind the foods properly, and assist the gastric fluids.

If those that have heretofore only used sand would try grit as usually sold for chickens and pigeons, which is mainly composed of flint, they would be astonished at the amount consumed by both sexes, and would soon see an improvement in their stock, beside laying the ghost of the old sand tradition.

I have given the go-by to the large Spanish seed, as large as you can get, and I find that for winter use the small brown variety is much preferable, especially for hens, as on this seed they seem much more active and lively, and do not put on the fat nearly so much. Another thing in its favour is it is much cheaper, which is important in these days.

Under such winter treatment as I have tried to describe they should keep in rollicking health and condition, and I wish to emphasise that the winter management is of the water paint procured in paste petrifying fluid is as good as anything for walls and cages. A good thing in its favour is that red mites avoid it. I find they will leave alone a cage that has been treated with it, and will occupy one that has been enamelled standing next to it.

The Importance of Method.

After the cleaning has been effected, it is a great advantage to place each hen in the breeding cage allotted to her, number the cages, write the numbers and the description of the inmates into a register, which everyone should keep for breeding records, and future reference.

Under this plan the hens should get a few weeks (about two at the least) to settle down comfortably and get used to their breeding quarters. They may now be given a pinch of niger seed three times a week, as well as a cube of mutton suet hung on the wires, as both of these help the ovary to become in a suitable condition for easy egg production.

The cocks by now should be in stout and lusty song, and can be given the previously mentioned seed mixture on alternate days, which, after the plain diet of the winter months, will make them as anxious to commence breeding operations as the most enthusiastic of us could wish.

Under no circumstances do I believe it advisable or profitable to start until the latter end of March. What says the immortal William (not William the Hun)? "Beware of the Ides of March." This is applicable to the Canary breeder as well as to Shakespeare's hero.

Many advocate placing the cock in a separate cage or behind a wire partition during the early courting days to prevent serious quarrelling and fighting, but I have never found this necessary, and find they settle down to business in earnest if both cock and hen are in proper mettle.

From the time they are put together the mixed seed can be continued, also on other days just a little egg-food is beneficial; a leaf or two of young dandelion can also be given, but this should be kept indoors in water for a day before being given to the birds.

A cube of cuttlefish or a lump of limey old mortar, hand-made, of the old-fashioned sort, is a good thing to supply. Also fowl eggshells can be used by first placing in the oven to get them brittle and then pounding them up into tiny fragments (not dust). From these sources, which contain various limes and salts, I believe the bird derives the chemical substances which cover her eggs, and not so much from purely gritty substances as many opine.

How to Make Nest Linings.

When they seem to be settled down the nest pan with a little nest-making material should be placed in the cage. The best nest pan to clean and replace, as well as the most sanitary, is the perforated red terra cotta, lined with swansdown lining.

These linings are easily replaced when necessary by getting one yard of swansdown, lining from a shop that supplies tailors' trimmings. Cut it into squares about 5½ inches square, and then, pulling the opposite corners over the top of a block of wood with a thick blunt point, to get the shape, stick them in the pans with paste. Office paste is a good thing, a 4½d. pot will last the whole season without getting sour, and it is always ready. Trim the edges round with a sharp pair of scissors after the lining is stuck in and you have it again as when first purchased.

The nesting material should only be given at first in very small quantities for them to play with; some never do anything but play with it, and waste a lot, while others will make themselves over so "comfy." Even if they don't make a nest at all, it does not matter. The material has given them something to do, and fixes their minds more on housekeeping than if they had none.

I like to see them make a nest for the first round, as they are so much warmer during the early spring nights, but if they don't make them I don't bother or interfere. With the second round I never give nesting material, and if I did they would hardly have time to use it, neither do they want it for warmth.

When the eggs arrive take them away each morning, and place them in bran in a chocolate-box that has been divided into sections and numbered to correspond with numbers on the cages. Replace them under the hen the evening of the day on which the third egg is laid, then make an entry of the date in your register, so that you may know when they are due to hatch.

In most cases it is well to take away the cock at this juncture, and cage him separately and leave the hen to sit and rear the young herself; some hens won't submit to this, and of course the cock must then be left.

spring, and I give plain canary as a staple diet, with red rape in a separate vessel about three times a week in quantities of half teaspoonful to each bird.

A Variety of "Tit-Bits."

On the days that rape is not given a supply of soft sweet apple, boiled carrot, white cabbage stump, Brussels sprouts halved, or white leaves of celery, may be given during mild weather with advantage, but care should be used if the weather is frosty. Of course, don't give it all, but whichever is handy, giving preference in the order mentioned.

Should we experience a severe spell of cold weather during the winter these items are best cut out, and a mixture of hemp, niger, linseed, teazel, maw, and crushed groats is a good help, if not given too frequently.

Another item which I consider indispensable in keeping birds healthy during the dull dark months is a plentiful supply of grit, not sand. I have very little faith in the bird sand of commerce, and consider it of small value, as only about 10 per cent. of it is large enough to be of use. I am sure hundreds of good utmost importance, specially for hens, as I am sure that 90 per cent. of the breeding season trouble that many always get is the direct outcome of bad management during the winter months, resulting in the hens becoming dull, fat, and sluggish.

This diet and general treatment will suit both sexes until after the spring cleaning (which, of course, is always necessary), as I am of the opinion that it is better to let your birds' own good health and strong vitality bring them into a natural condition of mating, than to force them with a lot of rich and oily foods into a premature breeding condition, as many do, only to be checked by the cold weather.

The first week in March should see our birds spring cleaning; commence by thoroughly cleaning and redecorating where necessary, first the room, then all cages and utensils, both those in daily use and any spare ones. Here let me say, don't let this conflict with the annual domestic upheaval.

Some use whitewash and others enamel for cages, but I find a good distemper or

HOW TO CAPTURE THE CANARY TRADE. WHAT BRITAIN CAN DO.

A FURTHER discussion on the important question of the capture of the German Canary trade took place at a meeting of the Canary Trade Committee, held at the Offices of CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet St., London, on June 5. Present: Messrs. F. Carl (chairman), G. Crabb, W. T. East, H. J. Full-james, H. W. Gutierrez, A. Howard, H. J. Kybert, E. C. Last, G. H. Maclellan, J. W. Ramsden, J. Robson, W. H. Vale, and the organising secretary.

An interesting letter, discussing the scheme of the Central Committee, and making suggestions was received from the Lochgelly Cage Bird Society. It was discussed and marked down for further consideration at a future date.

Mr. A. Howard, of J. Howard and Sons, London and Norwich, attended the meeting at the invitation of the committee, and very frankly gave the members the benefit of his large experience, answering many important questions in a way which enabled the committee to form accurate views as to the possibilities of the British Canary Trade in relation to German competition.

We are unable to give an actual report of what transpired, because certain questions were answered on the understanding that the discussion would be regarded as private and confidential, but it is possible, without any breach of confidence, to give one or two conclusions to be drawn from the debate.

A Golden Opportunity.

Approximate figures were given relating to British and German exports between Germany and the United States, and Britain and the United States, and it was made perfectly clear, not only that there is an enormous trade in Canaries to be captured from the Germans, but also that it can be captured if certain methods of organisation are adopted, and if Canary breeders of all classes will co-operate with the organisation.

Perhaps the most interesting question discussed was whether British breeders could reasonably expect to succeed against the Germans if they continued to breed the same high quality of birds which has won them their present reputation, or whether it would be necessary to breed a common class of Canary with a trained song, like that exported from Germany.

The view was emphatically expressed that the British Canary can easily hold its own against the German bird, either in this country, or in the States, or in the Colonies, and "the better the bird the better the price."

It is true that the dealers meet with customers who will have Rollers, and that nothing else will satisfy them. On the other hand English Roller breeders are now producing birds of this type which will certainly challenge the position held by the German variety.

But for the bulk of the trade the British bred birds of colour and type are wanted, the only bar to their complete success over the German bred birds being that they are not produced in sufficient numbers. In other words, the supply is not equal to the demand, and the German birds come in to fill the gap.

The impression conveyed by the discussion was that, given sufficiency of supply, and satisfactory organisation, the British bred birds could undoubtedly oust the German birds from the market.

Even in normal times there should be no difficulty in competing with the Germans, because if Norwich and Yorkshire birds were to be had, the bulk of the bird-buying public in the States would not look at a German bird. They will have birds, and if they cannot get British-bred Canaries they, of course, take the Germans. The birds which they want can be counted in hundreds of thousands, and show birds will always fetch fancy prices either here or in America.

Help the Wounded Soldiers.

In the course of the meeting the wounded soldiers scheme was discussed, and a large number of applications were produced showing the need of a very large number of birds, and considerable sums of money, if these deserving cases are to be satisfied, and the gallant boys who have been disabled in the war for the benefit of those at home, are to be enabled to make a new start in bird breeding.

Many of the applications are from fanciers who had to sell out their stock before enlisting, and are now reduced to such circumstances that it is quite impossible for them to buy new stocks out of their scanty resources.

The breeding season is now in full swing, and there must be hundreds of breeders who would gladly mark down a few young birds, to be given at the end of the season in aid of the wounded heroes who so sorely need them.

As showing that the Central Committee is in deadly earnest, it was decided to send out circulars to all bird societies, inviting them to appoint local representatives to assist the Central Committee in its work. It is hoped that each society will take the matter up seriously, realising that the increased success of the Fancy in the future depends upon the success of the scheme to capture the German trade in Canaries.

The Roller Canary: Its Feeding and Training for Song.

THERE is considerable difference in character between the Hartz Mountain Roller and the Norwich Canary; the Norwich are very much more affectionate, and more easily tamed than the Rollers, which are very suspicious of people, even of those who rear them from the nest. The Rollers are always very wild, even though kept with tame birds, but it is characteristic of the Norwich to gain confidence in their owner.

The Norwich hens, I think, are exceedingly fascinating; they are such little coquettes. Even my Hartz Roller cocks agree on this point, for even they show preference for these. When I want the Roller hens to captivate I have to remove the little coquettes, which otherwise draw all the attention, and the Rollers get left on the shelf.

Hens in Rivalry.

It is very amusing to let a Norwich and Roller hen fly loose in the bird room, keeping the cocks caged up. The Norwich, who believes in making herself scarce, after inspecting the cock in his apartments, will fly away out of his sight, while the Roller will sit under his nose all the time trying to look her best. The Norwich remains in the background until the cock, in his most persuasive tones, calls her back, and when this is continued for some time she condescends to reappear, making the poor little Roller quite envious, to the extent of fighting with the Norwich hen, until the latter again disappears; then war wages between the cock and Roller hen, and after this she sees it is hopeless.

When the baby Rollers reach the age of nine or ten weeks they ought to have a Schoolmaster to teach them how to sing properly; just as one voice requires training, so do theirs. The choosing of a Schoolmaster is very important indeed, and a person who is really musical ought to be the one to choose the Schoolmaster, as it really requires a trained sensitive ear to detect some of their faults, which perhaps are only heard occasionally, especially as some people are not averse to high, shrill notes, which a trainer should certainly not have.

Of course, one must admit that even a very good Roller has some fault or other, but this is allowable if the fault is not repeated more than once or twice during its song, and is not a very objectionable one. It is always the best when choosing a Schoolmaster to have several on approval, and compare their voices. The baby Rollers ought to have singing lessons up to ten or twelve months old, and should be caged off separately always.

One usually hears it said that the Rollers make the best mothers, but I have found the Norwich hens far more reliable, so for this reason I always have a Norwich hen sitting at the same time as the Rollers, and when the latter do not feed their young I always transfer them to the nest of my Norwich, who makes an admirable foster mother.

An Extra Special Offer.

During the week Mr. A. Cooper, the superintendent of Children's Homes in Mile End, London, was good enough to call at the offices of CAGE BIRDS, and to make a magnificent offer.

Mr. Cooper has eight cages, each 3ft. long, 18 inches high, and 11 inches deep, all freshly enamelled, completely equipped with appliances, and in all respects equal to new. Each cage has a sliding compartment converting it into two separate cages. Another cage is 3ft. long, 2ft. 6in. high, and 11 inches deep, and in all other respects similar to the rest.

He has three Norwich cocks and seven Norwich hens, all bred from winning stock. These birds are related and should form a most valuable nucleus for building up a strain. They have been kept throughout the winter in the outdoor aviary, in which they are now flying, and are in absolutely perfect health; no bird is more than two years old.

There are also four Goldfinch Canary mules, sex not stated, and an Orange Bishop just coming into colour. This bird was privately imported, and has won a 2nd prize on the show bench.

Mr. Cooper has quoted us a very nominal figure for this grand lot of birds and cages, and all that we can get over this amount is to go to the benefit of the fund for re-starting disabled soldiers in their hobby.

We shall be pleased, therefore, to receive offers for any item or the entire lot. The nine cages alone would be an acquisition to the best appointed bird room, or they would be a splendid property in the fitting up of a room for bird-keeping of any kind. Their

There are three diseases common to Roller Canaries. Inflammation of the intestines is a common disease amongst all Canaries, and is due to various causes, such as cold, mouse poisoning, or improper feeding. In Roller Canaries it may be set up through giving them hemp seed, which is most injurious to them, and often fatal, so I am going to relate how I killed my first Roller with hemp seed.

The first Roller I ever had was eight weeks old when I bought him in July. I fed him on mixed seed, the same as my Norwich Canaries. In October I purchased my seed at a different shop, and this mixture contained a great deal more hemp seed. I continued feeding him on this new seed until December, when he became ill.

One morning I noticed him looking very fat and puffy, and not at all well. I immediately thought the room was too cold for him, so carried him downstairs into a warm room, but the next day he was worse, so I took him to a bird-shop keeper, who told me it was inflammation, and he recommended very little seed, and Liverine in the drinking water.

Some Simple Remedies.

The following day he was still worse, and as evening came I saw my little Roller was not long for this world, so I went to a bird friend from whom I bought him. She told me what to give him, but it was too late, he died that night.

This was the remedy, which is splendid for inflammation: A piece of bread moistened by boiling water, and a drop of milk, then sprinkled on a little raw sugar and maw seed, and a few drops of olive oil. This is all the food a bird suffering from this complaint should have. The symptoms are excessive fatness, and the bird very puffed out, with feathers very rough, and eyes very dull, and the bird crouches to its perch.

Bronchitis is prevalent amongst all Canaries owing to the sudden changes of our climate. The signs of this complaint are breathing accompanied by wheezing and rattling, and frequent coughing. The bird appears dull and quiet. Before attempting a cure, give an aperient. Then in the water give three drops of solution of tar three or four times a week only, as it is poisonous. Bread and milk, with a little raw sugar sprinkled on, and a few drops of glycerine. For another meal give hard-boiled egg and bread crumbs, mixed with cod liver oil. If the bird is only a nestling don't give solution of tar, but a few drops of whisky and glycerine.

Roller cocks often suffer from hoarseness and loss of voice. The symptoms are merely inability to get some of their notes, and their voice sounds rusty. Sometimes they lose their voices completely. The cure for this is glycerine and whisky, and a lump of sugar covered with glycerine put in the bars. Bread and milk, the same as for bronchitis, only, instead of sugar, a little niger seed sprinkled over.

uniform size makes them especially valuable to the purchaser of the lot, and their complete equipment renders them available for the keeping of either Canaries, British, or Foreign birds.

Mr. Cooper's address is 17, Cottage Grove, Bow, London, E., and he will be pleased to show the cages and birds to anyone on appointment. Onright offers may be sent direct to the Organising Secretary, CAGE BIRDS Offices, 154, Fleet St., London, E.C.

A NOTE TO WOUNDED SOLDIERS.

How to Make an Application.

In accordance with a resolution passed by the Committee at the meeting held May 29, wounded or otherwise disabled soldiers who require assistance in re-starting their hobby of Canary breeding will expedite attention to their applications if they will send their discharge papers or a certified copy of the same, and will also state whether (1) they have already any birds, (2) what kind of birds or appliances they need, (3) whether they are married or single, and, if married, how many children are dependent upon them, (4) their wages and pension, if any. They must also say that they are prepared to make a genuine attempt to breed Canaries if assistance is granted. We need hardly say that all communications will be treated as being strictly confidential, and that no use whatever will be made of them excepting in the interests of the applicants.

Hen Bullfinches and Hybrid Breeding.

SIR,—I was very pleased to read Mrs. G. Christie's letter in last week's CAGE BIRDS, and beg to say that for the last fortnight my cock Canary has been feeding the hen Bullfinch. The hen Bullfinch up with the Siberian cock Goldfinch has laid one egg only; this was on May 29.

The Clashing of Show Dates at Coventry.

SIR,—Will you be kind enough to notify through your valuable weekly CAGE BIRDS, that the Coventry Godiva C.B.S. are forced to cancel our open show this season for the reason that the Coventry O.S. have fixed their open show three days previous to our date, although our date was fixed on Dec. 6, 1915, and was notified in CAGE BIRDS in Twitterings about a week later. As we had to alter our date last season for the same reason, our members feel very sore, and hope in the future that a better fanciers' spirit will prevail.

Two Kinds of Virginian Cardinals.

SIR,—Re your interesting picture of the Virginian Cardinal in last week's CAGE BIRDS, I wonder how many of your readers are aware of the fact that there are two distinct kinds of this interesting bird. I lived in Virginia for many years, and took considerable interest in this particular species of Cardinal Grosbeak (Loxia Cardinalis). The one you reproduce is the common Virginian Cardinal, not the "Nightingale," and is more interesting for plumage than song. It is much brighter in colour than the "Gale." This bird has a pale bill, and legs of similar hue. Its song, while admired by some, is a monotonous piping, which it continually repeats, and which, to me, is very tiresome and unattractive. Both have crests.

The real Virginian "Gale" is much darker in colour, has a dark purple beak, and legs of the same colour. In fact, many assert that the ordinary Cardinal is the female of the other. This, however, is not correct, as they are two distinct birds. Very few of the genuine Virginian Nightingales have been exported. They are difficult to trap, being one of the shyest of American birds, and if not taken very young invariably die in captivity. Their song is exquisite, and far exceeds that of the Mocking Bird. In fact, I don't know—having heard both—that our own English "Gale" is at all superior. The song of the American bird is much louder, has a greater roll, and is much more continuous. While the bird is, to a certain extent, a seed-eater, it also feeds largely on insects, and the mosquito seems its favourite tit-bit. I am inclined to the belief that death in captivity is due to inability to supply it with this particular form of food. It is also much larger and more slender than the Cardinal, and its bill is not nearly so stunted.

The Value of Pedigree Breeding.

SIR,—There are two letters in this week's issue of CAGE BIRDS that particularly interest me; these are "The Value of Pedigree Breeding," by Mr. Crawhall, and "Hints on Line-Breeding Wanted," by "Beejay." Undoubtedly the subject of heredity and pedigree breeding is one that is little understood by the majority of bird breeders, and yet if fanciers only knew the value of some knowledge of the subject, they would take every opportunity to glean all they could from breeders of live-stock of all kinds.

Many of the laws relating to the reproduction of stock apply equally to animals, birds, and plants, and yet if at any time one strives to illustrate one's ideas by reference to cattle or poultry, he is met by incredulous smiles or some such remark as "What has that to do with birds?" Yet we owe a good deal of our knowledge to outside experience. The pedigree book is not an innovation of the Canary breeder. Most fanciers, I fear, do not keep this as they should, but I am glad to see that Mr. Crawhall is not one of them; the page from his book should be an object-lesson to those who only pretend to do it.

To be able to trace back the parentage of any given bird is always a pleasing and instructive task, and at times absolutely necessary to the scientific breeder. If I understand Mr. Crawhall's letter correctly, he is striving to acquire some knowledge on the production of colour, and is utilising buff cocks to produce buffs. Now, unless he is also using yellow cocks with the object of producing yellow, I fear he will be somewhat misled in his experiments. Colour in both animals and birds, we know, is regulated in a manner by the laws of heredity as expounded by Mendel, and throughout the Canary world buff colour is undoubtedly the dominant colour. It is therefore more easily bred than yellow, but I have proved from experience that where yellows in any number are bred from a given pair, one of that pair possesses the yellow blood to a degree that dominates the buff blood of his or her partner, and by taking advantage of this knowledge one can considerably enhance the number of yellows produced in the stock.

Now, although all this appears so simple, when stated in this manner, there are many side issues, such as how and in what way the birds were bred, their relation to one another, etc., so that the subject is almost bewildering to any but a thoughtful breeder.

As regards in-breeding, one can say much for and against it. Where carried on for any length of time, there is loss of size, constitutional vigour, and fertility, and one could add in the case of birds loss of density of feather. These defects in a room of birds are difficult to detect, because they accumulate slowly, and the first evidence the breeder gets that his stock is not as it should be, is a loss of size and reproduction. Then if he takes a strong out-cross the effect is noticed at once; size is regained, and with it an improvement in vigour.

Yet in spite of all this we cannot possibly do without a certain amount of in-breeding if we are to retain the peculiar characteristics of each breed. Our pure breeds would not exist to-day without it, coupled, of course, with selection; but here I must put on the brake, the subject is too big to continue.

"Beejay" opens a wide field for discussion in his remarks on line breeding, which is undoubtedly safer than incestuous breeding, but of course even in this system one must be careful, particularly in the health and freedom from disease of the birds of the stud; their peculiarities are going to be handed down, and their weaknesses will be magnified by repetition.

H. NORMAN.

Just as we are going to press we have received from Mr. Crawhall the manuscript of a lecture on line-breeding, which he gave to the members of the Northern Border F.C. last season. Next week we shall have pleasure in publishing for the benefit of our readers this instructive lecture, and we hope that others will help with their knowledge of such an important subject.—EDITOR, CAGE BIRDS.

Hand-rearing Skylarks

SIR,—I should be very grateful if any reader of your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS could tell me the best way to rear and feed young Skylarks. I have had two given to me, and am at present feeding them on "Eggbiscuits," and they are taking it very well. In your issue of June 3 Mr. W. Clifton points out that he has successfully bred a Canary Mule, with another bird, but he does not state what kind of bird it is. I have a Canary-Linnet Mule, and am trying to breed it with a Redpoll. They seem very happy together, but do not seem inclined to nest. I should be very grateful to Mr. Clifton if he could give me a few hints on this, and I will willingly let you know how I get on. Wishing your valuable paper every success.

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

W. E. BLAKES.

Hand-rearing Canaries with a Syringe.

SIR,—I have had considerable good and bad luck during the present season with my Canaries; good luck in having almost all fertile eggs in my nests up till now, and bad luck in regard to hens not feeding regularly after about a week or ten days, and I have had to hand-feed the young ones. I tried with a pointed match, and found the results very trying, as with the young Canary in one hand and the match with a portion of soft food on in the other, the usual thing was that the food dropped off on opening the beak with the match, and so the operation took a great deal of time and patience. However, I have found out a better way, and thinking that the wrinkle might prove helpful to beginners like myself, and in return for the many tips I have had from your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, I have much pleasure in passing it on.

I procured a small glass syringe like an ear syringe from the local penny bazaar, and, taking out the plunger, filled it about two thirds full with the soft food ground fine (I use Spratts' and Eggbiscuits mixed), then on taking the youngster in the left hand and holding the syringe in the right, with the thumb on the end of the plunger, I could open the bird's beak with the small glass end of the syringe and carefully insert a little food at a time just where it is wanted, viz., at the back of the throat, of course taking care not to choke the little one.

I have brought Canaries up from one week old by this treatment, and have thereby saved the lives of many young Canaries, who, I hope, will repay me in the future with song galore. I would mention that when not in use I keep the syringe in a tumbler of clean water, and the contents keep quite fresh and good for 24 hours.

Shepherd's Purse from the Farmer's Point of View.

SIR,—So much has been said of a weed called shepherd's purse as being so excellent for Canaries that I am sending you an account which appears in the "Farmer and Stock Breeder." It may be interesting to your numerous readers. "Shepherd's purse" (Capsella bursa-pastoris), a cruciferous weed, common everywhere, in field and waste. Probably among the six worst weeds we have, as it is the host of practically every insect and fungus pest affecting other cruciferous plants, such as turnips and cabbages. It keeps these causes of disease alive when there is no cropping, so that turnip-fly, turnip sickness, turnip-blossom beetle and weevil, and a host of others are never likely to be exterminated. It is harmless to farm animals.

"Do Sugar Birds Build Domed Nests?"

SIR,—I was much interested in the article on Sugar Birds by Miss Dyddgu Hamilton in CAGE BIRDS of May 27, but perhaps I may be allowed to point out none of the three species which went to nest with me built a domed nest. I should very much like to know if they do so when at liberty, or to which species Miss Hamilton refers as doing so. I may add that the same hen Yellow-winged Sugar Bird has just completed a lovely little nest in the same place as last year.

E. F. CHAWNER.

We sent Miss Chawner's enquiry to Miss Hamilton, the author of the article, and have received the following reply:—

In reply to your query, I must confess to never having bred Sugar Birds, but my authority for saying that they build domed nests is, I think, good, being that of Dr. Bowdler Sharpe's "Wonders of the Bird World," page 155, and the British Natural History Museum "Guide to the Gallery of Birds," page 131. I shall be exceedingly interested in reading Miss Chawner's article, and hope that she may achieve complete success with her Sugar Birds before the season is over.

The Song of the Nightingale.

LAST summer, while in Berkshire, I renewed my acquaintance with the Nightingale. The most remarkable, and certainly the most popular, because the most easily recognised parts of the bird's performance, are the "jug-jug-jug" and the celebrated trill, "the water-bubble trill," as it has been called, a close imitation of which may be got by partly submerging the bowl of a tobacco pipe in water and then blowing through it, as children do when making soap bubbles.

The length of time during which the bird continues the trill varies. Sometimes it is tantalisingly short—a few seconds merely. At other times the bird continues "as long as you can hold your breath," according to a popular belief. The trill and the "jug-jug-jug" are only a very small part of the bird's repertoire.

There are said to be twenty-four phrases which are the common property of all Nightingales; but my experience has been that the bird repeats his favourite phrases—not more than four or five—much oftener than does the Thrush or the Blackbird.

While listening to the Nightingale I was often reminded of the attempt a famous ornithologist made to reproduce the bird's beautiful melody by combinations of letters. This attempt, at first sight, appears a meaningless jumble of vowels, but it is certainly useful from one point of view.

It shows the duration of each of the bird's twenty-four hereditary phrases, some of them being very short, and others long; and it also shows which syllables, in some of the phrases, seem to be preferred by the bird. Some phrases consist wholly of repetitions of the same syllable.

For example, one phrase consists wholly of "do" repeated nine times; another of "tion," four times; in a third, which is composed of different syllables, "zo" is repeated twelve times, an attempt to reproduce the trill; in a fourth, "ez" is repeated seventeen times—the trill again.

For these facts of construction and repetition we may trust the ornithologist to whom I have referred, for he kept Nightingales in his aviary for many years, and was able to study them at leisure. In the district in Berkshire in which I lived last summer the Nightingales do not sing at night, but only during the day and in the twilight. They are diurnal and crepuscular singers, not nocturnal.

During a former visit to the same district I walked many miles after dark before I discovered that, on Barnham Common, near Windsor, the Nightingales are nocturnal, and sing so uninterruptedly and loudly that they keep the rustics awake. "A.T.B." in the "Sootsman."

How I Commenced in the Hobby of Canary Breeding.

By H. W. VALENTINE (Bedford).

And this is how I became a Norwich fancier. A customer of mine, himself a Norwich fancier, hearing that I kept Canaries, asked me if he could propose me as a member of the local Cage Bird Society, and I forthwith became a member. This took me to the next show, where my newly found fancier friend took me round, and I found that all the exhibits were either Norwich or British birds with the exception of a few foreigners shown by one exhibitor only.

I also got into conversation with several of the members who were exhibiting, and I found them all very ready to show me their birds, pointing out where they failed and where they excelled, until I could feel myself catching Norwich fever.

An Easy Win for the British Canary.

When I got home I turned the matter over in my mind, and came to the conclusion that Norwich were the birds for me. They only required one room, you did not have to learn a foreign language to understand their song, and you did not have to shut them up in the dark to make them sing properly.

A few days after the show one of the exhibitors, whom I will call "Mr. A.," invited me round to see his bird room, and as soon as I got inside the room he popped a pair into a show cage and pointed out that they were just the sort to breed winners with.

He named his price, and offered to take a Roller cock in part exchange, so I finished up by having them and another pair besides. I remember them well; an old buff cock that had seen his best days (and the trouble I had to keep that bird alive till the breeding season), and a really nice yellow hen.

The other pair were a long rakish yellow cock and a great wide buff hen with tons of feather all round her legs. She gave me the impression that her body was too big for her head and tail. I advertised my Rollers in CAGE BIRDS, and soon sold out of all birds and the cages connected with them, and I then seriously set about getting my stud together.

I paid a visit to my first-found Norwich friend, the one who proposed me as a member of the society, and who for convenience sake I will call "Mr. B." I spent many a half hour in his bird room, and a quaint old place it was. I used to sit on an old box close to the window, with my back to the light, so that I could get a good view of his birds; some in their cages just in front of me, which he was molting out in twos and threes, and a crowd in the fly by the side of me. Nearly every bird was related, for he had been breeding Norwich about thirty years.

The Assimilation of Knowledge.

If he thought I went there to make a purchase he was mistaken, for I went there simply to study the Norwich Canary, as I had made up my mind that I should buy no more birds until I found out who had the right stuff. But he was a good chap; he never even talked of selling me a bird, and yet he would go to any amount of trouble to catch a bird up and put it into a show cage for me to see.

Then I would ask him, "Which pair is this bird bred from?" or "What was the idea of mating those two together?" and from him I learned more about Norwich than one could learn at any amount of shows.

He had three particularly fine youngsters, all out of one nest, that I liked very much, so I made up my mind to see what they would do at the coming show. There being two societies in the town at that time, we had two shows a year. He only showed one of the three which I liked, and that got first. He was also well up with most of the birds he exhibited, so I thought that was good enough for me.

A day or two after the show I again went round to see my old friend, this time bent on business. I took up my accustomed seat on the old box, and ran my eye over the birds, only to find none of my favourites missing.

"Where is the tick-winged one gone?" I asked. "Oh! so and so had that, and took the matted yellow and that big clear as well," he answered. "So and so" was one of the well-known Norwich men I had had pointed out to me at the show, and then I remembered I had read somewhere that the big showmen don't breed all their own winners.

"Why," I said, "I had come to buy those birds." "You don't want to buy them," he answered. "What you want is the birds that bred them," and he offered the pair of birds that bred four winners in one season.

The price was reasonable; in fact, I was surprised at his moderation, considering what the birds had bred, so of course I took that pair and a very good coloured marked yellow cock bred off them. This bird, mated to the buff hen which I had bought from "Mr. A.," bred me a spanking clear yellow cock which won me my first medal for hottest coloured bird in show.

I also asked him the price of a buff hen, sister to this bird, but seeing that he asked me more than I was paying for her parents I thought I would be content with them, and trust to luck to breed one like her. I have since bought her, however, after he had bred from her one season, and the bird reproduced in CAGE BIRDS issue of Dec. 18 last is one of her offspring.

Altogether I bought of "Mr. B." for my first season's breeding nine birds, and from two other local fanciers, apart from "Mr. A.," two birds. Of these I am sorry to say I lost a very big clear yellow cock and a smart buff marked hen before the breeding season came round.

I was doubly grieved because I expected great things from these, as they were unrelated, a perfect match, and had won me my first 1st prize at our local pair show. However, I contented myself with the thought that though they were winners as a pair I had not actually lost my best birds, and my first season's breeding brought me numerous Nest Feather winners, and carried me out of the local novices at the annual show with three 1st, three 2nd, three 3rd, three medals, and highest points in show.

At our next annual show, when I had to come out and show against the men, I was second for highest points in show, being beaten by British birds. One might ask, where was Mr. B. seeing that my strain all originated from him, and I am sorry to say I did not come into competition with him, as a few days before the show a rat paid a visit to his fly and took the whole of his birds with the exception of one.

But the local fanciers will not see him drop out of the fancy, and I for one shall take great interest in watching him build up his strain again. I know of no other man who can use birds like "Mr. B." I have seen his room apparently cleared of all his best birds, so that from the material he has left to work upon it looked impossible for him to breed a winner, yet at show time they still pop out. You ask him why, and he will tell you. "I know how each one is bred, so I know how to mate them." That is the value of having an established strain. I know other breeders who pay a lot of money for good birds every year, but still have no strain, as they do not establish the blood.

I had a curious experience with one hen; she had two nests of four eggs each time, and all perfectly clear. I tried another cock bird with her, and again all clear. I tried her again with a third cock bird, and got one youngster, a very fine buff cock which this year was 1st in a class open to Bedfordshire.

I tried the same hen again this year with the cock that she had bred to before, but she died after the second nest of clear eggs. I look upon this as curious, because the hen was always healthy and active, and the cock birds were all sure breeders with their hens.

Another curious experience I had was with the buff cock I bought of "Mr. A." He was either too old or too lazy to feed his own young, and used to sit on the nest pan while the hen was doing his work, and take the food out of her beak. When he had got his fill in this way he would cut off to the perch and go to sleep.

FERTILE GOLDFINCH EGGS IN AN ALL-WIRE CAGE.

By "A Devonshire Fancier."

WHILE looking through CAGE BIRDS this week I noticed that you called attention to a letter you had received from Mr. Dan McArthur giving an invitation to bird fanciers who only keep birds as pets to relate a few of their experiences, so I am sending you one of my own. I have been in the hobby now for about five years, and have had several ups and downs, I can tell you.

I started with one pair of common Canaries and a breeding cage of my own manufacture. The first year I bred about six youngsters. But since that I have advanced by leaps and bounds with Canary breeding. The second year I reared 14; the third year saw 25 on the sticks; and last year I only had 16, as I had begun a little mule breeding, and it is this of which I most particularly wish to speak.

Just before the breeding season last year I purchased a pair of Goldfinches, and I paired the cock with a nice hen Canary of the Norwich type. After a few days they began building, and the hen laid four eggs.

On the morning when the first egg was laid I walked into the room and discovered that my poor Goldie had broken its leg. How it happened I have no idea, but there it was. Well, this was a puzzle to me, as I did not know whether to leave him with the hen or separate them. At last I decided to take him away.

Then arose the question of where to put him, as I had no empty cage. Anyhow, I thought the best place would be back with the hen Goldie, as they always seemed to agree fairly well. The leg was broken above the joint in the thigh, so, of course, I had to let it take its chance.

Crippled, but Cheerful.

The most wonderful thing to me was that, although it could only get about on one leg, it never stopped singing. I used to give him plenty of wild food, such as groundsel and dandelion, and one morning when I went in the room Mr. and Mrs. Goldie were both carrying the dry stems of these about the cage. This was only three days after they had been together, and the cage was a brass all-wire singing cage, with the ruby glass around the bottom, the same as used by most people who keep a songster in the drawing room.

I thought this was rather remarkable, so I tied a nest basket up in the corner of the cage, and put a cloth over the top of it to keep it somewhat secluded. After a few days I took a peep, and found they had nearly completed the nest.

It was not long after this that I found four eggs in the nest, and Mrs. Goldie busy sitting. Let me here state that cock bird's leg was still swinging, and he could only hop about on one leg, so I had very little hope of any young. However, the hen did her part well; she sat splendidly, and got so tame that when I went to feed them I could put my hand right up to the nest and she would not leave.

Bad Luck.

When she had been sitting for three days over her time I resolved to break one of the eggs to find if they were fertile, and great was my surprise to find a dead chick inside. Upon examining the others I had the same experience; every egg was full. I cannot account for the chicks being dead, as the hen sat nicely.

I have often wondered if any breeder has ever had a case like this with a broken-legged cock bird; also if ever Goldfinches have been bred in an ordinary all-wire singing cage. I might say here that the Canary's eggs were clear.

After a long time the leg set, but the claws had become reversed, so the leg was no use to the bird, but it still kept singing, and one day I put it out in the garden in a trap cage to try and get another. Then a disaster happened. A Hawk came by and fancied the Goldfinch. I happened to see it dart to the front of the cage, but it had nearly killed my bird with its claws before I could get to it, so I put it out of its misery.

This year I have procured another Goldie, and I have a hen Greenfinch which I reared under a Canary. I have paired the Goldfinch to a hen Canary, and the hen Greenfinch to a cock Canary, and they both have eggs, so now I am anxious to know the result.

The Water-hen as an Opportunist.

The only place in the neighbourhood of Berwick where the Magpie still survives, says "E.A.C." in the "Scotsman," has just been cleared of them by the keepers. As far back as the memory of the oldest inhabitants it has been a favourite haunt of this declining species, but ancient tenure has not availed them. The last of the Magpies in this corner of the Border country was found shot last week; its mate had predeceased it; but their nest, one of a dozen among high thorns around old water-logged limestone quarries, not only remains, but has been used; a Water-hen, studying war-time economy, has lined it with rushes, and laid its eggs in it.

HOW BRITISH BIRDS CHANGE THEIR PLUMAGE.

We are indebted to Mr. H. F. Witherby, the Editor, for permission to extract from an exhaustive article entitled: "THE MOULTS OF THE BRITISH PASSERES, WITH NOTES ON THE SEQUENCE OF THEIR PLUMAGE," which is appearing monthly in the magazine "British Birds," the portions which refer to such birds as are generally kept in cages or aviaries. Readers are referred to the magazine mentioned for the complete account.

FAMILY MOTACILLIDÆ.

THE members of this family, comprising the Pipits and Wagtails, all have very similar moults, differing only in details. The adults have a complete autumn moult, and a spring moult involving the body-feathers, a varying number of wing-coverts, usually some of the innermost secondaries and the central pair of tail-feathers, and exceptionally all the tail-feathers. This moult varies in details in species and also individually in the same species.

The moult from the juvenile to the first winter is very much like that of the adult in spring, but usually more restricted with regard to the wing-coverts, innermost secondaries and tail, but the extent of this moult varies in different species. The first spring moult is usually like that of the adult.

In the Pipits there are sexual and seasonal differences in the adults of the Red-throated and Water-Pipits only. The juveniles do not differ very markedly from the adults and the first winter birds only in three species.

In the Wagtails, on the other hand, the adult male and female, the winter and summer plumages the juvenile and the first winter and summer plumages all have differences.

TREE-PIBIT (Anthus t. trivialis).

ADULTS.—Complete moult in August or September. From January to March there is a moult involving the body-feathers, wing-coverts (some outer, greater, and median occasionally do not moult, and primary-coverts never do), innermost secondaries, central tail-feathers and exceptionally the outer tail-feathers or all the tail. There is no sexual or seasonal difference in the plumage, except that when worn in summer the dark markings of the upper- and under-parts become more accentuated and the throat, breast and flanks become whiter and less buff.

JUVENILE.—Much like the adult, but the upper-parts more buff, not so greenish, and more prominently streaked, and flanks with only very fine dark streaks.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile body-feathers are moulted in August or September, but not the wing- or tail-feathers, primary-coverts, greater or median wing-coverts. The new feathers are like those of the adult, but a certain number of juvenile body-feathers are sometimes retained until the bird reaches winter quarters. The spring moult is as in the adult.

MEADOW-PIBIT (Anthus pratensis).

ADULTS.—Complete moult in August to October. From January to March there is a moult similar to that of the Tree-Pipit. There is no sexual or seasonal difference in the plumage except that when much worn the upper-parts become very dark and the under-parts whiter and more boldly streaked, owing to the edges and tips of the feathers wearing away.

JUVENILE.—Like the adult but more boldly streaked on the upper-parts; the pale edgings to the feathers being narrower; usually tinged with yellow on the under-parts.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile body-plumage is moulted from July to October, but not the wing- or tail-feathers, primary-coverts, or greater or median wing-coverts. The bird then becomes like the adult, and the spring moult is the same as in the adult.

FIRST SUMMER.—The juvenile body-feathers are moulted in August, but not the wing- or tail-feathers, primary-coverts, or greater or median wing-coverts. The male is like the adult winter female, but the chin and throat are often tinged with buffish-pink. The female I cannot distinguish from the adult.

FIRST SUMMER.—Moult as in the adult, after which they cannot be distinguished with certainty, but those males with much streaking on the breast and those females with little pink on the throat may be first summer birds.

ROCK-PIBIT (Anthus s. petrosus).

ADULTS.—Complete moult August to October. From February to April there is a moult involving the body-plumage and occasionally lesser and median wing-coverts and some of the innermost secondaries; rarely all the tail-feathers, but usually not any. The primary-coverts, greater coverts and the rest of the wing-feathers are not moulted.

The sexes are alike, and there is very little difference in the winter and summer plumages, but in the summer plumage the upper parts are very slightly less olive and the under-parts slightly more whitish.

JUVENILE.—Like the adult, but the upper-parts slightly browner, the chin and throat speckled with blackish and the sides of the throat darker than in the adult; the streaks on the breast are rather darker and narrower.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile body-plumage, lesser wing-coverts and usually the median and some greater wing-coverts and some innermost secondaries are moulted in August and September, but not the tail- or wing-coverts. The new plumage is like that of the adults and the spring-moult and summer plumage are apparently the same as in the adults.

BLUE-HEADED YELLOW WAGTAIL (Motacilla flava flava) and the subspecies of this species on the British List all have the same moults.

ADULTS.—Complete moult in August or September. There is a moult from January to April which involves the body-plumage, most of the lesser and median wing-coverts, many inner greater wing-coverts and usually the innermost secondaries and central tail-feathers, but not the primary-coverts nor the rest of the wing- and tail-feathers, though exceptionally the whole tail moults. There is considerable variation in individuals in the extent of the moult, but it seems to be the rule that in M. f. rayi (the Yellow Wagtail) the central tail-feathers are not so frequently moulted as in the other forms of M. flava.

JUVENILES.—The juveniles of M. f. flava, thunbergi and rayi are alike, and I have not been able to examine juveniles of the other subspecies. The upper-parts are with blackish markings forming narrow lines on the sides of the crown; the chin, centre of throat and lower breast are pale buff, the sides of the throat from the bases of the lower mandible to the breast and a band across the breast are brown-black, while the rest of the under-parts are pale yellowish-buff.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile body-feathers and most of the wing-coverts are moulted from July to September, but not the primary-coverts nor the wing- or tail-feathers. The various forms when in this plumage are usually indistinguishable except for the first winter male of M. f. fuldegg, which always has some black or blackish feathers on the fore-head.

FIRST SUMMER.—Moult as in adult. The new plumage of the male is like that of the adult male, but the female differs from the adult female in being browner on the upper-parts, and whitish-buff instead of yellow on the throat and upper-breast.

THE LONG-TAILED TIT.

This tiny British bird builds perhaps the most marvellous nest of any of our native birds. It is entirely closed except for a tiny hole in the side near the top. Over two thousand feathers have been counted in the lining of one of these nests.

Canary Management for Beginners.

By WILLIAM FAIRLIE.

THE general practice in giving colour-feed is to mix it with egg-food, the same as given to hens when feeding their young, adding a good teaspoonful of colour to one hard-boiled egg, and about the same quantity of crushed biscuit or stale breadcrumbs, well mixed together, and giving to each bird about a good teaspoonful of this mixture daily.

After the birds get used to this, add more colour gradually, till a good teaspoonful to one egg, etc., is reached. Continue giving daily doses regularly till it is seen that the old body feathers are all moulted; in fact, that all the feathers are moulted save those of the head, which is always the last part to moult. This is the time to stop their feed gradually, so as not to get the head too fiery a colour in contrast to the body.

The process of washing is rather a difficult operation to tackle at a first attempt, and requires a deal of care in handling the bird, as sometimes, with those who have had no experience, it has very painful results. To those who are accustomed to it, it is a matter of small moment, but even then there is a considerable amount of skill required to do it thoroughly, for if a bird is only half-washed it will certainly look far worse than if it had not been touched at all.

Birds should never be washed more than is actually necessary, but when setting them to show it becomes imperative, if you wish to stand any chance of winning. It would be very advantageous to the beginner, if he has the opportunity, to watch some experienced fancier perform this operation, as he would learn more by seeing it done than in any other way.

When this is not possible, it will be found best to proceed in the following manner. Make up a good fire and rake all the dust from the bars, getting the fire as clear as possible and placing a kettle of water thereon to boil. Next get two or three chairs to put the washing utensils on, and a low stool to sit on, and place them near the fire.

Put a large open-fronted cage, with two or three perches across, and scrupulously clean, on the fender to warm, with a perfectly clean duster or so placed inside on the bottom for the birds to lie on whilst drying. Cover this over with a light towel or piece of flannel to keep the heat in.

Two medium-sized basins will be required to wash the birds in, one for washing and the other for rinsing, and a piece of soap. Use a badger-hair shaving-brush for washing them with, as the hair is very soft and does not injure the bird's eyes like most other brushes. Place two or three towels on the fender to warm for drying the bird on, and fill a jug full of cold water, to make the bath of the proper temperature (about 80 degrees); and, last, but not least, wash your hands thoroughly clean. The operation of washing should be done close to the fire, and all doors should be closed to keep any draught from the drying cage.

Catch the birds which are to be washed, and put them into a cage all together, covering it over if they begin to quarrel, in case they should damage one another's plumage. Take the least valuable bird first and hold it in the left hand, with its head between the finger and thumb, the tail lying along the wrist. Dip the bird into the warm water and rub the brush on the soap and commence to wash the back and neck first. Don't be afraid to rub the soap well in.

Proceeding gradually along the sides of the wings to the tail, next wash the head, top of break and sides of neck; and as this part is mostly the dirtiest, it will require a lot of working to get the dirt thoroughly out.

Having done those parts thoroughly, turn the bird over and wash the throat and under part of the neck, proceeding along the breast to the tail again. Then rinse the bird well in the other basin of warm water, as the soap must be got thoroughly out of the feathers.

Having completed this part successfully, place the bird in one of the warm towels, quite close to the fire, and get as much water out of the feathers as possible, finally putting it into the drying-cage.

Sometimes a feather of the tail is a little bit curled or twisted at the end when dry. Should this be the case, give the bird a little water to bathe in; but if this should not rectify it, put the feather or feathers into a little warm water, and draw them gently between the fingers and thumb a few times. This will generally put matters right. Occasionally, a wing or tail feather may get damaged or broken, and, should this happen, it is best to draw the quill out; but until it grows again the bird will not be fit for show purposes.

Club Reports.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (East End)

Meeting May 31, Blue Bell Inn, Shields Road, presided over by our chairman, Mr. H. Bennet, Kelso, and Mr. A. Hay, Tweedmouth, were elected judges for third annual show, Nov. 24 and 25. Classification same as last year, subject to revision at future date. No further meeting until meeting Aug. 30.—Ed. Colman, Sec.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

Meeting, June 1, there was a fair turn out of members, but we are being hardly hit with the recruits for military service. Members, however, decided to have a First Feather Show for Yorks., clear and marked in Co-op. Library, July 1. Mr. W. Collins, judge. Birds to be staged by 7.30.—Geo. Hayver, Sec.

SOUTHERN BORDER F.C.

Meeting Headquarters, May 22, Mr. G. F. Crawford, chair. Three new members elected. The meeting had been called to allot patronage, but as several applications were incomplete, the matter was postponed. We are open to receive application from one more London society; will secretaries please note and write me at 135, Lee Road, Lee Green, S.E. Members are reminded that subs. are now due, and I have still room for adverts in the Manual. Date of next meeting will be announced in "Cage Birds."—Geo. Burton, Hon. Sec.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.C.

Meeting, Village School, Alexandria, May 30, Pres. W. B. Gillies, chair. Chairman introduced the lecturer of the evening, Mr. J. F. Park, of Glasgow, who gave one of the most instructive and interesting this club has yet had. Questions having been invited, the lecturer replied to same in a manner that left no room for criticism. Mr. A. Maxwell and others having taken part, and unanimously borne out the lecturer in his remarks, a very enjoyable and instructive meeting was brought to a close with a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer.—A. H. McLean.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

A Council meeting was held May 27 to hear the report of the sub-committee appointed to revise the rules. The altered rules were taken separately and thoroughly explained, reasons being given for the suggested alteration and afterwards they received the full approval of the delegates. It will now be necessary to submit them to the various societies to be voted on. The Union has decided to grant full patronage to Sheffield show, Nov. 3 and 4, where all the Union specials and medals will be competed for under the same conditions as an ordinary Union show. Of course, no Union show will be held on that date.—S. Midgley, Hon. Sec.

WEST LONDON F.A.

Meeting, Headquarters, Windsor Castle, King St., Hammersmith, June 1, Mr. Turner, chair; ten members present. Principal business, the young bird show for next meeting night, July 6, Mr. Crisp to judge. Mr. Butterfield offers 2/6 special for best amateur Canary, and Mr. Turner's special for points in this and annual show. The prospects of the breeding season are far from rosy. The following report young birds on the sticks: Messrs. Bonniwell, 22 Nor. and Yorks.; Butterfield, 15 Nor.; Onslow, 15 Nor. and Yorks.; Withers, 5 Nor.; Dyets, 8 Yorks.; Turner, 3 Crests; Chappell, 15 Nor. Meeting closed with the usual vote of thanks to chair.—H. Chappell, Press Corres.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES N.C.C.

Meeting and show of British birds and mules in Good Templars' Hall, 123, Ingram-st., June 3, Mr. Wm. Dinwoodie presided over a good attendance. Annual show was fixed for Jan. 27; judges were elected, and will be published when I receive their acceptances. Judge for F.F. Show, July 29, Mr. Alex. McFarland, Glasgow. New members, Messrs. A. Dougan, Goran, and J. Clarkson, Rutherglen. Decided to have a ramble on June 17. Sec. to make arrangements, and members will be notified of destination and time of train by p.c. At next meeting, July 1, a special meeting will be convened at 6.45, prior to usual meeting, to consider the latter part of rule 4. The following members answered the call for specials, and were cordially thanked: Messrs. Dick Trotter, Dinwoodie, Robb, McCrystal, and Adam, and Mr. P. Pettigrew presented a silver medal for judging competition over Brambling chess, which was won by vice-pres. Wm. Dinwoodie, Messrs. Dick, Brown, Cross and Steel, judged Table Show.

Bramble: 1, sp, Pettigrew; 2, Adam; 3, Teller; 4, Trotter. Chaffinch: 1, Trotter; 2, Pettigrew; 3, Bannerman; 4, Adam. Bullf.: 1, Trotter; 2, sp, Pettigrew; 3, Fitzpatrick; 4, Teller; 5, Adam. Bunting: 1, Pettigrew, Snow; 2, Trotter, Vell. Hammer: 3, Adam, Black-headed; 4, Teller; 5, 6, Chalmers. Brit. A.O.V.: 1, Trotter, Raw; 2, 3, 4, Pettigrew, Heaton, King Onsel, and Song Thrush. Light Mule or Hyb.: 1, Pettigrew, Vell. Goldie Can.: 2, Trotter, Goldf. Greenf.: 3, 4, Pettigrew. Goldf. or Linnet Mules: Darkf.: 1, 2, Pettigrew; 3, sp, Trotter, Mules, A.O.V.: 1, Pettigrew; 2, 3, Adam, all Siskin-Canaries.—J. B. Adam, Hon. Sec.

WEST BROMWICH C.B.S.

Meeting, new headquarters, Ivy House, Handsworth, May 20, a fair number attending. Decided to hold first N.F. show June 17, Mr. Weaver (Wolverhampton) to judge. We hope every member will do his best to make it a success. Decided also to have a ramble to Bewdley on June 11, Mr. Jeffery (Birmingham) will conduct. Train leaves Show Hill 8.4, stopping at all local stations. Members do your best to come; also we hope to see our Birmingham and Wolverhampton friends, to whom we give a hearty welcome. Mr. Tonks gave a very interesting lecture on British and Mule breeding.—P. T. Cowley.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Winners for season 1915-16:—Yorks, champions: W. Jones, silver cup, 63 pts.; medal, J. McDermott, 57; 2nd medal, J. W. Metcalf, 31. Champ. Nor. Sec.: Silver cup, J. Walker, 76; medal, J. Thornton, 71; 2nd medal, F. Handley, 70. Borders: Silver cup, J. Johnson, 76; medal winners will be announced later. Novice medal, B. J. Roberts, 43 points; all points count in this section. Subs. 5s. now due, so as to enable us to get along. Applications for patronage due now will be considered at July meeting. The late E. Page won medal, presented by Mr. J. W. Metcalf. Next meeting, June 22, at Headquarters, Oldham-st., Liverpool, at 8.—Fred Handley, Hon. Sec.

WALLSEND (Mid-Tyne) C.B.A.

General meeting, Station Hotel, May 10. Mr. L. Simpson presided before a good attendance. Schedule for N.F. show was drawn up and gave satisfaction. 5s. was given by Mr. Greenwell for best bird, and 2s. 6d. best British, by Mr. W. Stundholme. A suggestion was made that all members be present at next meeting, June 14, to see if we were able to hold an open show on behalf of Red Cross fund, 20 per cent. of the prize money to go to the charity. Members not able to be present kindly send postcard and let me know if they are in favour of an open or members' show. A hearty invitation is given to fanciers to join our society; 1s. nom. and 2s. 6d. subs. New member elected: Mr. R. Lowery (Gateshead).—G. Greenwell, Sec.

BLAENAVON C.B.S.

Meeting, June 1, Crown Hotel, W. J. Lapworth, chair, with a good attendance. Decided to hold F.F. Show, July 1, and sec. was instructed to write Mr. J. Parfitt, Aberlilly, to judge. Prizes 3s. 1st, 2s. 2nd, 1s. 3rd; also 2s. 6d. special for best bird in each section; silver rose bowl for most points, and 5s. special for the runner-in. Seeing that we have not yet had a reply from the Swansea Sec., re clashing of our shows, it was decided that we guarantee our open show in Show Dates Fixed. Letters read from members serving in France thanking the members for parcels sent to them, which were appreciated by all present. Entries close for F.F. Show, Sat., June 24. Members please enter as many as possible.—G. Broome, Hon. Sec.

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Meeting May 31, headquarters, Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Eglinton Toll, the President, Mr. R. B. Cairns, in the chair, and a good attendance. Decided to hold ramble June 10. Members are requested to take single tickets to Thorntonhall. Train leaves Central Station at 3.3, calling at Eglinton St., Strathbungo, and Crossmyloof. A hearty invitation is given to all friends and fanciers, ladies or gentlemen. New member admitted, Mr. Hector Bremner. Agreed not to purchase any new trophies from club funds till after the war. Several members spoke on the subject of how to keep egg-food good and sweet, and Mr. E. Steel promised to introduce the subject of colour feeding at a future meeting. Vote of thanks to the members who promised specials for F.F. show, same date as next meeting, July 1, at 3. Mr. Peter Houston judge.—A. K. Hunter, sec.

LEEDS ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, June 3, Griffon Hotel, Boar-lane, Mr. F. Heaton, chair. Owing to delay in the post, the meeting was not announced as usual in "Cage Birds," but there was a fair turn up of members. A discussion cropped up re proposed control board, and a code of rules was drawn up which I shall send to every Roller Club sec., to be deleted or added to. By this means every club will have a chance of expressing its views and make it easier for the postponed conference to be held at the Griffon Hotel, Boar-lane, Leeds, Nov. 4. Annual Club Show was fixed for Nov. 3, 4, in the large room of the Griffon Hotel. Fanciers seem to be doing very well, several have over 30, and a good few over 20, so I consider this is going to be a good season, and I sincerely hope it will be so that we shall have a good collection of birds for CAGE BIRDS scheme for wounded soldiers. Mr. Watton promised to bring translations from most eminent breeders to be read as a paper (by Mr. Montague) for the benefit of our members and any friends who care to come; breeders heartily welcomed (date not stated, Editor). Mr. B. Green was elected a member.—H. Best, Sec.

GLASGOW (West End) C.B.C.

Meeting, May 12, Co-op. Hall, St. George's Cross, Mr. P. Allan, presiding over a good attendance. One of our vice-presidents, Mr. W. G. Hamilton, having resigned, Mr. John Campbell was unanimously elected vice-president. Mr. Walter Reid was elected a member of committee. New member enrolled, A. Thomson, an additional "special" for F.F. Show was kindly intimated by Mr. W. Colquhoun. Members were treated to a lecture by the well-known British bird judge and exhibitor, Mr. M. Craig, Tollcross. Mr. Craig said he did not propose to read a paper, but would confine his lecture to his personal experience, over a great many years, in the breeding and rearing of light and dark mules and hybrids, and to the type of British birds required for the show bench. He dealt with colourings at great length, and said he strongly believed in plenty of wild seeds in their season being given to British birds when moulting. After many questions had been asked and answered Mr. Craig was accorded a hearty vote of thanks, which brought this meeting all too soon to a close. Next meeting June 9, Co-op. Hall, St. George's Cross, at 8, when we hope to have a good attendance.—W. Prondfoot, Sec. and Treas.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

E. A. and H. F.—Answered by post.
FOOT TROUBLE (L. G.).—This kind of trouble with the feet or legs is not very rare in sitting hens, and is possibly due partly to the cramped inactivity of sitting constantly, and partly to the high temperature setting up slight inflammation. As a rule it passes off without any trouble when the hen resumes a more active condition. Therefore, if she is performing her maternal duties satisfactorily I would not advise you to interfere with her, or worry about these symptoms, until you see how they appear when the young are nearer doing for themselves, and thus avoid the risk of upsetting the normal process of rearing the young. If the symptoms do not disappear to your satisfaction by the time the young are doing for themselves, you may bathe the foot in a warm solution of witch hazel for a few minutes each evening, and after drying on a scrap of soft linen, paint the foot with a little of the strong extract. For bathing use a solution of a small teaspoonful of the extract in a saucerful of warm water. It will also help it if you add ten drops of lemon-juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea to the drinking water every second day for a week.

NO RESULTS (Disheartened).—I'm afraid the cock is very much out of condition for breeding, and I rather doubt whether he is of much use as a stock bird at all; therefore, as the season is now getting advanced, if you wish to avoid a great chance of total disappointment I would strongly advise you to replace him with a more vigorous and, preferably, and younger cock in good song. The following treatment will do all that can be done towards bringing him into breeding condition, but you must not overlook the fact that whilst this treatment is going on the best part of the year is also passing. See that he is not exposed to direct cold draughts, and give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and broken groats. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of egg food with about half the same quantity of a mixture of equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame mixed with it. Give also a small growing stool of dandelion daily. Cut through the root just below the surface, shake off the soil, and give the whole, seed heads and blooms included, to the bird. In the water for three consecutive days add ten drops of lemon-juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and after this four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of steel, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week.

YOUNG DYING (W. S.).—It is quite impossible to say from such particulars as you give what was the cause of the young dying. Even with the fullest particulars one can, as a rule, only hazard a guess in such cases. A post-mortem is the only reliable means of knowing with any degree of certainty. Still, your feeding is scarcely correct, and that might have something to do with the deaths. At six weeks old the youngsters should have had a supply of canary and summer rape accessible. You might also examine your hemp, to see if it is sound and sweet in the kernel, and if not see that you get at once a sample that is, for unsound hemp is apt to prove very fatal to youngsters that are fed largely upon it at so early an age. The kernel should be of a nice milky-white colour when it is broken. With future broods, when you take them from the parents, see that they have a box filled with a supply of good, sound canary seed, on top of which you place a little summer rape each morning. In addition to this give a teaspoonful per bird of egg food, mixed rather on the dry side, each morning, and in the afternoon throw out any remainder and give in its place, after washing the vessel, of course, a similar quantity of a mixture of cracked hemp, crushed dry biscuit, and broken groats with a sprinkling of maw, adding, as the birds get a little older, an equal part of niger, teazle and white millet. Give a regular supply of pure clean water daily. Keep the cages clean and strewn with clean gritty sand, and then you should have no difficulty in rearing the young successfully once they get able to feed themselves.

A TRIO (Various).—(1) It is the exception rather than the rule, for the cock, which is the one you seem to refer to as "the bird," to undertake feeding of the young the first few days after they are hatched, so little blame can be attached to him for the desertion in your case. As the hen has failed to do her duty both when the cock was with her and when he was removed, the only rational way of saving her young is to endeavour to have another hen nesting at the same time, so that you can transfer the young from one to the other, or distribute them among two or more with small broods. Before removal, however, try the effect of giving a variety of tempting foods and green food. Make the usual egg food with equal parts crushed sponge cake, crumb of stale bread, and egg yolk, and sprinkle it with maw. Also offer a little soaked rape daily, but see that it does not become sour, and give a small scrap of green food, freshly gathered, three or four times daily—crisp young lettuce, chickweed, flower heads of groundsel, or watercress. (2) You should have dropped the oil on a morsel of bread and milk, or other soft food, and not attempted to give it forcibly in the beak. The feathers may be reproduced again at the autumn moult. (3) To help to prevent egg-binding in this hen give about half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts niger and linseed about every third day, and when she is about going to nest add to the drinking water every second day 20 drops of gin and five of molasses, or ten of glycerine as a substitute if molasses is not handy, though the latter is preferable. You may stop the suet which is of no practical use for the purpose.

VARIOUS (A. E. Rose).—(1) Yes, Norwich Canaries which have been bred and reared in a normal temperature, if turned into an outdoor aviary at any time now when the weather is fair, they will thrive all through the winter, and live and breed permanently in such a place as yours. (2) There are several reasons for making it advisable to remove the cocks from the hens after the breeding season until the following breeding season arrives, but the method is not absolutely indispensable. I know fanciers, for instance, who keep mated all through the year their birds that are kept indoors in cages. But that is a method I would not advise. (3) If the birds are flying at liberty in the aviary it is advisable to have at least two hens to each cock, and two cocks to five or six hens is quite sufficient. (4) The Zebra would do all right themselves, but they might make themselves a nuisance to the Canaries, and I should say they would be much better left out. Half-inch wire would hold them, providing it was not faulty.

SAMPLES OF CANARY SEED (R. C. C.).—No. 1 is very small, but is clean and sweet, and of very fair quality, so that there is no other objection to it but its small size. No. 2 is of very fair size, well ripened, clean and sweet, and of first-rate quality. It is better all round than No. 1, and is fit for any class of birds.

IRRITABLE (A. M. C.).—The bird is probably suffering from a little digestive derangement which gives rise to the irritation. Give this bird, and also the rest of the brood, a spray of seedy chickweed each day, but avoid very succulent stuff just yet, should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/12); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." and feed as follows. Give a regular supply of good sound canary seed daily, and each morning place on top of it a pinch of summer rape. In addition to this give a small teaspoonful of egg food, or any other soft food you use, mixed rather on the dry side, per bird, or a heaped teaspoonful between each two birds, each morning. Sprinkle a little maw seed over this. In the afternoon throw out any remainder, wash the pan, and give in its place a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts cracked hemp (see that it is sound and sweet in the kernel), niger, crushed dry biscuit and broken groats. Two or three times a week you may give a similar quantity of boiled summer rape in the afternoon as a change from the seeds, etc. Keep the cage floor well strewn with clean gritty sand. As soon as you see that the birds are beginning to crack the canary seed freely, gradually reduce the supply of soft food, and withhold it for a day now and again until eventually you give it only twice a week. Add to the drinking water of the one that is so irritable twelve drops of fluid magnesia every second day for a week, and on the alternate days add instead six drops of dilute sulphuric acid and four of tincture of gentian. I would not say that birds reared solely on bread and milk were more backward than those reared on the orthodox egg and bread. Backward broods will occur now and again from various causes with any kind of food, even egg food. It may be more a question of the quantity given when they cannot help themselves and the amount assimilated.

TOO OLD BEFORE FORTY (Homer).—(1) It is very probable that the cause of the clear eggs in your case is that the birds are past the prime of their reproductive powers. Two six-year-old birds are quite unsuitable mates in point of age. Each bird really ought to have been mated with one some years younger, and then you would probably have found the eggs more productive from both pairs. If you can do this for a final round you would be well advised to do so. Also treat them rather freely with seedy green food, especially dandelion seed heads. (2) For the later broods, when the weather is nice and warm, it is advisable to allow the hen to bathe two or three times a week whilst sitting, but in the earlier part of the season there is nothing to lose by withholding it, especially in the case of very vigorous bathers.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

GOLDFINCH DULL (Irishman).—The fact of your Finch "not caring much for the hard seed" makes me inclined to think there is something wrong with the seed. There is so much indifferent seed on the market just now that fanciers cannot be too careful. You should examine it very carefully, and if you have any doubt, purchase some from another source. At this time of the year you cannot do better than give your Goldfinch plenty of wild food; there are many kinds now in bloom and daily forming seed pods, that are useful, and as the summer advances others will be easily collected. Give him 8 drops of syrup of buckthorn in an oz. of water for one day only, and repeat two days later. Allow a spoonful of soft food twice a week until you see an improvement, or if you are able to get some good teazle seed give a spoonful soaked instead of the soft food. Let him bathe on all suitable occasions.

BREEDING GOLDFINCHES (Wm. Hill).—It is quite possible to breed Goldfinches in confinement. This I have managed on two separate occasions, once with them flying loose in a room, with a rough bundle of branches in one corner to nest in, when they built, laid, and reared their own young. The other pair was in a cage; the young on this occasion were reared by a hen Greenfinch. I would advise you to fix a nest-box (which they take to better than a nest pan), in one corner of the cage, and screen it with a few twigs, such as heather or box; give them plenty of building material, particularly moss and cow hair, and interfere with them as little as possible. If the young hatch give egg-food, soaked seeds, all kinds of wild food, and sprays of herbage with green fly on it, besides their usual seeds. Shall be pleased to hear if you succeed.

BREEDING LINNET-CANARY MULES (F. E. Riddell).—Your birds are both anxious to breed and should be put together at once. It is evident should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Harbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2 "Linnets," No. 3 "Siskin," No. 4 "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Mould British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

by your description that they have taken to each other, and it is very probable that if you insist upon them mating otherwise the results will not be satisfactory. As regards feeding the Linnet, if, as you say, he is in full song, he needs no other treatment, unless it is to supply him with a little shepherd's purse and chickweed. Give them a nest pan and plenty of moss and hair. The pan should be lined with a piece of felt or stout flannel.

BREEDING FINCHES IN AVIARY (New Beginner).—All the finches you mention have been known to breed in an aviary, but I fear yours is a rather small one in which to expect much success. If you mean to try seriously I would advise you to limit the numbers to three pairs, say one pair of Linnets, one pair of Redpolls, and then as you have the cock Greenfinch and Bullfinch there you might try them, although I think you would stand a better chance with a cock Goldfinch instead of the Greenfinch. Do not add any more to these, feed them well, giving plenty of wild food with seedling tops to it, and fix up two or three old nests and nest-boxes, supplying, of course, plenty of moss and cow hair.

BIRD BREEDING IN A ROOM (A. M. C.).—I am sorry to hear your first round of eggs were clear, but this is not at all uncommon with muling pairs; there is plenty of time yet, and you will probably do better later. Your feeding appears to be correct; keep up the supply of wild food if possible, otherwise soak some rape and teazle in a shallow dish until it commences to germinate, and then give to the birds—it is a capital substitute for green foods. Add a spoonful of strong quassia solution to the bath water. A spoonful of egg-food given twice a week would be beneficial just now.

WHAT BIRD? (A Devonshire Fancier).—I am afraid I cannot assist you in identifying the bird you saw, as your description is so slight. The size, construction and position of the nest would have helped me. Are you sure the breast was spotted like a Thrush? The only small bird I can call to mind with a spotted breast in your district would be the Woodlark, possibly this bird is known to you.

LOSING GOLDFINCHES (A. T. Wright).—If your Finch died after treatment of the gland, evidently that was not the cause of illness, and some other should be looked for. Any other you may lose should be sent to Mr. Yates for examination and report, when you will probably be able to deal with the trouble. I am afraid you do wrong to trust to the price of your seed just now to ensure its being of good quality; you had better trust to your own judgment. Unless your birds have a contagious disease I cannot but think there is something wrong in either your feeding or treatment, but I am sorry I cannot put you right, although I might do so if I could have a personal interview. You do not say what book you refer to, surely it was not the Nutshell dealing with ailing cage birds, that is full of information respecting diseases and cures. Respecting the catching of Finches with bird lime, you have of course every right to express your views on the subject, but might I suggest that you send us an article on your method of trapping, which I have no doubt the Editor could find room for. Finches are as a rule very fond of bathing, and I cannot understand all yours refusing the bath.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

TOPI PARRAKEETS AND BUDGERIGARS (G. R. S. Novice).—Topi Parrakeets come from South America, i.e., S. Mexico, Central America and Columbia. Fruit will be the most tempting dainty; when you have discovered the kind which most pleases its taste, it can have any kind it will take. Apple and banana are very wholesome. (3) There are no small books on these birds alone, but they are dealt with among other species in "Foreign Bird-keeping" (Dr. A. G. Butler, Vol. II., the Parrot section—the Editor would obtain it for you. (4) Your Budgies should breed, but your cage only provides accommodation for one pair; each pair should have two hawks hung up for them to choose from. Once they settle down, you should have luck with them, if you follow out the directions in your booklet.

ABOUT BUDGERIGARS (Bullfinch).—Your aviary 10ft. 12in. 5ft. wide, and 6ft. high, would accommodate 25 to 30 of these birds; at the same time I should not put in more than three to four breed pairs, as when they have young about, if you have decent luck, your accommodation will be fully occupied. Put up at least twice as many hawks as you have pairs of birds. They do not require any nesting material. When in breeding condition the cere round the nostrils is bright blue in the male and varies from dark cream (colour to deep brown in the female. Cockateels, Black-checked, Blue-winged and Madagascar Lovebirds usually agree fairly well with Budgerigars; of course, there is some sparring, but very seldom real scrimmages.

WHAT SPECIES? (Policie).—It rather reads like being either a young male, or a hen Ringneck, but I could be more definite perhaps if you stated whether it has a long or short tail, and compare it as to size with some well known bird. You possibly changed its dietary too suddenly, but do not go back to soaked bread again; it can, however, have some maize. It should also have a few fruit days; most Parrots are fond of sweet apple, but it can have any kind it will take. Also it can have such extras as pieces of biscuit and plain cake, stale crusts of household bread, and skinned nuts in variety. Keep grit and cuttlebone continuously in the cage, also a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. Spray it twice a week with a tepid quassia solution, but not on cold days. It should certainly improve on its present vocabulary, talk to it when you renew its food supplies, and when it is in quiet mood teach it by constant repetition, such words and short phrases as you wish it to learn. It should also pick up many words and calls which are uttered in its vicinity.

LOVEBIRDS WANT TO NEST (H. Snow).—I presume your "Lovebirds" are Green Budgerigars, and you had better get our Nutshell, "Budgerigars," 2d., post free, from our manager, which will give more detail than is possible in this column. Hang up two coco-nut husks in their cage or aviary, with the entrance holes towards the light; they require no nesting material, and will fashion the interior of the husks to their liking. Canary and white millet seed is the main dietary; give a few crushed oats about three times a week, when they have young keep a millet spray hanging in their enclosure. At the present time supply as much seedling and flowering grass as they will eat. If kept in an aviary young and old can be kept together indefinitely, but if in a cage the young should be removed to a roomy flight cage as soon as able to fend for themselves.

PICKING ITS FEATHERS (Fitzgerald).—By this time I am afraid that the feather-picking has become a vice and will be most difficult to mitigate or cure. I can only advise perseverance with the following treatment; spray it twice or thrice weekly (not on cold days) with a tepid quassia solution; every fourth day put one teaspoonful of Binnford's magnesia in the drinking water, and on the intermediate days put half a teaspoonful of chemical food in the drinking water. It would be the better for ripe fruit, any kind you can get it to take, also biscuits, stale crusts, and a little plain cake, also nuts in variety. Do not omit to keep up regular supplies of grit and cuttlebone in its cage, also a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. You must persevere with the treatment, and there will probably be relapses before it is cured of this annoying habit or vice, if a cure can be effected after it has been so long indulging in the habit.

should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/12); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockateels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Aracacans," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 26 "Harbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MACAW LAYING IN CAPTIVITY (Mrs. E. B. H.).—There is no reason why Macaws should not breed in captivity, providing one possesses a true pair and can give them suitable accommodation. Most Macaws would quickly hew their way out of any aviary that was not constructed of brick and iron; that yours does not do so by no means proves that any mate procured for her would be equally amenable. Most probably your bird if it did cut its way out, would return regularly to the aviary for food, and spend a greater part of its time about the trees in the vicinity of the aviary; but, it is equally probable that if it wandered far afield it would soon be shot; your neighbours with orchards certainly would not love it! These birds mature slowly, and it is quite probable that it has only just reached nesting age, though this stage may have been somewhat delayed by the weakness you referred to when last writing. If you cannot see your way to get a mate for her, then fix up in the aviary a good large barrel, wherein she may set up a sort of spinster dondrie. If you are able to get a mate (you should not have much difficulty) for her, then you must supply either a large barrel or roomy hollow log as a nest receptacle. Your bird is not the first Macaw to lay in captivity. I heard of one, a short time ago, that for a number of years past had laid several eggs (four, I think) annually.

GREEN PARROT WITH FITS, ETC. (Mrs. Ball).—So long as the bird has no return or appearance of having the fits, cease giving the bromide, but continue giving the chemical food and fluid magnesia as already advised. Give daily a little honey and borax, either direct to the mouth by means of a small stick or feather, or spread thinly on bread, biscuit, or plain cake, whichever the bird's demeanour makes most convenient; also give daily, by same method, a little cod liver oil emulsion, but there should be an interval between the two—give the honey and borax in the morning, and the C.L.O. emulsion in the afternoon. Keep the canary seed and oats in a separate seed-bin, in the cage, and ultimately, I think, the bird will take to it. The bird appears to be on the mend, but, of course, while these symptoms remain, anything may happen.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Canary with Two Heads (J. C.).—The hatching of an abnormal Canary such as you mention is not at all an unknown occurrence, though such cases are of course infrequent. Monstrosities occur at times in everything, and they sometimes live, but generally they do not have more than a very brief existence.

POST MORTEMES.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent in the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

For a Complete Knowledge of British Birds You Can't Beat

THE BRITISH BIRD MANUAL.

By H. NORMAN.

The Most Thorough and Practical Work on British Birds ever Produced. Published in two parts, or complete bound in cloth. Part I. Hardbills. Deals in the fullest manner with Linnets, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and all other species of Finches. Part II. Softbills. With Blackbirds, Thrushes, Jackdaws, Larks, and most of the more commonly kept species of insectivorous birds.

This work, lucidly written by a noted specialist, contains fullest directions for Hand-rearing, Keeping, and Exhibiting the most popular of our British Birds. Each bird is dealt with separately, its nesting habits, etc., are fully explained, and these, together with a description of its general characteristics, will enable the novice to easily identify the various species. Each part contains a coloured plate and numerous black and white illustrations by the author.

Price complete, bound in cloth 2s., post free

Real practical information on every variety of Canary, illustrated with an art plate of a standard bird, is contained in

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL

The author, that well-known expert and judge, gives much useful instruction on AVARIES, CAGES, BREEDING, MOULTING, EXHIBITING, DIET, SEEDS, and a separate chapter on individual varieties. Get a copy now, it will help you during the breeding season.

Price 1/2 post free. Cloth bound, 2/2.

Wise, fed birds are healthy birds, and healthy birds do you service. Avoid all errors of diet in feeding them, therefore will help you to feed them properly. It is especially valuable at the season when wild foods are to be had in such abundance, merely for the gathering.

"Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants for Cage Birds"

There are many sketches and illustrations of all the best known wild plants.

A HANDY BOOK.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 3d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

TIMELY TIPS.

Don't hurry to remove young from their parents.
And don't scare them out of their nests by sudden movements.
Beware of draughts in treacherous weather.
Wage war on the red mite.

Club Reports.

SOUTHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting, June 6, Mr. W. G. Fellows, chair. This was the first meeting since the start of society, which the hon. sec., Mr. W. L. Page, has not attended. As he is now serving in the Army, his place will be filled during his absence by the assistant hon. sec., Mr. G. J. Slade, 34, Milton Road, Southampton. Decided to hold F.F. show in modified form, July 5, 21 classes, cup and seven specials for completion. Decided to suspend meetings during summer months.—G. J. Slade.

CHESTER-LE-STREET C.B.S.

Meeting, June 3, King's Head Hotel, with only a moderate attendance. Schedule for N.F. show was drawn up the same as last year, except one class. Members not receiving a schedule can bring birds on July 1 and get them entered morning of the show, at new Headquarters, 1/- per class will be added to the entry fee of 6d. per cage; we hope to have a record entry. Mr. T. C. Crawhall, Newcastle, was elected to judge annual show, Jan. 13, not Jan. 15, as previously stated. Next meeting, Aug. 5, when it is to be hoped we have a better attendance. Mr. W. Evans was elected a member.—R. Ward, Sec.

CITY AND COUNTY OF PERTH.

Meeting, Laidlaw's Rooms, Leonard Street, June 5; Mr. A. Borrie, chair. Sec. reported that he had seen about the hall for the open show, but he could not get it from the military at that time of the year, so it was decided not to have an open show. N.F. show classes were fixed: Nor. Yell., Nor. Buff, Crest, C.B., Scotch Fancy Yell., Scotch Fancy Buff, Border Yell., Bord. Buff, Yell., Yell., Buff, Goldf. and Buff., Linnet and Greenf., A.O.V. Brit., Young Mules and Myb. Show to be held in Laidlaw's Hall, Leonard Street, at 2.30. Entry 6d. Judge, Mr. J. Cranna. New member: Mr. D. Melville. Meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.—J. L. Smith.

NORTHERN BORDER FANCY C.C.

Meeting, June 7, Pillars Cafe, Pink Lane, Newcastle, Mr. W. Smith presiding. Messrs. Merriot and Furness were elected members. A general discussion took place on the prospects of the coming show season, and with a view to stimulating the interests of fanciers "during this period." Several suggestions were put before the meeting. Eventually it was decided to allow these to lay over. Decided to have a table show for young birds at next meeting, July 5, three classes each for novice and champion sections. Mr. W. Smith, judge. Members, particularly the champions, are earnestly requested to bring as many birds as possible, as it is by means of these table shows that we hope to keep the ball a-rolling.—C. Farrer.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

Meeting, June 6, Headquarters, Rotherham House, Exchange Street, Mr. T. Dunn presided over a good attendance. The chief attraction was the show of young birds, which was fairly good considering the date, birds being too young for staging. Dr. Craig judged Yell. and Mr. T. Tew the remainder. In champion Yell. the successful exhibitors were W. H. Spencer and T. Ridal; novice, H. Haggerstone, C. Humphrey, and E. Forrester. The awards in ch. Norwich were equally divided between Irvine Hartley, A. H. Waters, and T. Roberts, while in the novice classes J. Roberts got all the plums. Many specials were promised for the next table show, July 4; Mr. H. H. Towers judge; so members rouse yourselves and find him some work. A vote of thanks to the judges brought the meeting to a close.—E. C. Job, Sec.

WELSH N. COUNTIES F. & F.A.

Meeting, June 7, Station Hotel, Llanudno Junction. The following attended: Miss Loftus, Messrs. J. Arundale (chairman), H. M. Brigg, A. Carter, J. Cheshire, G. F. Downing, A. Hinton, G. Hughes, R. Moystyn, B. Sower, and the secretary. Correspondence was read between Mr. Wilks, of the Red Garage, and the sec., confirming their interview in reference to the hire of the garage for the show, from which it appeared that if it was decided to hold the show on the date or dates suggested (Nov. 1, 2), the committee could have the premises on the terms stated, upon giving due notice. The arrangement made considered satisfactory. A long discussion followed on the question of holding the show on the date already suggested, or postponing it during the duration of the war, and it was ultimately decided that the matter be left in abeyance for a month, so that meanwhile it might be ascertained what support the committee were likely to get for the open show, in the way of classes being guaranteed. Fanciers wishing to support the committee by guaranteeing classes are respectfully invited to write the secretary.—Geo. E. Cragg, Hon. Sec.—"Rocklands," Rhos, Colwyn Bay.

CINNAMON-MARKED Y.C.C.

Annual meeting, June 3, Mr. Morrison presiding. The balance-sheet for 1915-'16, showing balance of £3, was considered a good one for these times. Mr. E. Clegg, Dewsbury, was elected president. Mr. Morrison said the office was not very exacting; he had really enjoyed the two years he had been president and he hoped the new president would have as good support as he had had from the committee and members generally. Mr. Clegg not being present, Mr. W. Richmond, who, along with Dr. Craig, had been elected vice-president, took the chair. Mr. H. H. Towers proposed a vote of thanks to retiring officers, especially Mr. Morrison, the president, who had been a very painstaking and impartial president. The secretary also spoke to the proposition, saying how well Mr. Morrison had met him in his work and had given assistance which had been really helpful; the committee also had been a really good working committee. Mr. Morrison, in reply, wished the club every success, and said that his reason for wishing to retire from office was that he thought the honours should go round. He thanked the members present for their good wishes. Messrs. Morrison, Towers, A. Cooper, G. Atkinson, J. E. Hudson, B. Townsend, W. A. Cowgill, G. Sneed, S. Midgley, L. C. Carey, W. Gledhill, W. B. Atkinson, A. Whitely, J. W. Baker, P. P. Terry, A. M. Craven, and W. Mitchell, were elected as committee. Messrs. S. Midgley and J. Firth, auditors; and P. Garnett, secretary. A new rule was made that all members competing for competition prizes must mark their entry forms as follows:—For open competition, C.M.Y.; for amateur competition, C.M.A.; and for novice competition, C.M.N.Y. This rule to be strictly enforced. The date for closing of applications for patronage was fixed for July 1, a society wishing for our patronage must write me on or before that date. Next committee meeting, July 8; committee will be notified of time and place later. Decided that we run open, amateur and novice competitions next season, details to be fixed at committee meeting. Mr. Morrison promised two prizes, £1 1s. and 10s. 6d.; and Mr. Towers one value £1 1s. for competition.—R. Garnett.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting, June 1, Mr. Jones chair. Decided to make admission to F.F. show 4d. Will members do their best to make a good entry, although some are having an indifferent season. Fixed prize money and specials. Mr. E. Powell elected member. Next meeting, papers on colour-feeding.—E. Sisson, Assist. Sec.

STANLEY EMPIRE F.F. & C.B.S.

Meeting, May 28, W. T. Brown chair; a poor turn-up. Sec. was instructed to write for terms for judging at annual show, Nov. 18, 19, to Messrs. A. Holden (Gateshead), R. Bewicke (Newfield), Sealey (Choppington), Swann (Sunderland), Woodhouse (Hartlepool), Morrison (Blue Bell Hotel), E. Atkinson (West Stanley). Next meeting, July 2; all are earnestly requested to attend.—R. Hutchinson, Sec.

WALKLEY C.B.S.

Meeting, June 8, Mr. Ridal, chair. Mr. Drabble was elected hon. treas. Table show result.—Yell.: 1, A. Bagshaw; 2, 3, Williams; 4, Goodison; vhc, he, c. Powell. Buff: 1, 3, Williams; 2, A. Bagshaw; 4, vhc Goodison; he F. Bagshaw; c. Biggin. Nor.: 1, 2, 3, he, Gill; 4, vhc, Parsons. July meeting, F.F. show, fix prize money; birds to be staged by S.—E. Sisson, Assist. Sec.

N.W. GLASGOW C.B.C.

Meeting, May 30, Mr. P. Thom presiding over a good attendance. The following gentlemen have accepted to judge at our annual show, Nov. 18: Mr. Simpson (Norwich), Mr. Heggie (Yorks.), Mr. MeLean (Borders), Mr. Blackstock and Mr. Clark (Scotch Fancies), and Mr. Craig (British and Foreign). Mr. Park and Mr. Fyfe have promised to judge at the F.F. show, June 27, at 44, Napier's Hall Street.—P. Houston, Sec.

LONDON C.B.A.

Meeting, 2, York St., St. James's, June 1, Mr. Robson chair. Correspondence up to date was taken. Agreed that Young Bird show be held July 13. Sec. will be thankful for any specials for same. Sec. stated that owing to his men having enlisted he would not be able to attend meetings, and it was agreed that meeting nights be every second Thursday. Continuation of debate on mating was resumed, members present raising some very interesting points, which caused lively discussion. Vote of thanks to the chair ended a very instructive evening.—A. Wallington.

MANCHESTER AND N.C.O.S.

General meeting, June 5, with a very good attendance. Classification for Next Feather show was drawn up, and I hope to have schedules ready for next meeting. I have ordered a quantity of Ramsden's colour-feed, and hope members will let me know how much they want. N.F. table show held; judge, Mr. Raynes; 20 birds staged, 9 Yell., 9 Nor., 1 Green Nor., 1 Mule. Mr. Riley took the honours in Yell., also special for best bird. J. Green, 1 and 3 in Norwich; 2, Cook. Hope for a good attendance next meeting night.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

RICHMOND (Surrey) C.B.S.

Meeting, St. John's Hall, May 29; W. Phipps chair, and a fair attendance. Business of show was arranged, and date fixed for second Monday in July; Mr. Robson, judge. Schedule same as last year. I hope members will bear the date in mind, so that we can have a record show. Members present did not record very good luck in their first round; in fact, one or two had experienced very bad luck, which they said was accounted for by the very bad "birdy" weather; however, all were hopeful of a good second round. The members were then accorded a treat in a lecture by Mr. Geo. Mortlock on "British Birds." Mr. Mortlock first read a paper on the habits of nearly all the British that are kept in captivity. Not only did he clearly define their habits, but also all the food necessary to keep them in the best of health. After finishing his paper Mr. Mortlock went on to his experiences of keeping British birds, and showed how one must always study the birds they keep, for a very trivial alteration in the matter of housing a British bird means the difference between success and failure. Any Richmond fancier who keeps British birds and did not hear the lecture missed a lot of valuable information. A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer closed the meeting.—Colin Brown, Hon. Sec.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

Meeting, Headquarters, June 5, Mr. W. J. Heath presiding over a fair attendance. Letters read from P. Rorke and J. Robson. New members elected: Mr. E. Collins, Mr. Beaumont. Silver spoons won during the past season were presented by the chairman. The schedule of Young Bird show, as compiled by the committee, was submitted for approval. Thirteen classes were provided, and several silver spoons were allotted as specials. Mrs. Griffiths has promised special for best Yell. in novice section. Diplomas are also provided for best birds in champion and novice sections. Donations were promised by Messrs. Heath, Pegg, Rorke, and Smith. The meeting expressed its satisfaction with the arrangements made. For the judging competition 17 birds faced the judge, Mr. Rorke, whose placings were as follows:—Bord.: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Pegg; Nor.: 1, 2, Birch; Yell.: 1, vhc, he, c. Farley; 2, 3, Smith. In the judging competition points gained were as follows: Collins 23, Birch 23, Farley 23, Howard 22, Miss Worrall 13, Pegg 13, Smith 12, Heath, Farley, Jay 11 each. The Young Bird show has been fixed for July 4. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to Mr. Rorke for his services as final judge. Members kindly note that, as usual, no meetings will be held during July, August, and September. Re-open on Monday, Oct. 2, with table show and lecture.—G. Griffiths.

Country Rambles

QUEEN'S PARK (Glasgow) C.B.S.

Ramble, June 10, to Thornthorpe and vicinity. A large party of members and friends, including several ladies, left Central Station by train, and were joined by others at various stations on the outward journey. The weather, which had been a bit unsettled all Friday and Saturday morning, seemed to clear up for the occasion, and the prospects of a nice cool day for such an outing seemed rosy. The company reached Thornthorpe Station, which is a nice quiet spot, and a start was made with the road journey. We had not got a hundred yards out of the station when our worthy Vice-Chairman, Mr. Andrew Forman, let the company know that he knew the likely spots to look for nests by discovering a Thrush's nest nicely concealed in a thick hedge; there were four young in it just about ready for the wing. Further along the road Mr. Connelly got his eye on another nest, and this proved to be a Blackie's, with four eggs, all very dark, and due to hatch. A little later Mr. Urie and the Secretary, who had been beating about some whin bushes in the hope of running across a nest of Linnets, saw something come out of a thick whin bush, and, after a lot of searching, discovered a nest of Titlarks just hatching, three young being out, one half out, and one egg. As we had to pass this spot on the road back, we had another look at the nest, and found the other egg had hatched out, making five young. After a good walk we made for Waterbank Farm, owned by Mr. William Gibson, and had lunch, home-baked scones and butter and plenty of rich milk, and to these good things we did ample justice. Through the kindness of Mr. Gibson we were allowed to visit Primrose Glen. Here there were nests in abundance—Blackbirds', Thrushes', Greenfinches', Hedge Sparrows', and others, but not a Grey Linnet did we find. After spending a good hour and a-half here we went on the road again, through the village of Carmunock, and down the hill into Cathcart, where we got the car for the city, everyone feeling the better for the day's outing, and sorry that it had passed all too quickly.—A. K. Hunter, Sec.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

The annual ramble took place on May 28. Mr. J. Boden took charge of a score of members and friends at the Stockport Fire Station, and took the car to Hazel Grove. Passing along the Buxton Road, which is one of the nicest routes leading into the country around Manchester, the trees in the gardens looked really beautiful, especially the laburnum, lilac, and hawthorn. On leaving the car we continued along the Macclesfield Road, and entered the estate of Lord Vernon, passing along through Poynton to Pott Shrigley, and just touched the fringe of Lyme Park, Disley. We were all ready for, and did ample justice to, the good tea provided for us here. Afterwards the judging of the best collection of grasses or plants bearing seeds most suitable for cage birds was done, and as our friend and guide had generously given the prize he was asked to award it. The winner was Mr. Mitchell, and in his selection of 17 varieties were included those suitable for Britishers as well as Canaries, which some of the Canary men had overlooked. On resuming our journey we passed through Middlewood and along the high road to Hazel Grove; thus concluded a most enjoyable ramble through about ten miles of the hills and dales of Cheshire. Along the journey all the members were interested in either bird nesting or gathering flowers, etc., and among the former the following nests were noted, containing either eggs or young: Robin, Willow, Wren, Blackbird, Thrush, Chaffinch, Blackcap, Greenfinch, Hedge and Tree Sparrows.—J. Raynes, Chairman.

GARSTON B.B.A.

The joint ramble of the members of the Garston B.B.A. and North Liverpool C.B.S. took place under ideal conditions on June 12. There was a fair number present from both societies, but not up to expectations, owing no doubt to many fanciers who, under ordinary circumstances, would have been on holiday, having to turn in to work as usual on Whit Monday, thus losing the full day's rest which would have enabled them to get over the effects of wandering through lanes and along the sandy shore. A start was made from Garston car terminus shortly after 2.30 to the shore, passing en route through that portion of Garston which on week days is a very busy hive of industry, judging from the number of factories we passed. Once on the shore we walked along inspecting the various objects of interest until we came to the more wooded part, where all eyes and hands were turned to inspecting the hedgerows and trees for the various herbs and nests of the many varieties of wild birds found in this locality. A good number were found containing eggs and youngsters at various ages, some a few days old and many at about the age when they are thinking of taking to flight and looking after themselves. A few pairs of Shell Ducks and one pair of wild Geese were seen feeding on the shore as we went along, also many different species of wild birds, and a Partridge and Pheasant here and there. After traversing the shore for a distance of five or six miles we took a lane inland to the house of one of the Garston fanciers, who had prepared ready for us a real substantial tea, to which one and all did justice after such a trying walk along sand and shingle. After a brief rest amidst most pleasant surroundings we again started through roads and lanes, and over stiles, to the woods of Oglet, and here the British bird men were at home. There were nests in galore, amongst the finds being several nests of those interesting little birds, the Blue Tits. What a nest this bird does build! With a roof on, as the saying goes; no such thing as youngsters falling out here, they see to that all right. But each of these nests we found empty. Whether we were too late for the youngsters, or someone had been there before us, we cannot say, but we should have been delighted to see how many eggs this bird lays if we could have found one with a full clutch. Greenfinch, Linnet, Hedge Sparrow, Blackbird, and Thrush nests were plentiful; we even espied one Partridge nest containing only one egg. Either the clutch was only just starting, or the parents had been disturbed, and forsook it. Wending our way now towards Garston by the main road we arrived back shortly after nine o'clock, sorry to have to give up the country for the smoke of town again, and each one determined to take advantage, if possible, of another ramble before the close of summer. We were very sorry that the genial chairman of the Garston B.B.A., Mr. T. Lowe, was debarred from joining us through doctor's orders, having been laid up with a bad illness, but we all wish him a speedy recovery, and hope to have his presence at our next ramble. After light refreshment at the shop of Mr. Jones, the Vice-Chairman of the Garston B.B.A. (who knows where to put the cake), we all boarded the Liverpool car for home, thoroughly elated at such a glorious outing.—R. T. Lonsdale, Hon. Sec.

A TALK ABOUT FOREIGN BIRDS.

With Special Reference to the Hobby in Scotland.

By GAVIN ALSTON.

THE keeping of foreign birds has been indulged in since the earliest of times. In ancient Scripture we read that Solomon had a navy of ships, and that they brought ivory and apes and Peacocks, and when that wise King spake of all fowls I have no doubt he gave his experience of those he obtained from foreign lands also.

I believe it has always been the custom when sailors and travellers visited foreign countries to bring home specimens of the avifauna of these countries. The Parrot family lent themselves more readily to this custom than perhaps any others. Their bright plumage, together with their adaptability to captivity, were reasons enough to make them favourites with seamen, and as most of them found a ready market when the ship returned, it is easy to see how these birds so admirably suited Jack.

But I think there is another reason why Parrots were among the first foreign birds to be imported to this and other countries. These birds nest in holes in trees, and are more easily caught than most birds on that account. For instance, every schoolboy knows that it is easier to catch a Sparrow on the nest than, say, a Chaffinch, and, as the average sailor has no appliance for bird-catching, Parrots naturally fell an easy prey.

Then and Now.

Although foreign birds have been imported for centuries, it is only within the last thirty or forty years that they have come in number and variety. Even when I started keeping them, the trade of importing might be said to have been in its infancy, but the money that is now paid for imported birds must amount to several hundred thousand pounds per annum.

The literature about them at that time was also scant and dear. There was then no specialist weekly paper for cage birds, and the papers there were dealt more particularly with poultry and Pigeons, and in some cases with quadrupeds also, so that foreign birds hardly ever had a look in at all.

True, there was the "Avicultural Magazine," and it was doing a useful work among a favoured few, but among the many ignorance prevailed, and the names of the different species were to most people so much Greek or Latin, or Hindustani for the matter of that.

Contrast that with the present time. Now we have in CAGE BIRDS a most up-to-date weekly journal, dealing exclusively with birds, foreign birds receiving their just share of attention. Besides, there are two monthly magazines dealing almost entirely with foreign birds, and several cheap books have also been written on foreign birds, and anyone wanting to learn about them has plenty of reliable literature ready at his hand.

What is the best time of the year to purchase imported foreign birds? This question, like many others, is more easily asked than answered. Coming from warm countries, as most foreign birds do, it needs no stretch of imagination to see that winter is not the proper time, as the extreme change from a warm to a cold climate cannot be expected to agree with them.

The Seasons Considered.

Spring appeals to us as a more suitable time, but as a large proportion of foreign birds come from the Antipodes, their natural moulting season is in our spring, and, as we all know, the moulting season is a trying time for birds, even when the conditions are favourable; therefore it is much more trying when they have to endure a lower temperature at a time when their vitality has been reduced by a long journey. I have no hesitation in saying that summer is apparently the best season to purchase imported foreign birds, but it is best not to be too hasty in arriving at conclusions.

Birds are often confined in large numbers in small compartments during long journeys, and the consequence is they arrive in bad condition, their heads often bare and their flight and tail feathers broken.

Given roomy quarters, their body feathers are soon replaced, but their wing and tail feathers will not grow again till they moult the following spring, and to keep them all through the autumn and winter in this ragged condition is what no aviculturist likes. I have never heard autumn advocated as the best time to get foreign birds. The shortening days and the weather turning cold and damp seem instinctively to tell us that is not the time.

But there are other factors to be reckoned with when getting together a collection of rare foreigners. In the first place, it is only at certain seasons that some species are imported and only once in a while that others are. Thus you have either to secure them then or pay double afterwards, and run the risk of perhaps not getting them at all. Then there are other species that only appear in the market at very rare intervals, and you have to buy there and then, or you may have grey hairs before you have another chance.

Spring the Best Time.

In reality, there is no right time for purchasing imported birds, but I think for preference early spring is the best. They have time then to recover from the journey before the moult sets in. Of course you must supply artificial heat till the summer sun drives away the cold out of the air. By that time they will be through the moult, and then you may turn them into an outdoor aviary, and as a rule you need trouble yourself no more about them.

As I said before, foreign birds are now imported in large numbers, but the figures which dealers advertise are often very much exaggerated. You may often divide the birds advertised by ten, and in some cases by one hundred, and you will then arrive at the approximate number they hold. I advise purchasers to deal with firms who have the birds actually in stock, and not in their mind only, as is often the case.

As foreign bird dealers' terms are generally cash, it is wise to endeavour to know a little about the reputation of the firm you intend dealing with, as there are men in this trade, as in all others, who may be classed as good, bad, and indifferent. Foreign birds are a very fickle commodity, both as regards condition and nomenclature. It is best, therefore, to deal only with firms who have a reputation to lose.

It would be out of place to mention any names, but one dealer has taken several trips to Africa to secure his stock, whilst one of the firms sends one of its partners to Australia to catch their own birds, and superintend them during the voyage. But while there are many bird shops of repute, there are others to visit which makes you leave them a sadder but a wiser man.

Two Points of View.

The ideas of those who object to the keeping of birds in cages have been formed when passing shops such as I have referred to. Had they instead happened to have a look through a well-ordered aviary and seen the little captives—content, singing, courting, and perhaps nesting—their views might have moderated on the subject.

Of course you cannot persuade these people to enter a bird show where they would see the finished article in a cage suitable for its adornment, or they would be convinced—ay, and against their will—by the bloom and steadiness of the exhibit that the little inmate was healthy, happy, and well cared for in its adopted home.

But to return to the purchasing of foreigners. I prefer, when possible, to get them from private aviaries acclimatised and in perfect condition, and although you may have to pay a-half more for them, they are usually cheaper in the end.

Take a look at the food they have in the travelling cage, and let them have access to the same kind in their new quarters. Birds coming off a journey are invariably thirsty; therefore, put water inside the cage, but be sure not to put in cold water; let it be tepid. The drinking of a lot of cold water renders the birds liable to take a chill, or it may start diarrhoea, the results of which often prove disastrous.

When the new imports are, as it were, hardened off, you may try them in flight cages or aviaries, but you must keep an eye on them for a day or two to see that they are getting on all right.

As aviaries are preferable to cages for foreign birds, it will not be deviating to say a word or two about them. Although it is desirable, it is not always possible to have artistic or expensive erections, nor is it necessary that they should be. The cost must be determined by the funds at the disposal of the party involved.

Small aviaries are more suitable than large for small birds, or, in other words, a large aviary is better divided into compartments than in one big stretch from end to end.

There are various and obvious reasons for this. Birds of the same size and habits can in this manner be enclosed together. The weak and defenceless can be separated from the tyrannical and strong, any that develop pugnacious habits can the more easily be caught and removed. Young ones can be put in a different compartment as soon as they can shift for themselves, and the parents can be separated from each other when the breeding season is over, which it is often necessary to do. The arrangement of the aviaries is also a question of some importance. The aspect should be south, but south-east to west will do. A portion enclosed and an open flight seems to find most favour, and on a fine summer day I would not like to enter into argument with anybody on the subject.

This arrangement seems almost ideal, but here in the West of Scotland, where we have six months of winter and six months of, often, a very cold and wet summer, I have found an aviary built on a different principle work out with better results. I think an aviary enclosed all round, so that it can be shut up in stormy weather, and the windows opened on fine days, is most suitable for our variable climate.

Heat or No Heat?

Then the question of whether artificial heat should be supplied or not is a debatable question. Some aviculturists are always telling us about the hardness of foreign birds, how, notwithstanding that they come from tropical climes, they can endure the frost and fog which we alternately experience. They tell us that fresh air is the great invigorator and disease resister, that artificial heat is not only unnecessary, but detrimental, and they ask how many degrees of frost you think foreign birds can stand.

I must confess I could not tell them, for I have never tried. I believe in making my birds as comfortable as I can, and if one has valuable birds he does not care to work too many experiments or take unnecessary risks. Further, a little heat on a cold day makes it more comfortable when performing the feeding and cleaning operations.

The food supply in an aviary should be kept on or near the floor, as by having the food vessels higher up the birds are more ready to sit on them when not feeding, and so keep the others back. It is all the better if you can have a gravitation water supply in the aviary, with each saucer doing service for two compartments. Let the water run off at least once a day, rinse the saucers well out, and if the spigot should be leaking a little so much the better.

I think I hear someone say: "I cannot have an aviary. I have no place to erect one, not even a backyard." You can keep foreign birds for all that. For six months of the year I keep many of my foreigners in three-foot cages, and they are bright and happy among themselves and a source of joy to their owner.

Having gone through the preliminaries of foreign bird-keeping, let us now proceed to have a talk about the birds themselves. When being shown through some fanciers' stock of birds I sometimes ask if they do not think of adding a pair or two of foreigners to their collection. Their answer regularly is: "Foreigners are pretty, but I am not fond of them. I prefer the British and Canaries."

Foreign birds are like some foreign fruits—you don't care for them at first, yet you acquire a liking for them. When I first procured a copy of the "Avicultural Magazine" I scanned the contents, and thought there was nothing in it to interest me. But, as I had paid something like 10d. for its few sheets, I put myself under the penalty of reading it, so as to try and get a return for my money.

It does not need a deep pocket to start keeping foreign birds. Many interesting and charming species cost little more than British, and, as most readers of CAGE BIRDS already keep some British, they will understand the rudiments of bird-keeping, and be able to manage foreigners right away without any trouble.

Canaries were originally foreign birds. All the different varieties of Canaries have sprung from a little greenish-grey bird found in the Canary Islands, and the different types and colours of Canaries are the work of artificial selection. Dealers advertise many different kinds of birds as wild Canaries, but these mostly are only nearly-related species, for the genuine wild Canary is comparatively rare in the trade, but is sometimes brought home by people who are returning from convalescence.

The Parrot family contains some of the most strikingly coloured of all birds. In some of them the colours do not seem to harmonise very well, and have the appearance of having been applied with a brush by an unskilled artist. But, no doubt, Nature has found these colours more suitable for the protection, combined with the ornamentation, of the individual.

Ideal Pets; But—

In others of the Parrot family, the colours are so delicate, and so beautifully blended, as to admit of their being classed among the loveliest of all the feathered race. In fact, many of them would be ideal cage or aviary birds but for their voice being more or less discordant to the human ear, whilst the screams and cries of some are nothing short of distracting.

Parrots are among the longest-lived and hardest birds kept in confinement, and some of them are remarkable for their intelligence, and capability of imitating sounds, even the human voice. The Grey Parrot is the one most favoured in this direction, but although some of them can say many words, and even repeat long sentences, I wish to dispel the idea that is very prevalent that they can engage in conversation. Although at times they do slip in a word that seems appropriate, it may be regarded as purely coincidence, but for the most part the muddling up of their words and sentences is amusing, if nothing else.

There is said to be more roguery in the Parrot trade than all others; anyhow, if you want to purchase a Grey Parrot, take care you are not landed into a Rosy Cockatoo, which is only worth a few shillings, as these birds are often advertised as Pink and Grey. Red and Grey, or Australian Grey Parrots. See that you get the African Grey Parrot, and so save disappointment.

We are open to receive both old and new members from this date; the book will be open every Saturday and Sunday—Messrs. J. Wharam, S. Summers, joint Secs.

Twitterings.

The National Green Marked Y.C.C. will hold its annual general meeting at the Market Hotel, Bradford, June 17, 3.30, to be finished before the meeting of the Y.C.C. at same place.

We have received from the Hon. Sec., Mr. A. J. Watcham, 192, Mare Street, Hackney, the 1916 Rule Book of the London C.B.A. Besides the rules of the society and show rules, it contains a list of officers, and members' names and addresses.

Plasmarl and Dis. C.B.S., a new society open to a radius of 20 miles, will hold its First Feather Show on July 22, at the George and Dragon Hotel, Landore. Schedules can be had on application to the sec., H. Fry, 22, Plasmarl Terr., Landore, Nr. Swansea.

The popular ramble of the Sheffield O.S., better known as the "half-way house," writes Dr. W. Craig, is fixed (weather permitting) for June 18. Meet New Inn, Wadley Bridge, at 2. Tea (ham and eggs) at Norfolk Arms, Grenoside, 1s. 6d. each. All friends invited.

Mr. W. B. Smart, sec. of the Border Fancy C.C., 13, High Street, Loanhead, writes that the balance-sheet has been sent to members, and that anyone who may have been accidentally overlooked may obtain a copy on application. From the copy sent us we note that, although the considerable amount of £24 was expended in purchase of medals, there remains in hand or at bank a nice little sum of £15 8s. 6d. The names of the medal winners are appended to the balance sheet.

The Patronage of Specialist Clubs.

The closing date of the Cinnamon-marked Y.C.C. patronage is July 1. Secretaries of societies wishing for the patronage of the club should write before that date to Mr. R. Garnett, 32, Carr Lane, Windhill, Shipley. Applications for the patronage of the Southern Norwich P.C. should be made immediately to the hon. sec., Mr. F. Cole, 51, Melbourne Grove, E. Dulwich, London, S.E.

REVIEW OF SCHEDULE.

Swansea C.E.A.—Elstern, High Street, July 5.—Open to 20 miles' radius. Judge, W. Jenkins. Young birds, 22 classes: Nor. 4, Yorks 4, Bord. 6, C. 2, A.O.V. 1, Mules 5. Old birds, 22 classes: Nor. 1, Yorks 1, Bord. 2, Brit. 11, Mules 5, For. 2. Prizes on sliding scale. Fee 6d. Entries at show room at 3. Judging at 4. Schedules from J. H. Ford, 83, Norfolk Road, Swansea.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

We also should like to express our satisfaction with CAGE BIRDS, and think it a good idea to enlarge it and increase its cost. Considering its contents we still think it cheap. You have our best wishes.

T. W. CHRISTER and SON, Chopwell.

The principal lightkeeper on the Tuscar Rock, Wexford, has sent to Mr. C. J. Patten, of the Sheffield University, an example of the Black-eared Wheatear. It is not yet been ascertained whether the bird belongs to the Western or Eastern species of Black-eared Wheatear. In any case it is a rare find, for neither, we believe, had hitherto been notified from Ireland. Witherby's "Hand-list of British Birds" only mentions one example of the Eastern Black-headed Wheatear as having been found in Great Britain, near Pett, Sussex, in 1905, but gives several instances in England of the Western species.

Flitting of the Temple Rooks.

The Rooks which recently started house-keeping in the plane-tree in Fountain Court, Temple, have disappeared after building four nests.

Our Front Page Drawings.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers from framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

Sport for All.

Writing of worms as an item of food for insectivorous birds, and giving various methods of procuring them, "Secretarius," in his monthly notes in the Avicultural Magazine for June, says, "Worm-hunting really provides excellent sport to those who cannot afford a salmon-stream or a deer-forest."

Wake Up, Chopwell.

A meeting of the Chopwell C.B.S. will be held in the Club Hall, Chopwell, on June 17, at 6, to try and revive the Fancy in Chopwell, writes Mr. W. H. Christer, Sec. According to rule our general meeting should have been held in January, but no members turned up. So will all members and intending members please try and attend. The radius is four miles and a hearty invitation is given to all.

Southampton Secretary Called Up.

Mr. W. L. Page, the hon. sec. of Southampton C.B.S., whose interest in the society has been so sincere that he has never missed a meeting since its formation, has been called to the colours. The assistant secretary, Mr. G. H. Slade, 34, Milton Road, Fitzhugh, Southampton, has taken over Mr. Page's duties during his absence, and all communications relating to the society should be addressed accordingly.

From the Firing Line.

I have just received from my wife a copy of CAGE BIRDS dated May 20, containing on the front page an illustration of one of my Yorkshire Canaries, writes Gunner W. J. Ratcliffe, B.E.F., France. It does your artist great credit to produce such a life-like model of my bird, and it has greatly cheered me to see same in print, and to see and hear that the fancy is being kept going in our absence. I wish the fancy in general, to which I hope to return, every success.

Bird Shows to Pay

Entertainments Tax.

In CAGE BIRDS of May 13 there appeared letters from the hon. sec. of the Sheffield C.B.S., and the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.A., asking whether admission to Cage Bird exhibitions would be subject to taxation under the new Finance Act. To these we replied as follows:—"Seeing that it has been decided that a tax will be levied on admission tickets to Zoological Gardens, it is to be concluded that bird shows will also come under the heading of amusements, and that tickets for admission will be subject to the tax."

As will be seen from a letter published in our correspondence columns this week, the reply of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the enquiry of the hon. sec. of the Ardwick and Manchester C.B.A., is to the same effect. The Meadow Pipit.

That little brown bird which looks something like a Skylark, and sings a shrill and not unusual song as it rises in the air over the pasture or moorland, is the Meadow-Pipit, a bird whose resemblances to the Skylark have also earned for it the name of Titlark. It does not soar to any great height (not higher than 50ft. at the outside), and its little song is not long sustained; but it has a cheerful presence, and by reason of its abundance adds much to the interest of the wild open places it specially favours, where it may be seen running over the ground in search of insects, like a Wagtail. Its nest, built of dry grass in heather clumps or any tangle of herbage on the ground, is frequently made the nursery of a Cuckoo's babies. Instances of the Meadow-Pipit's foster-parentage of Cuckoos have been observed on the loneliest of treeless moorlands, which is rather surprising considering that such places are the most unlikely Cuckoo haunts. The Meadow-Pipit remains with us all the year round.

CLUB AND SOCIETY NOTICES.

ONE NOTICE of any forthcoming Society meeting inserted free. It must reach us not later than Tuesday morning's post. Specially printed Club Notice Postcards may be had free on application to our Manager. Secretaries should always use them.

Ardwick and Manchester C.B.A.—June 20, St. Thomas School, 8. F.F. show; entries received and final arrangements made.—A. E. Thorpe.

Ashington and Hirst C.B.S.—June 17, Miners Hall, Ashington, 7. Final arrangements for N.F. show.—C. F. Tapson.

Bradford East O.S.—June 13, Park Chapel Schools, 8 to 9. Taking entries for F.F. show, June 17; judge, M. Broadley (Windhill).—J. Spencer.

Birkenhead Canary F.A.—June 20, Abell's Cafe Rooms, 8. N.F. show; dates June 24 and July 29, Trades Council Room, Argyle Street and Market Street.—A. E. Lloyd.

Burnley C.B.S.—June 17, Club Rooms, 75, Lindsay Street. Annual F.F. show, good classification; judge, Mr. A. Hirst, Averington. Entries close June 10, 10 p.m. A hearty invitation given to all fanciers and friends. Birds staged 3. Nests in the Ivy.

According to a keeper on a North Cheshire estate, a pair each of Wagtails, Thrushes, Blackbirds, and Wrens, have built their nests within a space of a couple of yards on an ivy-covered wall, and a Water-hen has her nest on the top of the wall.

Golden Orioles in France.

A correspondent to the London "Times," writing of the birds in a French wood just behind the fighting line, says: "One suspects that the Crows rather bully all the other birds. They certainly make life difficult for the Kestrels; and, what with Crows and Jays and Magpies all together, and all such expert egg-thieves, one wonders how the Doves, and especially the Orioles, ever bring off a brood. The Orioles are, of course—not even excepting the mysterious large Hawk—the chief joy of the wood. So secretive are they that no one yet has been able to find their nest, and opinion is strong that, either because the Crows will not let them build or for some other reason, though we are on the edge of June, they have not yet begun to nest. But they are always in the same small section of the wood. One has only to go there and stand still for a while, and sooner or later, when the clamour of the Crows has for a moment subsided, the beautiful liquid flute-like call comes ringing from somewhere out of the green world above. Then a brilliant meteor of yellow and black flashes through a gap between the tree-tops, and the liquid whistle which first sounded on the left hand is now on the right. Then it is behind one, then in front. It is as if the bird was trying from which point of the compass it sounded best; and from somewhere inside the circle of sound one hears the harsh wheezing answer of the hen bird. The note of the hen Oriole is as ill-matched to her lord's as is the croak of the hen Nightingale.

In connection with the foregoing paragraph referring to Golden Orioles in France the following remarks on the species which appeared in the "Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News" of June 10 will be of interest:—

"The case of the Golden Oriole, which comes to these islands in spring, nowadays in very sparing numbers, is rather a melancholy one. It is undoubtedly that this beautiful bird was once a good deal more numerous in England than it is at present. But its lovely golden-yellow plumage renders it so conspicuous an object that it is now, with the growth of population, so harassed and disturbed that, even if it escapes with its life, it has comparatively small chance of nesting and rearing its young. Collectors, either of eggs or birds, are always on the look-out, and the Oriole has but a poor time of it with us in these days. I see that a specimen was noted near Salcombe, in Devon, towards the end of last month. What became of it I know not, but there can be little doubt that the bird suffered far too much attention for its own well-being and comfort. Golden Orioles are common on the Continent during the summer months. They travel thither from Asia and Africa, and breed in Europe as far north as the south of Finland, and in Russia up to the latitude of Petrograd. They are annual migrants to Cornwall and the Scilly Islands, where as many as forty have been noted during the month of April; and they are sparing and less regular visitors to our southern and eastern counties. A few years ago a friend of mine had the singular pleasure of watching one of these delightful birds for a whole April day in his garden on the edge of a well-known Sussex coast town. This Oriole had obviously just landed, and was resting after its long overseas trek. These birds are great travellers, and many of them pass south in autumn right through Africa and winter in Natal, Damara-land, and elsewhere. Here and there, in the south of England, in situations where they can obtain complete rest—a difficult achievement—Orioles manage to make their nests and occasionally even to rear their young, but these cases are exceptionally rare. If people would give them a chance we should see them much oftener than we do."

The June issue of the Avicultural Magazine, the journal of the Avicultural Society, will be specially welcome to the members who are interested in British bird-keeping, for most of it treats of this branch of aviculture. Dr. Lovell-Keays contributes "Some Experiences with British Softbills," particularly pointing out the danger of turning freshly bought birds into an outdoor aviary before one is sure that they have been thoroughly "meated off." Mr. G. E. Rattigan sends "Stray Notes on the Birds of the Country-side," Mr. J. H. Gurney-writes of the 1913-14 irruption of Waxwings, and "Secretarius" in the new feature, "Monthly Notes," goes fully into the question of live food for birds in captivity. The foreign articles are "The Breeding of Buffon's Turacos in France," by M. Jean Delacourt, and an account supplied by Mr. F. Finn from notes by Mr. E. Ashby on the Lyre Bird. In these notes the bird is styled "The Australian Mocking Bird," and it is claimed for it that it is the "most wonderful bird mimic in the world."

THE SCIENTIFIC BREEDING OF CANARIES.

A Lecture given to the members of the Border Fancy Canary Club by Mr. T. C. Crawhall. It shows how to introduce the system of line-breeding with the object of improving the exhibition points of any kind of Canary.

FOR the views which I am going to put before you to-night I claim no originality. The methods I hope to describe are not my own, and I have not up to the present put them to the test, but so soon as the opportunity occurs I intend to do so; in fact, I may say I have really made a beginning this season.

You will readily understand when I have explained my propositions that such methods are not to be entered upon haphazard, or without the necessary and requisite stock to work upon. You will also see that one season's breeding will prove nothing; it is only after a few years that we shall be able to obtain results that should justify our labours.

You must bear with me if I give you a few impressions of my own particular variety, the Yorkshire, but what is applicable to one variety is in a greater or lesser degree suitable to all. What has puzzled me very greatly, and it is a thing that I have thought a great deal about, is why the men who are able by reason of their business or their longer purse to get hold of a great number of the best birds do not breed more winners for themselves than they do.

Exhibitors; not Breeders.

A few years ago, when I had more time, and was better able to get away from my business than at present, as I got into conversation with different fanciers I heard such remarks as these about prominent exhibitors: "Oh, he buys all his winners; he bought such a bird from so and so, another he bought from somebody else," and I found, perhaps, that the greater part of the birds which were making a name for an exhibitor were not bred by that exhibitor.

A few years ago I was in conversation with a very prominent exhibitor, and we were discussing birds shown by another who had been very successful that season. He startled me very much by saying that the gentleman under discussion had never bred a winner. Now all this, coming not from one source but from many, and being borne out by my own personal knowledge, led me to wonder why such things should be.

There is an old saying often quoted, and seldom believed in its fullest sense, "Like begets like." How is it, then, that men who undoubtedly have some of the best exhibition birds in their possession are not able to perpetuate their excellence in their offspring? They have to buy other good birds year by year if they wish to continue in the foremost rank.

In stating that some of the leading exhibitors buy birds for exhibition purposes, do not let me lead you to understand me as being opposed to such a thing. A man who buys a bird is, in my opinion, quite entitled to show it from the moment the bargain is struck, but my purpose is to point out that even with the best of stuff to breed from such a man is not able to breed birds equal to those in his possession.

Many times I have asked why so and so, with such birds as he possessed, could not breed his own winners. To this question I never got a satisfactory answer; the usual reply was "Show birds won't breed show birds." Now, "Like begets like" so far as a breed is concerned; that is to say, two Norwich will not produce a Yorkshire, and two Borders will not produce a Crest or a Scotch Fancy. How far can we apply it to the particular breed in which we are trying to excel?

When Like does not Beget Like.

There is an element of truth in the saying. We can see it in the human family, for we often pass the remark that two sisters are as like as two peas or that a particular child is the image of its father. You can notice it with your birds also; that young bird is in type just like its mother, that one like its father. More often, however, the greater number of the produce of a pair of birds do not resemble either parent. Why is it? If we could solve that question our success as breeders would be assured.

I have come to the conclusion that the reason is our haphazard matings. A man may breed a good bird or buy one, and if this bird is in the hands of a fancier who is anxious to succeed in his variety he does his best to get a suitable mate for that bird. The fancier eventually gets what he thinks a good match, pairs the birds up, and awaits results.

Sometimes he is rewarded with success, sometimes, and I am sorry to say very often, he is disappointed. He consoles himself that the mating has not hit, and either disposes of one or both, tries fresh matings with other birds of his own stock, or makes fresh purchases, which may or may not have better results.

I will tell you what I think is the cause of his disappointment. The two birds are both good specimens, and may have been bred from good specimens, but when the two are blended the progeny throw back to some ancestor on one side or the other, or possibly a combination of remote ancestors.

I am becoming more convinced that breeders of Canaries should take not only a leaf but whole books from breeders of other live stock. We select our breeding stock according to the outside value, without sufficient regard to the pedigree, and if the result is good all is well. If not, we try another mating, and so it goes on year after year.

It is not so with successful breeders in cattle, dogs, or poultry. The principal breeders of these animals and birds consider not only the sire and dam, but the grandsire, the great grandsire, and so on back for several generations. I have heard it said of a certain dog that, though a great winner himself, he never sired a winner. His progeny had the breeding in them, however, and in their turn produced many winners.

The Importance of "Strain."

Not only do breeders of stock other than Canaries consider the pedigree, but they are most careful to preserve it pure, to breed in to the same strain, and keep that strain as pure as possible.

This brings me to the point of inbreeding, and on this question there is now almost as great a diversity of opinion as ever. Certainly in the Canary world we seldom see it advised as a means to successful breeding. If done in other branches of breeding, and done successfully, why should it not be equally successful in Canary breeding to fix the exhibition qualities in our birds?

Let us consider what inbreeding is. It is the mating together of relations for some particular and specific object. The relationship may be near, or it may be remote; it may be that of father to daughter, or brother and sister, or it may only be 32nd cousins, but so long as there is a relationship it is inbreeding.

We must consider if any harm can come from inbreeding, and I confidently affirm that if you start with healthy stock, and use discretion in your methods, no ill effects will be noticed in your stock. But if there is any disease or weakness in your birds it would be better to leave inbreeding alone, for if good points can be bred in so can disease and weakness.

I want to give you an extract from a book I have been reading ("Scientific Breeding and Feeding," by the late Alex. Comyns, B.A., LL.B.). It was first published in 1889, and in it he gives a portion of a letter written 15 years earlier by a breeder of Turbit pigeons, so that is going back a long way.

This is what he says: "I have at this moment upwards of 50 pigeons that are all bred from two pairs of birds that I bought ten years ago. They have never been crossed; they are perfectly healthy; are, many of them, larger and better in their fancy points than the birds they are bred from, one of which is still alive. They have been carefully selected for size and fancy points, entirely regardless of relationship." Now this experience of 40 years ago could easily be repeated to day, I believe, with advantage to our Canaries.

Having explained thus far, I will go back to the supposition that we have a particular pair of birds which have hit off well together and have bred some excellent youngsters. For the sake of clearness we will suppose the pair to have been yellow cock and buff hen, from which we have bred a good young yellow cock and a good young buff hen.

In the second season you should pair the father to his daughter and the mother to her son, for by so doing you are fixing the likeness to the father in his offspring and the likeness of the mother in hers.

In the third season you should select the best buff hen bred from father and daughter and pair back again to her father, and the best yellow cock bred from mating of the son and mother should be paired back to the original hen. You might be able to repeat the process another year, when on the one side you will have strengthened the original

I could go on and explain how to select a cock and a hen on each side, the blood lines as distinct as possible, each fancier must be guided by his own observations and the results obtained. It is sufficient to say that the chart indicates many and varied ways that are open for us to work upon. I do not say that you can hold hard and fast to the chart, but it is one that is very largely used by breeders of poultry, both for exhibition and laying purposes, and, I believe, with very successful results.

It is often urged against inbreeding that it tends to diminish size in the stock. As breeders of the Border Fancy this should not greatly trouble you, but if care is taken in selection in those breeds where size counts I do not see that inbreeding should diminish the size of the offspring, for if other points can be fixed by inbreeding why should not size also be fixed? If a man with two pairs of pigeons, paired up irrespective of relationship, can increase the size of his birds and improve their fancy points, I do not see why it cannot be done with Canaries.

Wisdom in a Nuishell.

I will now leave you to think out the question for yourselves, briefly summarising the whole as follows:—

1. Selection on outward looks alone is not always satisfactory; too many such matings fail altogether to produce the desired result, viz., the production of exhibition stock.
2. Inbreeding from healthy specimens, and carefully regulated, is not detrimental to the health and stamina of the stock.
3. It is used with success by breeders and exhibitors of other live stock.
4. On the lines I have indicated it is likely to be useful to Canary breeders, and is a surer way to perpetuate a strain of winning Canaries than our present method of mating.
5. With care in selection, inbreeding should not diminish the size of our stock, but may even be used to increase it, as size, like other points, can be bred in.

In a discussion which ensued one of the members, Mr. Johnson, said it was practically impossible to succeed on the show bench without inbreeding. His own success he put down entirely to the adoption of the principle. There was not a bird in his room that was not related to the rest, and stamina had not been lost; some of his birds were seven years old.

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—

"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."

THE STOCK BOOK

Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

THE NEST OF THE MAGPIE.

SEVERAL years ago I watched the nest of a pair of Magpies from start to finish. It was in a high hawthorn hedge. I was only able to visit the nest at weekly intervals. At the end of the second week the mass of twigs had been roughly shaped into the form of a nest. In the third week a plastering of mud was applied about half-way round. The fourth week saw this plastering process completed, while the outer sides of the nest had been much heightened, and the top twigs guided over in a rounded form. At the end of the fifth week the inside had been lined carefully with fibrous roots, and the depth, which was originally over six inches, somewhat lessened. By this time the rising outside walls of twigs had converged, forming a complete dome over the nest, and by the end of the sixth week this had been much strengthened, having only one opening large enough for the bird to enter by, on the south-eastern side, which is the one facing the highway, from which direction the birds probably knew that danger was most to be expected. At the end of the seventh week the nest had been given another inside lining, consisting this time of fine fibre, with a few pieces of string interwoven here and there. The main body of the nest was so skilfully and securely built that hardly one twig could be extracted without disturbing many others. These twigs consisted almost entirely of the burnt branches of whin and heather which had been bleached clean by the weather.—"D," in the "Glasgow Evening Citizen."

father's blood and have almost eliminated the original mother's, whilst on the other side you will have strengthened the original mother's blood and have reduced that of the original cock to a very small quantity. By reference to the chart you will see what I mean. (Mr. Crawhall here exhibited a chart similar to the one which is published this week in our correspondence columns.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.)

The first produce contains equal parts of the blood of the two original birds. So it follows that when you have mated the best buff hen from this group to her father their young contains three-quarters of the yellow cock's blood and one-quarter of the old buff hen's blood. Again selecting the best buff hen from among these young and mating back to the original cock, you get stock containing seven-eighths of the old yellow cock's blood and only one-eighth of the old buff hen's.

A Double-Barrelled Proceeding.

Just the same on the other side; you get in the second year of breeding birds containing three-quarters of the original hen's blood and one-quarter of the original cock's, and the year following you get them with seven-eighths of the hen's and one-eighth of the cock's.

Thus you have two lines of breeding, each very distantly related to the other, for you see on the one hand you have only one-eighth of the hen's blood, while on the other you have only one-eighth of the cock's.

Now you can make a third line containing the same blood as in the first cross, for by pairing together a bird from one of the two groups you have manufactured, and one from the opposite group, you get offspring with a half of each of the original parents' blood, without the disadvantage of using brother and sister matings.

How to Capture the Canary Trade.

THE SUBJECT OF THE HOUR.

THE Economic Conference of the Allies is meeting in Paris this week. One of the objects of the meeting is to consider what action shall be taken against Germany, after the war, in the matter of trade and commerce. What course will be taken, from a national point of view, is in the lap of the future. It is, fortunately, not necessary, and hardly desirable, to wait for a lead from this or that Government. While statesmen are discussing abstract theories business men may be able to put in a lot of real spade work; and that remark applies particularly to the organisation of the Canary trade.

At the end of the war the Government of the day, and the Governments of the Allied Countries, may, and probably will, impose restrictions on German imported goods, including birds, and these restrictions may react to the ultimate benefit of the British Canary breeders by giving them an advantage in the markets, or, at least, in many of the markets of the world, over the German breeders.

That, however, is by the way. What we have to consider at the moment is the preparation for the commercial fight when it comes. Obviously it will be impossible to oust the German Canary trade from this country, and capture it in other countries, if we are not in a position to supply the market when the opportunity arrives.

The opinions of men who are already engaged in the Canary trade in these islands support the view that up to the present the birds produced here do not much exceed in numbers the demands of the home market. If, for instance, the American buyers prefer English-bred birds, and cannot have them because of the shortage, they will take the German birds.

To prevent this we must make the supply meet the demand, and the way to efficiency in that respect is through the organisation of the whole of Britain. Fanciers and others should be encouraged to breed larger quantities, and they should do all they possibly can to encourage others to take up the hobby for similar reasons.

In course of time the Central Committee may be able to give advice as to the type of bird which it is most desirable and profitable to produce in quantity, but for the present breeders will do well to make the most of the material which they have in hand, and be careful not to part with sound healthy stock, which may be invaluable to them next year for breeding on a larger scale.

The Central Committee is now considering the best method by which it may successfully attack the German Canary trade, and it dealt, amongst other things, with this question of retaining stock for next year's operations at a meeting held at the offices of CAGE BIRDS on Monday, June 12, when there were present Messrs. H. J. Fulljames (Cage Birds League), H. W. Gutierrez (British Roller C.C.), J. Jeffrey (Metropolitan C.B.A.), H. J. Kybert (East Ham C.B.S.), E. C. Last (Crystal Palace and Penge C.B.S.), G. H. Maclellan (Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S.), J. Robson (London C.B.A.), J. W. Ramsden (Stratham Hill), D. Reeks (Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.), T. R. Trower (Caledonian Road), and the Organising Secretary. Mr. H. J. Fulljames was unanimously voted to the chair.

Mr. Trower "set the ball rolling" in a very lively discussion on the policy of the Committee. He wanted to know where they stood. As a Committee they were, he contended, brought together to promote the production of Canaries, but they now appeared to be drifting into the trading of Canaries.

The Chairman replied to this to the effect that both subjects were bound up together. The breeding season being in full swing it was desirable that they should be able to show that there will be a market for the birds if breeders produce them.

Mr. Trower followed this up by suggesting that the opinions of the readers of CAGE BIRDS were desirable on the methods to be adopted, and to this end he urged that the report of the Sub-Committee should be published.

The meeting generally agreed on this point, and it was decided to ask CAGE BIRDS to reproduce the Sub-Committee's report "so far as it concerns the cost of rearing and the possible production under the two systems (cage breeding and aviary breeding), with the idea of getting the opinions of other breeders."

One of the most interesting discussions swung round a letter received from the well-known breeder and dealer, Mr. Joe Thomas, of Ambler Thom, Halifax. On the suggestion of Mr. Robson, Mr. Carl had invited Mr. Thomas to give the Committee the advantage of his experience. This Mr. Thomas very kindly did, to the great benefit of the Committee.

The subject matter was of a confidential nature, and on that account, it may not be published, but it may be stated that it fully supported the view that there is awaiting a big market, especially in America and the Colonies, for British-bred birds that can sing and that can be sold at a reasonable price.

It was in the course of this discussion that Mr. Ramsden raised the important question of preserving stock birds for next year's operations. "We should," he said, emphatically, "tell the people to keep their birds this year, and place them at the disposal (for purchase) of willing breeders, so that we may produce all we can next year."

Mr. Reeks asked if British breeders could compete with German breeders in the matter of price?

Mr. Ramsden: We never can compete with the German for price.

Mr. Kybert: We can put up something better.

Mr. Ramsden: Produce a fairly good bird that can sing well, and you will get your price.

The Chairman: The production of birds on a commercial scale has never been a question in England at all. We have produced birds to show on the bench. We want to show that there is a marketable produce to be brought into existence by our own British people to supply a world-wide demand for singing birds.

A very cordial vote of thanks was, on the motion of Mr. Ramsden, accorded by the Committee to Mr. Joe Thomas for the kindness and assistance rendered to them in his letter. This concluded a very profitable evening.

The Wounded Soldiers' Fund.

I am sorry to have to inform the many wounded soldiers interested in the above idea for providing them with Canaries, cages, etc., that I am reluctantly obliged to discontinue for the present any work in connection with it. I will see that all offers received to date are carefully dealt with at the earliest moment, but I cannot, owing to labour conditions and other causes, acknowledge or reply to any offers of birds or requests for help except those that have been already received. A detailed statement of expenditure of the £16 7s. 6d. received to date will be made in an early issue. Of this amount £10 has been provided by myself.

F. CARL.

SIR,—If only this wretched war would cease I am sure Canary breeding would go forward with leaps and bounds. Your scheme is a good one, and should be the means of providing some pleasant hours for those who take up our hobby.

FRANK COLE, Hon. Sec.,
Southern Norwich Plainhead Club.

Some Suggestions from Lochgelly.

SIR,—At a meeting of the Lochgelly C.B.S. held May 23, the members held a long discussion on your scheme for the capturing of the Canary trade at home and with America, also the helping of disabled soldiers and sailors to start the keeping of cage birds by providing birds or appliances as seems necessary. While approving of your scheme, and the object in view, and promising to assist as far as possible to do their bit to try and assist our maimed soldiers and sailors to start in the Fancy, members were unanimously of the opinion that so far as the scheme affects Scotland it would be far better to have a separate committee for Scotland. In the meantime, all the various societies ought to form themselves into county or district committees or associations, each society to send a representative to such committees, etc. Then such county or district committees or associations to send a delegate to a central council, to meet at Glasgow or Edinburgh. In their opinion the present committee, as composed meantime, is too far removed from Scotland to receive the wholehearted support of the Scottish cage bird Fancy, and if a serious attempt is to be made to attain success, it will want all the breeders in the country to organise themselves, and it must be done now. By adopting some such scheme as has been described, you would tap the great majority of the breeders in each district, while at the same time they would have a voice in the directing of such organised efforts through their societies, and, through such organisation, the collecting, despatch, and distribution of birds would be greatly accelerated. The main reason I have been asked to write you is to get the voice of the Fancy in Scotland. Any suggestions regarding the organising of the Fancy to make a successful attempt to capture a share of the Canary trade for this country would be welcomed.

By Sergeant R. G. SPENCER, R.F.A.
(Edinburgh).

I HAVE read with great interest the scheme which has been taken up to capture the Canary trade from Germany, and I consider this to be a very important question which, if taken up extensively, will be the means of a good livelihood for many hundreds of men which have been disabled in the present war, and others who will be thrown out of employment when the market is flooded with men, i.e., when the war is at a close.

May I point out that although Canary breeding has been profitable to fanciers in the past, it has its pitfalls, and the novice who will start Canary breeding after the war should, I consider, be impressed that unless he thoroughly takes an interest in the undertaking he is likely to be very much at a loss at the end of a season.

A considerable amount of knowledge can be gained from the books which are offered for sale by CAGE BIRDS, and the prices for same are very reasonable, but without the actual experience, even with the books, one cannot hope to run a bird room with the cash balance on the right side.

When starting an aviary or even a whole room on the German system I am of the opinion that it would be to a great advantage to only turn into the room hen Canaries which have proved themselves to be good mothers in every respect; the cock, too, would have to be considered.

My experience in breeding on these lines (before being called to the colours from the reserve) told me that when the hens are turned into the room with the cocks, say about April, and have become properly settled down by the end of May it is disastrous to disturb them by removing bad hens, viz., failing to feed young, etc., and eating their feathers.

When once the hens and cocks are turned into the room I consider it advisable to leave them entirely alone, except, of course, to feed and clean them out, which is best done always by the same person, as they soon learn the voice of the one who feeds them, and they are less disturbed—even the hens will not budge off their nests while you may be looking after their welfare.

When the first round of youngsters have left the nests you will find that in the second round these first youngsters will help to feed the second brood, which relieves the mother considerably.

In August, if the first brood were hatched early they will want to pair up, of course this is left to the discretion of the breeder if he wishes them to pair or not.

In the middle of September the whole room should be cleared of sitting hens, and the stock sorted, the hens being placed in suitable cages to keep them snug and warm during the winter months.

I should like to impress upon the novice who is starting this hobby the vital importance of looking after the hens, which have had a very hard task during the season's breeding. Every care and attention should be bestowed on them, and success will come. After all it is far easier to procure a good cock than a good hen, and one that will bring up her broods is honestly worth her weight in gold.

The cocks also require attention, and should be caged if possible separately, the young being disposed of after sexing them.

I wish I had time now to go further into the feeding and rigging up of the bird room, but I will deal with this later. All I can say is that I wish every novice success, and I sincerely hope that they will take a thorough interest in the welfare of their birds, for this is the only way to real success.

A Soldier's "Pal."

SIR,—I was unable to buy CAGE BIRDS while in hospital, but an old fancier, Mr. Flint, came to hospital this morning bringing CAGE BIRDS with him, and I was pleased and surprised to see what I may call my "pal," the variegated Norwich, which won so many prizes for me, and helped me to spend many a pleasant hour away. Good Luck to CAGE BIRDS.

New Society for Ryhill.

SIR,—Please announce in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, that we have formed a Society at Ryhill. We give all fanciers within a ten-mile radius an invitation to join us. We are having a First Feather show on July 8.

Khaki Canaries.

SIR,—With regard to Miss D. Hamilton's article, "Khaki Canaries," in this week's CAGE BIRDS, I had a clutch of three eggs, all of which were fertile, and two of the young birds were khaki variegated, with deep red eyes; unfortunately one has since died. The parent birds were a cock Yorkshire buff var. and hen Roller pale yellow. This is my first attempt at Canary breeding, after having bought a copy of Mr. St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and I wish your paper every success.

READER.

A Roller Fancier Asks for More About his Favourite Variety.

SIR,—In the current issue of CAGE BIRDS I notice that the members of the Leeds Roller C.C. are to have a lecture on the Roller Canary, at which a paper will be read giving translations from the works of several Continental experts of this species. Now I do trust that you will endeavour to reprint this lecture in CAGE BIRDS. I am certain that many of your readers, like myself, are looking forward to it. Since the increase in price, and the corresponding increase in readable matter of your paper, the Roller has had a great deal of space, for which many of us are, indeed, most grateful. So keep the price up, and the quantity. It is a distinct improvement on the 1d. edition.

I know other "types" are of more interest to many of your readers, but considering that we are now out to capture the German trade in Rollers I think a good deal more could be said for this variety. Articles on the training of the Roller would be especially interesting to many of us. The recent articles by Miss Jessie Lawson, of Preston, were interesting up to a point, but they were very vague (e.g., the duration of song to last "whilst one counted 80 to 100"). Well, that might mean any time. Again, the extraordinary reason given this week by another contributor why he gave up the breeding of Rollers, because he could not pronounce or understand the various tours. So let us have this Leeds R.C.C. lecture, and therein we shall get something, I guess, worth thinking over.

R. DUGGILL.

[We have written to Mr. Best, the sec. of the Leeds Roller C.C., asking him to get, if possible, Mr. Montagu's consent to the publication of the paper, and to supply us with the date of the lecture, which was omitted from the report as received.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.]

Nine Canary Eggs in a Clutch.

SIR,—Can you tell me whether nine eggs for a Border Canary is a record clutch? I am anxious to find out, as every bird fancier that I have told tells me it is, and I should like to know officially. I am sure that I made no mistake about the one hen laying the nine eggs, for I keep each pair in separate cages, as I have no aviary. Mrs. Thynne, who is well-known to you and all fanciers, will verify my statement, as she kindly took the trouble to come and test them for me, and there were seven fertile and two unfertile. I should be glad if you would help me to find out definitely through your columns whether this has created a record or not.

Successful Breeding with a Hen Mule.

SIR,—I am sorry that I did not state in my letter published in CAGE BIRDS of June 3 what kind of bird I bred with, but would like to inform Mr. W. E. Blank through your columns that it was a Canary that I paired my hen Canary-Linnet Mule with. I should advise him to pair his Redpoll with a Canary. I might mention that last year I paired a Siskin with a Canary, and brought off a Siskin-Canary Mule, which now sings like a Canary.

W. CLIFTON.

SIR,—I am very pleased to say that since writing you last, my hen Mule Canary is sitting fast on four eggs. If Mr. Clifton can give me a few hints on how to treat her, I should be greatly obliged to him, and will let him know through the medium of your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS how I succeed.

A Red Cross Show for Barrow.

SIR.—At a special meeting of the Barrow C.B.A., held June 3, it was decided to run a great Red Cross open show on Nov. 3 and 4, the special object being to provide a bed for some wounded Tommy who has done his bit to secure our safety and liberty. Our classification will be of the very best, and there is at present a goodly number of guaranteed classes, with still more to follow. We hope that the Fancy will rally round us in this noble effort, and re-establish the once-famous Barrow open show. Fanciers can rest assured their exhibit will have the best attention, as our members number up to fifty, and there are among them some very old exhibitors with a wide experience. Our judges are Messrs. Battye and Houghton, and, with two popular judges, we should have a popular show. Our nest feather show, on July 8, is local, not open as was announced in CAGE BIRDS. The judges are Messrs. House and Wilson.

Bird Shows and the Entertainment Tax.

SIR.—As we could not satisfy ourselves re the explanation given in CAGE BIRDS in answer to my letter as to our liability re tax on admission to shows, etc., it was decided at our meeting that I write to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for further information. This I did, and got the enclosed reply, which was read at our meeting, and for the benefit and information of the fancy generally it was proposed that I send on an exact copy of the letter to be published in CAGE BIRDS. It is as follows:—

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of May 23 I am desired by the Chancellor of the Exchequer to say that under the terms of Section 1 (6) of the Finance (New Duties) Act the expression "entertainment" includes "any exhibition to which persons are admitted for payment." Entertainments duty is therefore payable on the shows of the Cage Bird Association.

Does the Hen Cuckoo "Cuckoo"?

SIR.—If you think the Cuckoo has not already monopolised too much of your space, as it has of so many other papers, perhaps you might find room for the following extract from an article on Birds in the New Forest in "Country Life."

"There is one disputed point that I have settled to my own satisfaction this year; that is, that the hen Cuckoo 'cuckoos.' The other day, when walking in the Forest, I heard a Cuckoo calling from a beech tree. He was answered by another from an isolated tree standing in the open. In a minute or two he flew straight over, and the pair flitted in the air and returned together obviously mated for the time being. Since then one of the higher Forest officers, a man who is a keen observer and spends his life in the Forest, told me he had no doubt that both sexes use the familiar call note. The Cuckoos this year seem to have come early, to have been unusually numerous, and to be in a great hurry. They begin calling before it is light, and one energetic bird sounds as if he was hoarse, as no doubt he is. The notes changed at the end of April to the excited 'cuck cuck oo,' which is here much sooner than usual, and I am watching with interest to note if they make an unusually early departure this year. Their favourite nests in these parts are the wagtails, and pied wagtails are numerous; but if every Cuckoo's egg finds its billet there will be few wagtails hatched this year."

NATURALIST READER.

The Value of Pedigree Breeding.

SIR.—Mr. Norman's interesting letter in this week's CAGE BIRDS makes me feel like Oliver Twist. Dare I ask for more of your esteemed correspondent's observations upon the subjects under present notice? Something off the beaten track is more than welcome in your journal, and notes from such a keen observer as Mr. Norman cannot help being both interesting and instructive to those of us who are groping more or less in the dark for guidance.

The letter I wrote with the chart published in CAGE BIRDS of June 3 was very hurriedly done, and possibly I have not made my meaning very clear. With the exception of the first three buff cocks from which the male was descended, all the sires on the chart are yellows. Now, from the exhibitor's point of view of breeding I do not know if this is correct. I have heard it stated that to breed correctly the colours of the sires should be reversed each new mating. My own observations do not favour either view definitely; it will, however, be noticed that on the hen's side I have bred yellow cock to buff hen for at least four generations. Undoubtedly on the hen's side buff is the dominant colour, for though I can trace the breeding of this strain back for more years than the chart shows, and many winning birds have come from the strain, they have all been buff until last year, when I got a good yellow from this hen's mother. On the cock's side yellow is the dominant colour, though there are to my knowledge more buff sires.

I am afraid that in the past my aim has been first to breed the best birds I could, irrespective of the colours, but I have noticed that from one strain I have had a larger proportion of buff, while from another yellows have predominated. I am blending the two strains in this particular pair, and from the result up to the present I am inclined to think that buff is uppermost, but I have improved size, which, with a few exceptions, has been lacking on the hen's side.

An exhibitor is handicapped very much in noting the matings and their results, as his first aim is to produce as large a percentage of exhibition specimens as possible; the effect of colour must take a secondary place, and yet by careful noting of matings it is possible that we may accidentally stumble some day upon some as yet hidden rule which will help even in the production of exhibition specimens.

So that if Mr. Norman can oblige us by the results of his observations, either tabulated or in general terms, he will be sure of at least one interested reader. Your correspondent "Beejay," when he has read my incomplete notes, which you so kindly consider worth a place in CAGE BIRDS, will probably give us the results of his experience in line breeding in other kinds of live stock, that we may try to apply them to our own favourites.

T. C. CRAWHALL.

SIR.—It must have been obvious to all who have given any thought to the subject that the breeding of Canaries on rational lines is in the hands of a very few, and that the majority of Canary breeders have been going on from year to year pairing up a bird with certain desirable points to another with certain other desirable points, in the hope that in the offspring will be found a bird or two with all the desirable points combined. The only rules that have been followed seem to be, "Pair buff to yellow, or vice versa," and "Do not mate up two birds with the same fault."

Whether the points of a particular bird, be they faults or good qualities, are just an accident, or whether they be the result of inheritance through a generation or two, does not seem to have been considered at all by the majority of breeders. Yet herein lies all the value, or worthlessness, as it may be, of any particular cock or hen as a breeder. Faults are hereditary as well as are virtues; and if either the one or the other be the result of pedigree breeding, that one or the other will be passed on to successive generations. If not, not.

Fortunately, Canary breeders have, if they choose to profit by it, the benefit of the labours of poultry breeders, who have made a serious study of line-breeding, its limitations, and its results. These breeders have proved that with rigorous selection and strict regard to pedigree, almost anything may be achieved. They have proved also that some characteristics are dominant over other characteristics, and that such characteristics, when desirable ones, may be improved by attention to pedigree breeding, and judicious selection, and when undesirable may be eliminated in the same manner.

They have proved also that a 250-egg hen will not necessarily produce 250-egg offspring. If she has been line bred, and is mated to a line-bred cock, she will probably do so, and better, but if her parents and their parents before them have not been scientifically bred, her own young will be more likely to produce 150 eggs, or less, than 250 or more.

Let us see how this knowledge may be applied to Canary breeding. Elaborate charts extending through generations are followed by poultry breeders, but for our present purposes it is only necessary to use one, such as that produced below.

In this chart M represents the male bird and F the female. By the mating of these we get brood No. 1. If the original birds have come from a strain in which the points have become more or less fixed, the young of Group 1 will combine the points of both parents, with the "dominant" points more apparent than the "recessive" ones.

Some of these dominant points will be desirable ones, and some possibly undesirable.

If we mate a hen bird out of Group 1 back to the original cock (M), these points, either good or bad, will become accentuated in their offspring (Group 2), and the same happens if we mate a cock of Group 1 to the original hen (F), in which case we should produce Group 3. Further, these young birds will be more capable of transmitting their own properties, good or bad, than either of their parents, because these have become more fixed in their nature.

Now, if we require to perpetuate the points of the original male bird we simply have to select a hen from Group 2 and mate her back to her grandfather. Similarly, on the other side, a cock from Group 3 mated to the old hen (F) will produce young favouring the old hen in appearance.

Young birds of Group 2 mated with M will produce Group 4, and the birds of this group will be seven-eighths M and only one-eighth F. Those of Group 3 mated with F will produce Group 6; these youngsters will be seven-eighths F and only one-eighth M.

If after this the birds F and M have become too old for further use, or if there are better birds in Groups 2 and 3, or in Groups 4 and 6, then 2 and 3, or 4 and 6, may be mated together, and the progeny, with a power of transmitting their points intensified, will be of the same blood as the original young ones in Group 1, i.e., half of M and half of F, and through their use the desirable properties of either may be cultivated, and the undesirable ones eliminated, this being only a matter of selection, and of selection among birds which by virtue of their pedigree will have become more capable of passing on their own points than the original pair, M and F.

I trust I have made my meaning clear without unnecessary explanation, and will, therefore, only say that the chart shows how selective breeding may be carried out for yet another generation, with the result that the transmissive powers of the birds, and their value, therefore, as breeders, may be still further accentuated.

The Morals of the Cuckoo.

SIR.—"W. C." the writer of the Nature Notes in the "Manchester Dispatch," says in the issue of that paper for June 3 that he does not know whether the Cuckoo is polygamous, and as there are probably many readers of CAGE BIRDS who are in the same state of uncertainty perhaps some of the writers who have recently been contributing letters to your interesting paper will enlighten them and the "Manchester Dispatch" correspondent.

For myself, I believe that the Cuckoo is both polygamous and polyandrous. Its morals seem to be on a par with its other qualities. Some species of birds pair for life, and nearly all for the period of the breeding season at least, but Cuckoos pair only for the moment. Certainly the hen Cuckoo will accept the attention of as many males as come her way; that is, providing they do not all come at once, and the cock Cuckoo, I think, is equally indiscriminate. It is the fact, I believe, that there are more cock Cuckoos than hens, so if the species were a polygamous one a great many of the cocks would be lacking mates altogether.

Mr. Craig in his last says he could tell a great deal more about the Cuckoo, and perhaps he will give us the benefit of his knowledge in this particular.

ENQUIRER.

The Welsh Northern Counties Show.

Shall it be Held as Usual?

SIR.—I am sending you herewith a report of the last meeting of my Committee, but with your kind permission I should like to bring to the notice of your readers a few further particulars relating to same. In view of the fact that the Welsh Northern Counties F. and F.A. has run a show for a number of years, and on several occasions has had to face an adverse balance (which through the efforts of my Committee and others interested has been promptly defrayed), my Committee could not see their way to decide definitely to hold the show this year as expected, owing to circumstances arising out of the holding of it, or otherwise, until their next meeting on July 12.

Between now and the next meeting my Committee intend canvassing for support, and if they are satisfied with the result, in spite of present adverse circumstances, there is a possibility that the show may not be abandoned. Everything now rests upon the support and co-operation of exhibitors and fanciers generally, and as it is the intention to make the next show an open one in all sections, with an increased and more attractive classification, excellent prize money, also to make the membership of the Association open to all, instead of being confined to North Wales, thus allowing everyone who joins to compete for the Association's valuable challenge trophies and specials, I beg to thank them for their kind patronage and

There is, of course, no time to be lost, therefore I sincerely hope to receive a prompt response to my appeal in the shape of offers from secretaries of specialist clubs and exhibitors to guarantee classes or provide specials.

Shows are few and far between nowadays, and I think your readers will agree with me that it is the duty of all interested in such fixtures to assist in keeping the flag flying.

GEO. E. CRAGG,

Hand-rearing Canaries and Young Goldfinches.

SIR.—In reference to E. Cooper's letter in this week's issue re hand-rearing Canaries, the idea of feeding with a glass syringe is an excellent one; it makes a good substitute for the "flup" feeder, but while this is a good idea of feeding, the holding in one's hand and forcing the mouth open is a bad method, and I doubt if your correspondent will rear many birds that will not open their mouths of their own free will. I remember when I was a boy my father hand-reared many nests of British birds, chiefly Linnets and Goldfinches, and he used to say the handling of young birds was poisonous to them. Although I do not pin much faith to this, I know that young birds are better left in the nest when feeding. If treated properly they will open their mouths without much coaxing or forcing. The chief thing to look after when hand-rearing young birds is to feed very early in the morning; birds in their wild state get their breakfast hours before many of us are awake, and if they don't get it early they go weak and refuse to open their mouths, and although you may revive them for the first morning or two you won't be able to continue to do so, and they will soon join the majority. No matter what kind of food you use, unless you feed the birds early it is useless. When I was between 12 and 15 years of age my cousin brought a nest of Goldfinches—four, I believe—to my father. I don't know what age they were, but I know they could not see. Father told him they were rather too young, but of course it was too late to talk of that then; he had brought them, and the next thing was to feed them. We boiled an egg hard, minced part of it up very fine, mixed a little bread with it, added a little water to make it rather on the sloppy side, and fed them upon this, and we reared every one of these, and five other nests, altogether nearly 30 young Goldfinches. I was staying at home at the time, so I had the job to feed them, my father promising to buy me a pocket-knife if I did rear them all. I was delighted to have the job, as I always had a liking for pets. On rising at five in the morning or a little before, my father used to give them the first feed, then at about seven I would give them another feed, and continue this throughout the day every hour or hour and a half, with the result that only one died out of all six nests, and that one was accidentally killed. While my father had the youngster in his hand looking at the shoulder of the wing to know the sex, it fluttered out of his hand. Mother was looking on at the same time with a tablespoon in her hand, she made a grab to catch it, and she did catch it—on the head with the spoon. My father picked it up off the floor and looked again to see whether it was a cock or hen, and when he discovered it was a cock, well — But I had my knife all the same. I may say that after the first nest father used to buy a penny packet of egg-bread, crush some hemp seed with a bottle, mixing this and the hard-boiled egg and bread altogether to a sloppy state, and I always fed them with a flat-pointed stick like a lead pencil. The nests and youngsters were brought together; the nest was put into a basket with a piece of flannel to cover them, and in this they were kept until they were well feathered and eager to get out of the nest. They were then put into a cage about 12 inches long, 5 high, and 7 from back to front until they could feed themselves. I don't know that one kind of egg-bread is any better than any other. There are plenty upon the market, but I have found nothing better than Spratt's cage bird food moistened with water, hot or cold, and mixed with hard-boiled egg, about double the quantity of Spratt's to the egg. Put it through the sieve two or three times to blend both together, otherwise the birds will scatter it about to pick the egg out. I hope your correspondent will get better luck with his hens so that the young will not require hand-feeding; it is a tedious job.

A LADY AMATEUR'S EXPERIENCE IN MULE BREEDING.

By MARGARET E. M. HEWITT.

AS an amateur I turned my attention first to Linnet Mules, as a friend had made me a present of a hand-reared Linnet, and I had already a young variegated hen Canary named "Twitters."

The young couple set up housekeeping in one of the side divisions of my Crystal Palace aviary, and while "Twitters" was building the nest, "Taffy," the Linnet, used to amuse himself by pulling little bits of wool out of the nest to the floor of the cage, where, apparently in an ecstasy of delight, he would twist round and round, fluttering his wings all the time.

This I thought very pretty and amusing, but I thought differently when, after the young birds were hatched, I found him playing the same game on the sand at the bottom of the cage, only this time, instead of a piece of wool, he had one of his children in his beak, held by the little tuft of grey down at the top of its head.

After this "Taffy" had to be removed for a time. There was only one cock bird in this first brood of four, and a very fine fellow he was, very much larger than either his father or mother or his three plain little sisters, and although he was quite an ordinary dark Linnet-Mule, he was very much admired for his extremely tight, glossy plumage, large size, and elegant figure.

I had many more Linnet Mules after that, but none of them equalled "Hazel" in my affections. Once I was persuaded to give $3. for a Linnet because he had been the father of some variegated Mules, and the young birds I bred from him certainly had a few pure white feathers in tail and wings, but such slight variation is rather a blemish than an improvement.

By far the most interesting Linnet-Mule that I ever reared is my cinnamon Linnet-Mule, which was hatched under the following circumstances: I had long since discarded my Crystal Palace aviary, and I had at the time of which I am writing a bird-room, in which about thirty birds flew about at their own sweet will. Beside Canaries, Goldfinches, Siskins, and Redpolls, I had two Linnets, both of which were sold to me as cock birds. One of them that I had bought on July 15, and had named "Swithun," was particularly tame, and would feed from the hand. I do not know its former history, but I should say it had very likely been hand-reared.

The following spring I found it was building a nest in a square wooden nest-box that was hung up against the wall in the bird-room, and, to my surprise and delight, it laid five eggs, and sat splendidly, only coming off the nest for food. This is, I believe, an unusual thing for a Linnet to do in captivity.

I never saw the other Linnet take any notice of "Swithun," but I began to hope that I might succeed in rearing some young Linnets, or, possibly, some Mules.

The eventful day arrived when the eggs should hatch, and I hurried up to the bird-room to find, lying on the window ledge, three young birds with little black bodies and tufts of grey down, and all three quite dead.

Necessity the Mother of Invention.

Here was a disappointment! "Swithun," or one of the other birds (but I strongly suspect "Swithun" herself), had carried the young birds to the window, and either killed them or left them to perish. I looked into the nest, and there were the other two eggs not yet hatched.

Now it happened that I had a hen Canary sitting on eggs in a cage in my boudoir, so, without a moment's delay, I took "Swithun's" two remaining eggs and popped them into the Canary's nest.

Within an hour I looked to see if they could have hatched, and found—not another little nigger like the three dead ones in the bird-room, but a young bird with as pink a body as a clear Canary, with tufts of white down, and with (what was a still greater surprise), pink eyes showing under the skin.

The mystery was solved; the father of the young birds was one of my Cinnamon Canaries, of which there were several in the bird-room, and this young one, being a hen, had the light skin and pink eyes of the Cinnamon, whereas the others were doubtless cocks, and had they lived, would have been ordinary dark Linnet-Mules.

For the benefit of the uninitiated I must here state that unless both parents are of Cinnamon blood, the young cocks never have the cinnamon plumage and pink eyes, only the young hens have that distinction. This I have proved over and over again, and it is a fact known to all bird fanciers.

The next day another young bird with a black body and grey down was hatched in the Canary's nest, and grew up to be a very pretty dark cock Linnet-Mule, but the hen Mule with the pink eyes was the treasure, as such birds are most uncommon, for I suppose the father would be the Linnet and the mother the Canary in the case of ninety-nine Linnet-Mules out of a hundred, and it would then be impossible to breed Cinnamon Mules.

"Vanilla," as I called her, became a beautiful bird of that delicate shade of fawn colour that one seldom sees in Cinnamon birds. She is now four years old, very tame, and will feed from my hand. She has been flying about my boudoir while I have been writing this account of her, and she has now flown back happily to the large cage which she shares with the Greenfinch-Mule, whose story I must tell presently.

I had in my bird-room two cock Siskins and three Redpolls, a cock and two hens. I had had the cock many years, but the hens I had bought only the autumn before, and they were so wild that whenever I went into the room they would fly frantically from one end to the other, as long as I was there.

The Policy of "Never Despair."

I mention this to show what pleasant surprises one often has in the delightful hobby of bird-keeping, for it was one of these hens that built a nest the following July in a square wooden nest-box hanging on the wall of the bird-room, and sat so well that she would allow me to walk about the room without flying off her nest. She laid five eggs, but as I thought it very unlikely that she would hatch them, I placed two of the eggs under a Canary that was sitting on eggs in a cage in my boudoir.

On the twelfth day one egg was hatched in the Redpoll's nest, and two in the Canary's, but one of these died. The next morning another was hatched in the Redpoll's nest, and the fifth did not hatch, so I had three young birds, two under the Redpoll and one under the Canary.

Directly the last one was hatched, I noticed that it looked rather different from the other two, it was smaller, and the down was of a lighter shade, nearly white, although the body was quite dark.

The cock and hen Redpoll were indefatigable in feeding the two young birds with groundsel and chickweed, which I gave them three times a day. The other birds did not disturb them at all, although one of the Linnets used to try and help with the feeding sometimes. I never saw either of the Siskins go near the nest.

The difference in size between the two young ones in the Redpoll's nest was more apparent after a few days, and I was afraid of the smaller one being smothered by the larger and more vigorous nestling, so I transferred it to the Canary's nest, and she fed the two under her charge with untiring care. But there was a marked difference between these two also, not so much in size as in the shape of the beak.

Redpolls as Foster Parents.

The young bird in the bird-room left the nest on the fourteenth day, and it was pretty to see the pair of Redpolls following it about, and watching over it lest the other birds in the room should molest it. When it was fully fledged it was a very pretty little creature, with plumage of a greyish hue, the breast very light, densely speckled with black.

I was surprised that this should be the plumage of a young Redpoll, although I knew that the nest feathers of a bird are generally very unlike the adult plumage; but I was still more astonished when little "Plucky" (as I called him) began to moult, for then the silver grey on the breast was replaced by a very pretty yellow green, and by degrees the plumage became that of the Siskin, except that the green was much less vivid, and the top of the head was dark olive green, instead of black.

There was no longer any doubt about "Plucky's" father. It must have been one of the Siskins, although neither of them took the slightest notice of the young bird. His song was more like that of the Redpoll than the Siskin, but in his manners and in his greediness he resembled the Siskin.

We had a very hot summer the year he was two years old, and the bird-room being at the top of the house was very hot, although the French windows were open all day long. The heat affected "Plucky" in a peculiar way; all his feathers came off his head and neck, and for months he was perfectly bald.

I thought I would try the open-air treatment for him, so I sent him to an outdoor aviary, and he came back to me after four months in splendid plumage. He lived for nearly five years, and when he died I took him to a naturalist to be stuffed. I asked the man if he knew what the bird was, and he answered without hesitation, a "Siskin."

I have still the history of the other two young birds, "Tot" and "Pet," to relate. "Tot," the youngest and smallest, was exactly like the old Redpoll, who must have been his father, which accounts for the difference which I noticed from the first between him and his half-brother. He was rather a weakly bird, and did not live much more than a year. As soon as he attained to his adult plumage there was not the slightest doubt about his being a Redpoll and not a hybrid.

"Pet" was the only hen, and was a most engaging little bird; her head and back were brown like a Redpoll's, but on the breast, wings, and tail there was a faint tinge of green, and there was no doubt that she (as well as "Plucky") was a Siskin-Redpoll hybrid.

She and a cock Canary, with whom she was brought up, were much attached to each other, and one spring she built a nest and laid two tiny eggs about three-eighths of an inch long, which, of course, did not hatch; but it was very pretty to see the little creature on her nest, with the large yellow Canary feeding her. She, like "Plucky," did not live to complete her fifth year.

I never found any difficulty in rearing those delightful little birds—the cross between the Siskin and Canary. They were always charmingly tame, and had only one fault—greediness, inherited from their Siskin father. They were bred in a large-sized breeding cage, with wired top and sides. I do not like the box-shaped breeding cages at all; the birds do not get enough air when a cage of that sort is used.

I only once paired a cock Redpoll and hen Canary, and I had no success with them, as the only young bird that was hatched had a deformed beak, and after a little while the mother seemed to be disgusted with its appearance, and refused to feed it; but it lived long enough for me to see that it would have had a yellow breast and brown head and back, so no doubt it would have been an attractive little bird.

Some Model Goldfinches.

Goldfinch Mules are by far the most generally admired, and are no doubt much more handsome than any of the others. Some people find great difficulty in rearing them, because of the tiresome habit that the Goldfinch has of pecking the eggs as soon as they are laid; but I must have been fortunate in this respect, for out of the five or six Goldfinches that I have had there was only one that could have been accused of pecking one of the eggs, and even in that case I am not sure it was not the hen Canary that pecked it.

I have always been very desirous of obtaining a good light Goldfinch Mule, and I have spent a good deal of time and money in the endeavour; but I am obliged to admit (as so many others have done) that after all there is a good deal of chance about it, although, of course, you do have a better chance if you get the right sort of parents.

Many years ago I gave a guinea for a Goldfinch that was reputed to be the father of Light Mules, and his children certainly were variegated, and one of them was a beauty with a great deal of white about it; but none of them could be called Light Mules, although an ancestor of the Canary's had been the mother of perfectly clear Mules.

Then, on another occasion, from a hen Canary with no illustrious ancestors, I bred much handsomer Mules, one with a perfectly clear yellow breast and a little crest on the head, as the mother was a crested Canary.

After in-breeding for many years, I produced a hen Canary that I thought really did look likely to be the mother of Light Mules. She was nearly white, except for cinnamon markings on head and wings, and, of course, with pink eyes.

Great was the excitement when, after two nests of empty eggs, one young Goldfinch Mule was hatched, but I must say, notwithstanding all the hopes raised by her mother's lovely appearance and pedigree, "Ena" is a very ordinary little dark Mule, and her only charms are her extreme docility and intelligence. And now I come to the last Mule whose history I have to relate.

A wounded Greenfinch flew into the house of a friend of mine through an open window. He may have been hurt by a cat; anyhow, his wing was bleeding, and he never recovered the use of it, but he soon made himself happy in a cage, and became very tame.

A Fastidious Greenfinch.

After two or three years he was given to me, and as he was then in full song I thought I would provide him with a mate. During that summer and the following one I tried him with five different hen Canaries, but he took a violent dislike to each of them until the fifth.

He seemed to take a fancy to her, and all went well. Two young birds were hatched, but one of them was deformed and blind, and had to be destroyed. The other, "Leo," is very like a Greenfinch, but much more slim, and of a much brighter shade of green. The yellow bars on the wings are very clearly defined, and in the spring the top of his head is very lustrous, his under parts are bright yellowish-green, and he is all life and vivacity. His mother was a handsome jonque Canary, which accounts for the brilliancy of his plumage.

He has three distinct songs, one that of a Canary, another that of the Greenfinch, and a third is the song of a Goldfinch which was in the same room with him when he first began to sing. He is more of a Greenfinch than a Canary in his ways, and is a very strong bird, never ailing, and always bright and cheerful. As pets I much prefer Mules to Canaries; they have much more intelligence, and, being more hardy, they live longer.

THE BEST INSECTIVOROUS BRITISH BIRD FOR A NOVICE.

SOME VIEWS OF OUR READERS.

The Waxwing and Its Keeping.

By B. Robinson.

I THINK the best British insectivorous bird to be kept by a novice is the Waxwing. He is no trouble to keep, if the right way is taken, and, if a little patience is given, can be made as docile as a Dove, while the beauty and docility which characterise these birds make them charming exhibits, as well as being a trustworthy addition to an aviary. A store cage, four or five feet long, two feet high, and twelve to fourteen inches deep, will suit him well, with three perches, the centre one being slightly higher than the other two, so as to allow a nice wide hop from perch to perch. The food and water vessels can be hung inside the cage, near the two lower perches, so that he can reach them. The bottom of the cage should be thickly covered with white sawdust, so that when the bird is sufficiently steady, the droppings can be picked out of the cage. The bird will get used to this, after a few times, and take little or no notice, just moving on one side.

The use of the bath is most essential to the Waxwing, as it is to most other birds, and should be given every day, weather permitting. As to his food, he is somewhat of a gourmet, and should have two vessels, one always kept full of best ants' eggs, which should be his stock food, and, in the other, give him grocer's currants, sultanas, and raisins, cut up in small parts, mixing a tablespoonful of "Cecto" with it, each day. Mealworms, gentles, and any small insects will all meet with his approval, and ripe juicy fruit should be given him when procurable.

During the summer months he must be kept in the coolest place that can be found, as he is a winter migrant; this will play a great part in the bird having a quick and successful moult, so that he can be brought out for the early shows.

Throughout the moult he should be given as much colour food as would go on a three-penny piece daily, which will help to bring out those glorious colours, which this bird so admirably displays. In penning these few lines I trust they will be useful to the novice, and, if put into practice, I have no doubt as to the result.

In Praise of the Skylark.

By J. Taylor (Haworth).

The best British insectivorous bird for the novice is the Skylark, and a good one will take some beating even for a person who is not a novice. To begin with, the price of a Lark is within reach of nearly everyone; it is easily kept, if properly fed and looked after, is a more constant singer than any other cage bird, and the song is sweet and good. If you live in a town its song will remind you of green fields and open spaces, and of home and old friends.

A good cage for a Lark should not be less than eighteen inches long, twelve wide, and twelve high, with a wood back and ends, and the front wired; it should have a canvas top, a door of good size at each end of cage, and seed and water glass outside in front of cage.

A supply of good canary seed must always be kept in the outside glass, and the water must be fresh and clean. Whenever possible a fresh grass sod should be given daily. The bottom of cage should have plenty of clean sand; not just a sprinkle, but an inch deep at least, for your bird will soon get dirty and down in health without his sand bath.

Now comes soft food, which you should give fresh daily in a glass pot put inside the cage. If you only keep one or two birds it will be cheaper to buy than make your own; there are some good foods advertised. Green food your bird will like, and a bit of nice fresh lettuce or a few sprouted oats are good.

Then comes insect food, and plenty of it. I give mine live spiders, moths, daddy long-legs, bluebottles, meat maggots, mealworms, etc. Of course, if you live in town you cannot get such a variety of insects as in the country.

I get my live feed very easily in summer as I do a lot of night work. I have a gas jet close to a window, which I open, and I am not long before I get my bird his breakfast. It is amusing to see him take a moth nearly as thick as one's finger, knock its legs and wings off on the cage floor, then bolt it like taking a pill.

In conclusion I would say to the novice, don't keep a Lark in one of those small cages usually sold as Lark cages. And don't keep one at all unless you can give it proper food and proper care.

A Soldier's Vote for the Blackcap.

By Private J. Little (Flanders).

If a novice is thinking of taking up the keeping of a softbill as a hobby he cannot do better than to keep the Blackcap; he is a hardy and quite a cheerful little fellow, and will amply repay his master by his wonderful and beautiful song. He can be bought very cheaply; about 5s. or 6s. will procure a very good cock bird.

The best cage is a box cage, with a movable wire front, and the best size, I think, is about 20in. by 12in. by 8in.; this size has been used by myself for years; it is very roomy, and gives plenty of scope for exercise. The cage should have a door in the side, and also a door in the wire front, and the food and water holes must be large enough for easy access to food and water. There should be at least two perches, three if possible, of different sizes.

Sawdust should be used in place of sand; it is far better. In all my cages I have lengthwise on the tray a fillet of wood an inch or so back from the front, so that when any food is dropped it does not come in contact with the sawdust or droppings; grit can be placed in the small place if the bird-keeper wishes.

Now as to the feeding of the Blackcap. He will require a good insectile food. There are several advertised at about 1s. 6d. per pound in CAGE BIRDS, and a few flies and mealworms. He is fond of fruits, such as currants, pears, and bananas, and I have kept them entirely on bananas and soaked currants. A bird I kept thus had not a frayed feather on him; he was a real gem; in fact, the best I ever had.

If you give him a few mealworms and flies every day he will become very tame and confiding; also get CAGE BIRDS every week, and you will soon learn how to go in for the more expensive insectivorous birds. The last, and most important, thing is to give a bath every day.

Another Vote for the Blackcap

By W. H. Commins (Exeter).

For the novice nothing is better than the Blackcap; the male is very handsome, silvery-grey, with a black cap, very hardy, and, if properly looked after, easily kept.

As a cage bird the Blackcap, when properly tamed, makes a perfect pet, though with Blackcaps, as in other species, there are individuals which you can never tame. The right time to get them is the end of August or in September. Spring-caught birds never settle down, but always remain wild.

The Blackcap, being a very active bird, likes plenty of room, and its cage should be two feet long, one foot six inches high, and one foot two inches wide; the inside of top should be padded, as when migratory time comes they get restless at night. The door should be at one end for putting in bath, as Blackcaps are very fond of bathing. The food also should be put inside in a tin, and the water glass outside.

There should be four movable perches, placed so as not to be one over the other, as they require to be taken out very often and cleaned. Have a sliding bottom to cage for cleaning out, and use fine sawdust for the bottom of the cage.

The Blackcap lives during one part of the year mostly on insects, the other on fruit. As a staple food to give every day take some bread crusts and currant cake, also scraps of meat, not salted. Put it in an oven, and bake until it is hard and crisp. Then take it out and roll it with a rolling pin, and to each pint add threepennyworth of ants' eggs and some currants. Moisten just enough to use daily; this food will not turn sour. Give six mealworms daily, also hard-boiled egg two or three times a week, and any small insects that are to be got. When no other fruit is about give a slice of banana every day, but when the fruit season begins it will eat nearly all as they come ripe; cherries, red currants, and ripe pears are their favourites, and elder and privet berries they are also very fond of.

The Blackcap will sing nearly all the year round from early morn till night, and in the Blackcap you have beauty as well as song. If you have a good specimen, exhibit it, for a first-class Blackcap takes some beating on the show bench in the A.O.V. Small British Class. Get a nice show cage, and teach the bird to go from keeping cage to show cage without handling, and give a bath the day before showing.

THE PIED WAGTAIL.

A familiar British Bird partial to the banks of running brooks.

Ule, the Little Owl

By G. H. LEWIN.

A story of the introduction of the Little Owls as birds of our Countryside.

ULE'S parents had been brought over from Holland when very young; they came, with many others, to Leadenhall Market, and from thence some 30 or 40 had been sent in a hamper to a beautiful wooded district in the Eastern Midlands.

The half-grown youngsters were placed in a large cage almost like an aviary, and fed regularly each day for a week or more, until they had got somewhat accustomed to their new home; after that the birds were allowed to go free; but as they were so young, and not used to hunting for themselves, food was still placed near at hand each day until they all got strong enough to gain their own livelihood.

The New Home.

All this had happened some years ago, and Ule's parents had got quite accustomed to their new country, for it was thoroughly suited to their tastes and habits; and in it old trees with holes, where they could hide and nest, were so numerous that there was never any need to search far for a home.

Ule, with four brothers and sisters, was hatched in the hollow branch of an ash tree which stood with many others in the midst of the splendidly timbered park where his parents had been given their liberty.

He was a small, fierce-looking ball of down at first, as were his fellow nestlings, but soon they began to grow larger and stronger, and feathers took the place of down; it was in the early days of June, and for the next few weeks, the parent Owls had a hard life of it, for the owlets were voracious, and none more so than Ule himself, who would, if he could, have pushed his brothers and sisters aside to get all the food which was brought; but the older birds were wise, and he only got his proper share, which was, however, always just a little more than any of the others.

The nest in which the youngsters were hatched was nothing but the rotten chip-pings at the bottom of the hole with a few feathers from the small birds caught by the parent Owls.

How the Babies were Fed.

During the time they were being reared all kinds of living things paid toll, so long as they were not too large for the old birds to kill. May flies, beetles, and large insects, sometimes worms, mice, and an occasional bird, helped to make up the menu of the youngsters. At first, of course, they could not tear their prey to pieces, so the parents did it for them, but as they grew, the parents did less and less, until all, and especially Ule, could eat anything that was brought.

Gradually their wings grew, and the youngsters began to feel cramped in the confines of their home, when the parents brought food they would crowd to the entrance of the hole, until at last one bolder than the rest got right out, and perched on the branches near.

When once they had felt the freedom of the open air, they came out each day in the early morning, and so soon learnt to fly, very softly and rather weakly at first, but soon stronger and stronger, until they could use their wings almost as well as their parents.

The Pride of His Parents.

Ule was the favourite, or made himself appear so, for he was always first in everything, and great was his pride when he picked up a beetle which he had found himself. Little by little, he learned how to catch insects and find worms, and grew stronger and stronger every day, and when he had moulted his baby coat and was fully fledged, he could face the world without fear.

He had but few enemies, for he and all his relations were held free by the master of the lands on which they lived, but he was sometimes very badly mobbed by flocks of small birds, who, in the autumn, after their summer duties were over, and the hardships of winter not yet come, moved about in flocks, accompanied by their youngsters, and whenever one of their enemies, be it Hawk or Owl, was in sight, they seemed to think that it was their duty to hustle and worry him away with as much noise as possible.

Not Afraid of the Sun.

Now Ule, with all his family, unlike the other Owls, had no fear of the brightest sunlight, and so he was more easily seen by the flocks of small birds. One day especially, he was worried from tree to tree along the river banks until he came to one with a hollow trunk, into which he dropped, and waited until the flock of tormenters had passed by. He could, of course, have caught and killed one of the birds, but he was too bothered by their numbers to think of that.

As the winter came on, he wandered away from his early home, partly because he felt it good to do so, but more because his parents would not have any more of him, and drove him out into the world. He did not mind, life was as yet easy to him, for food was plentiful, and he cared for nothing more, so he wandered far and wide, often getting many miles away.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

D. A. and P.W.—Replied to by post.
MEDICINE CABINET (Special Prize).—I would suggest the following selection of drugs, etc., as the most generally useful and valuable wherewith to stock the limited capacity of your bird-room cabinet. Use the four large bottles for (1) an insecticide, or red mite destroyer, which is a far more valuable item to keep handy than mere drugs; (2) chemical food; (3) emulsified cod liver oil; and (4) syrup of buckthorn, of which the bottle should never be allowed to remain more than two-thirds full. As solids for the small jars (1) carbonate of bismuth; (2) ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine; (3) sulphate of soda; and (4) sulphate of iron. In the small phials keep (1) tincture of gentian; (2) tincture of calumba; (3) oxymel of squills; (4) sweet spirit of nitre; and (5) tincture of steel. This will give you a very fair selection for dealing satisfactorily with all the common ailments that are most likely to arise.

NOT IN BREEDING CONDITION (Bird Lover).—Yes, it is undoubtedly the moult which has not yet ceased that is the cause of the birds not being in the proper condition for breeding. This could have been avoided by deferring the removal of the birds to the fresh room until the weather was quite settled and mild, and then taking advantage of a favourable spell to carry out the change. The proper course for you to pursue now is to see that they are not exposed to damp, or direct draughts, and every second day to give in addition to the ordinary seed diet half a teaspoonful per bird of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, teazle, white millet, and broken groats. Then dissolve half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, and add 20 drops of this mixture to each ounce of drinking water two days in every three for a week, and afterwards every second day until the feathers have quite ceased dropping. Give a few dandelion seed heads, and seedy heads of chickweed and shepherd's purse (as soon as you can get them), daily. Watch the droppings, and if the above medicine causes undue constipation give a little juicy lettuce, or crisp, young groundsel, daily, until it is removed. It is useless trying to breed with the birds until the moulting is quite stopped.

REMOVING SPLINTS (Rob).—As the bird is evidently getting on well with the splints in position leave them on for another fortnight and thus be on the safe side. See that the perches are conveniently placed for the bird, and do not cause it to flutter wildly about for some little time after the splints are removed, and so give it a chance of getting accustomed to the new condition of things.

WHAT IS IT? (C. R. B.).—(1) I think you may safely leave out the hermaprodite idea about this bird. It is not possible to say with the least degree of certainty that sex the bird is from your description, or, indeed, any written description, but I am inclined to think it is a cock that has not yet come in condition, and the moulting may be quite accountable for it. Treat it the same as advised to "Bird Lover" in this issue for three or four weeks, if necessary, and if not in better condition then, write again, repeating particulars, and I will advise you again. (2) You omit to say which joint it is that is affected, but I take it that it is the one popularly called the knee—i.e., the one where the feathering ceases. A dislocation would be much more likely than a fracture in so young a bird, and it is possible this may be the cause of the trouble, though it needs a personal examination to speak definitely on such a matter. I would advise you to let matters take their own course and not interfere in any way. It may gain strength and get all right as the bird gets a little older, but if it does not, it would, perhaps, be better that it should drop out of the race than grow up a serious cripple.

ROLLER GETTING LOUD (A. T.).—(1) It is quite likely that breeding with the Roller is chiefly, if not solely, the cause of him getting loud in song, especially if he was left with the hen to assist in bringing up the brood. Many Roller cocks are apt to let themselves go under such circumstances. The increased vital energy due to the coming of the natural breeding season will also be responsible in some cases for the cocks getting a little wild in song, even when they are not mated. In the latter case it is generally sufficient to keep them in their closed boxes for a portion of each day to keep them soft. To avoid it when breeding the cock should be allowed to remain with the hen only whilst she is going to nest, then removed, and if showing any signs of getting loud kept partially in the closed box the same as above. Treat on this plan when he is resuming song after the moult, and you will doubtless find him get soft again. (2) As the bird appears to be a high-class singer, if you desire to go on breeding with him you would be best advised to mate him with a good hen of a strain of high-class singers and let him train the young cocks. You could, of course, mate him with a common Roller hen, and the young cocks would be very susceptible to training and make good singers. (3) If not trained they would make better songsters than the ordinary Norwich or Border, but to let them go untrained whilst you have the necessary material for training in the cock would be a waste of energy. (4) Yes, even if the cock sings quite as much in the closed box as when it is open it will certainly tend to keep him soft in song if it is kept closed.

WILL THEY BREED? (W. H.).—(1) There is no harm in making the attempt as a pure experiment, but I am afraid I cannot hold out any hopes of a successful result from mating the cock Cuthroat with the Canary. The cross has been attempted many times, but I cannot at the moment recall a successful attempt. (2) The two cock Canaries that are out of condition for breeding should agree well enough together in a fair sized cage where they have a little elbow room. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape mixed together, and in addition a morsel of egg, or other soft food twice a week, a pinch of mixed seeds once a week, and a little seedy greenstuff daily, such as chickweed, groundsel, shepherd's purse, or seed stalks of the lesser plantain. The latter should not be difficult to obtain now. (3) No sample of seed reached me. It must have been overlooked or mislaid.

SITTING ON NEST (W. H. H.).—The hen is troubled with what can only be termed an abnormal cycle of reproduction, owing probably, to an undeveloped condition of the ovaries. Your best course now is to leave the birds together, and give the hen a clutch of common eggs to hatch out and rear the chicks if she will do so, which is quite a likely result. After this she may go to nest on her own account.

count and complete the cycle in a normal manner. If you have not a clutch of Canary eggs, which need not be a complete one, for this purpose, a clutch of wild Finch's—Linnet or Greenfinch, for instance—would do just as well.

BARE ROUND NECK (Norwich Crest).—(1) It is not necessarily "catching." The most likely cause is a partial moult, perhaps due to some of the late sudden fluctuations of weather, or, possibly, to the irritating effects of grey lice. Examine the birds for the latter pest, and if any are discovered it should only be necessary to eradicate them for the effects to disappear at the moult. (2) If due to weather changes, also the feathers may be reproduced at the forthcoming moult without any special treatment. But to be on the sure side, when the moult is about half way through begin to add to the soft food, which you will give a little of at least twice a week even if you are not colour-feeding, a slight dusting of flowers of sulphur every third day, and on the intervening days give one day ten drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, in the drinking water, and the next a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give a little seedy greenstuff in variety daily, and allow the birds to bathe freely. (3) If the loss of feathers is due to the birds being in a partial moult it is not likely they will be any use for breeding this season, or that the eggs laid will be fertile. On the other hand, if this defect exists in the strain I should not consider them suitable to breed with at all, but if it is due to some accidental cause, as mentioned above, there would be no objection to breeding with them when they are in the proper condition.

STAGE FRIGHT (J. A. L.).—The bird is a hyper-sensitive creature which suffers from a condition analogous to what is known as "stage fright." It is rarely anyone can do anything with these specimens beyond endeavouring to break the ice by kind and methodical treatment to make them understand that no harm is intended towards them. As it happens regularly with the bath it may be afraid of the vessel. If you use a white china one try substituting a darker earthenware one, similar to the saucer of a flower-pot. And when it happens when given its drinking water you might try to discover whether you are wearing any article of dress which is alarming to it, or if there is any other alarming object in the vicinity. Always leave a bit of some favourite food or green food when you do anything about the cage, and you might also place a tiny morsel of green food in the bath when you offer it. Medical treatment is of no use in such a case.

CAUSE OF DEATH (Wants to Know).—As I am frequently saying, nothing but a proper post-mortem examination can reveal the actual cause of death satisfactorily in such cases as yours, and from the slight data you give it is not safe even to hazard a guess. But I note that you mention nothing at all but the egg and biscuit, and if this formed the sole article of its diet it may possibly have died from constipation. It ought to have had a regular supply of canary seed available, with a pinch of summer rape added daily, in addition to the egg food, which you should have begun to reduce at five weeks old. I cannot advise you better than to get a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our Manager will send you, post free, for 7d. It will enable you to avoid all such dietetic errors as this.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

LINNETS DYING (Nutschell).—It is a most difficult matter to tell you why your birds died. The information you send is so meagre that it is practically of no use. I gather from your letter that you obtained the birds from a dealer, and we will suppose they were healthy specimens when you obtained them. You would of course ask the dealer just how he fed them and procure from him a little of the seed to go on with. Upon arriving home your first business should have been to examine that seed and see if you thought it was a really good sample of the kind, and safe to continue to feed them with. If not, you would procure some elsewhere containing the same varieties of seed. Some of this you should have put to soak, and when bursting and just commencing to sprout you should have given the birds a spoonful two or three times a week; or you could have left some to soak all night, and after drying in a cloth, offered a little in the morning. After you had had the birds for three or four days you should have given them a dose of salts or some other suitable aperient. Field-moulted birds require this occasionally, as they eat rather heavily of seeds that they are fond of. A spray of shepherd's purse and chickweed should also be given. If these directions are carried out your losses from newly purchased birds (providing they are healthy specimens) should be very trifling.

FEEDING YOUNG GREENFINCHES (Greenle).—I gather from your letter that the young birds are still being fed by their parents. You should put a little soft food, such as egg and biscuit, in a small vessel, and place inside the cage where the young ones can easily get at it. This should be replenished two or three times a day, and any stale or contaminated food thrown away, and the vessel washed out. As soon as they begin to eat it you will not have much further trouble, and you can remove them cage and all indoors for a few hours, preferably during the middle of the day. As soon as they are well on to the soft food, give a few split groats, cracked rape, and canary seed, and two or three days a week a spoonful of the same seeds soaked. Do not leave off the soft food too suddenly, or they will be thrown back. A spray of chickweed may be offered, and on a fine warm day let them have a bath. After this you should have no trouble with them, if you follow the treatment recommended in our Nutshell booklet on the Greenfinch, post free 2d., from our manager.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

PARROT WITH SWELLING IN THROAT (B. E. L.).—Keep the bird in a warm room where the temperature will be as even as possible. Put a little honey and borax into its mouth several times daily, by means of a small stick; only a clean stick must be put into the mixture. Every fourth day put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia into its drinking-water, and on the intermediate day give chemical food in the water. Lightly spread its biscuit with cod-liver oil emulsion, and then slightly damp the biscuit with hot water, but do not use sufficient water to make the biscuit soppy. Your dietary is fairly in order, but as soon as it begins to eat generally again, supply liberally and daily such ripe fruits as it will eat. Shelled and unshelled nuts can also be given. Grit and cuttlebone must be continually in the cage, as also should a chunk of wood, for it to exercise its mandibles upon. Shall be pleased to hear how the bird progresses.

NEWLY PURCHASED AMAZON (J. M.).—Be careful not to subject this bird to draught, and keep it in as even a temperature as possible. Do not give it any more crusts soaked in tea, but crusts soaked in chemical food and water (hot) will be beneficial. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking-water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days put ten drops of chemical food in the water. Put ten drops of cod-liver oil emulsion on to the daily supply of boiled maize, and stir in. Put into its mouth by means of a stick or any other convenient method, a little honey and borax once or twice daily—only a clean stick must be put into the mixture. You must continue above treatment till the bird is lively, vivacious, and quite fit again. Dietary: Seed mixture, boiled maize, ripe fruits, and nuts in variety (shelled and unshelled). Grit and cuttlebone must be continually in the cage, as also should a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. Such extras as biscuits, stale crusts, and a little plain cake can be given. Do not give any tea, coffee or milk spops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. Report progress a month hence.

SILVERBILLS AND BENGALISE (Mrs. K.).—It almost reads as if the dark bird was the Indian species and the "yellow-brown" one the African. However, you can easily prove this, the Indian species has the lower back pure white—possibly the dark bird is a young one which will don the brighter plumage at the next moult. They should nest and rear in such a cage as yours without difficulty. The sample of seed is a portion of a millet spray, which is good food for them, and if your local seed merchant does not stock these, any of the large seedsmen who advertise in our columns will supply per post or rail with a bundle of fifty for about 3s. I should also supply canary seed and white millet and green food to vary the menu. Bengalese can be kept with the Silverbills; Hybrids have been bred between the two species. You can enamel the interior of the cage, but you must not return the birds thereto until the enamel is quite hard.

BUDGERIGARS AND CANARIES (A. B. B.).—(1) I have known Budgerigars and Canaries kept together, and breeding freely, and the mishaps during a course of years were amazingly few, but I have known other cases in which there were serious losses. However, in this case I consider you fairly safe with only one pair of Budgerigars, the element of danger will become more real when their progeny become fairly numerous—it is more mischievousness than malice. (2) Any branches which do that are thick and twiggy, leaves are immaterial. Parakeets, large and small, all seem to consider that their chief business in life is to strip the trees and bushes of their foliage, and for this there is no remedy, but I repeat that so long as the branches are bushy and twiggy they will provide cover for the birds.

ABOUT BUDGERIGARS (Erebet).—The reply referred to an aviary with a floor area of 50 superficial feet. By three to four breeding pairs I meant, commence with that number, the others, making up 25 to 30, would be their progeny, understood to be a constantly moving population, as they would mostly be disposed of as they became adult. If there was a second aviary into which the young birds could be turned as they were able to fend for themselves, then the aviary in question would accommodate about six pairs, but I must repeat the condition that the young must be removed as soon as able to fend for themselves. It is an understood principle that when starting an aviary the sexes are equal, and a wise man will keep the sexes equal among the adults. I am very interested to hear that you have plants growing in your flight; as a rule Budgies will not permit a bush or tree to last more than a twelve-month at the most. I should like fuller particulars of your birds; it is probably the odd birds that are upsetting breeding operations.

should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2d. each): No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Avadavats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

WHAT ARE THEY? (Novice, D. McK.).—I have, since answering your query, received a small number of White-eared Bulbuls direct from Calcutta myself, and after comparing your description of them with the living birds there is no longer any doubt that your birds are, as I previously surmised, White-eared Bulbuls (Molpates leucotis). Treat as per previous reply. An Anglo-Indian friend, at present in England, and who is well up in native (Indian) dialects and an ardent ornithologist, has no knowledge of the vernacular name you quote.

BUDGERIGARS MOULTING (Miss B.).—I take it that your birds are kept in cages, and possibly in a room where the temperature is fluctuating; such conditions would tend to keep up the appearance of a continual moult. A normal moult lasts about a month. There is no definite period, at least, so it seemed to me when I had an aviary devoted to these birds, the period covered from June to end of August with respective pairs, but save during very inclement weather, the respective birds completed their moult in about a month. Young birds with their first moult take much longer. I have never counted the feathers in a Budgie's tail, but there are two long ones and about six others of varying length on each side, approximately fourteen in all. There is no cause for uneasiness about your birds, but guard against constipation by putting a little fluid magnesia in the drinking-water, and a little chemical food in the water twice or thrice weekly will be a helpful tonic during the moult.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Sending Birds to Shows (Down-hearted, N. Wales).—Why adopt such a non-deplume? Now is not the time to be down-hearted, and there is nothing in your letter to give a clue to your frame of mind. (1) Birds sent to a show should be sent in the cages in which they are to be exhibited, and the cage or cages should be enclosed in a proper travelling case; brown paper parcels entail a lot of work on the officials at a time when they are especially busy. (2) There is no necessity to send food with the birds unless they are of such a nature that they require special feeding, in which case a supply of the food to which they are accustomed should be forwarded. (3) A travelling label always accompanies the cage labels sent on receipt of the entry fees, and the name and address of the exhibitor should be filled in at the back unless this has been done by the show secretary. (4) It is a very great assistance to the would-be exhibitor to become a member of a local society. He will gather much information other than that we have given you in these answers. (5) The letters you quote simply mean Cage Bird Association, Ornithological Society, etc. All cage bird societies hold members' shows, and most societies an annual open show; the latter are, of course, open to all, although in many of them there are special classes open to members only. You will find in CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1916, a copy of which our manager would send you post free for seven stamps, a full list of societies throughout the kingdom, and you should send to the secretary of whichever of these is most convenient to your own town an application for terms of membership, etc.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

PROSPECTIVE HYBRID BREEDERS.

Among the British Hens which breed freely in captivity the Bullfinch and Greenfinch rank highly in the estimation of Hybrid and Mule breeders. Some of the most beautiful of all Hybrids are produced from the Bullfinch Hen, while the breeding of Hybrids from the Greenfinch is almost as easy as breeding Canaries. The Bullfinch Hen on the left of our picture is the fine specimen owned by Mr. Hopwood, Albrighton, which won 2nd Prize at Watford Show, and the Greenfinch Hen took 4th Prize for Mr. J. Reed, of East Ham, in a strong class at the Holborn Hall Show the first time out.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the Depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

FOR JOINER-MADE CAGES, CHEAP.

Any size with any number of compartments, loose wire fronts, 3-ply backs, best materials only used, none better made; illustrated catalogue of all kinds of cages, and everything required, free.

MEDICINES.

EVERY BIRDKEEPER has need of practical hints upon the prevention of diseases and their eradication from cage, aviary, and birdroom. These are to be found in "Nutshell No. 9," post free 2d., from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. 2d., from our agents (list published frequently).

"Ailing Cage Birds and How to Cure Them," "Nutshell No. 6," an account of the troubles which beset captive birds, with the treatment and list of medicines to restore our pets to health. This will save you much discouragement and money, and costs only 2d., post free.—From "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C. Or 2d. from agents (list frequently published).

REPEATING ADVERTISEMENTS.

Owing to the number of announcements received we cannot guarantee to repeat advertisements unless the previous issue, Page and Column are stated by the advertiser.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 1d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

TIMELY TIPS.

Treasure all your young Canaries this year.
 There will be a fine market soon for all you can spare.
 Therefore be ready to take advantage of the opportunity.

FREE SUITS & TROUSERS FOR READERS

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO WEAR SIX MONTHS OR REPLACED FREE.

Remarkable Cloth—Won't Tear—Won't Wear Out—Absolutely Holeproof! Your Boy must have a Suit!

We will give any reader a pair of Trousers, Breeches, or complete Suit, free of charge, if he can wear the smallest hole in six months, no matter how hard he wears goods. We have discovered a really remarkable cloth that will not tear or wear out—absolutely holeproof, looks exactly as finest tweeds and serges, made in all the most up-to-date designs and suitable for farm and rough wear or office and best wear. Just to introduce this remarkable cloth to "Cage Birds" readers we offer a pair of well-cut Gent's Trousers for only 4/9; Breeches 6/3, or complete stylish suit for 15/3, BOY'S SUIT for 5/11, Knickers 2/3, and send in parcel a guarantee, plainly stating if the smallest hole appears in six months (no matter how hard you wear goods) we replace the garment absolutely free of charge. "CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

DARLINGTON C.B.S.

Meeting, June 14, N.F. show fixed for July 1, at George Hotel. Classes as last year, with Border added. Mr. Cooper gives spl. for most points in Canary section, all points to count for cup. Birds staged at 2 prompt. Entrance, 7d. cage. Mr. J. Cuthbertson takes Canaries, and Mr. Hawkins Brit. Now, members, bring them out and make it a success.—Wm. Hearfield, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

Meeting, June 14, Shields Cafe, Bigg Market, Mr. Wm. Mather, chair, with a very good turn up. Decided to hold annual show this year, date to be fixed later. After business we had a question night. Questions were asked, and very satisfactorily answered. N.F. show.—Champ, Cl.: 1, Davis; 2, Wigglesworth, Mkd.: 1, 2, Davis; 3, Wigglesworth. Nov. Cl.: 1, 3, G. Key; 2, vhc, Geo. Shield; 4, Wm. Collins; 5, Wm. Robinson; 6, R. Studholme. Mkd.: 1, Wm. Collins; 3, G. Key; 3, 4, R. Studholme. Decided to hold next meeting, July 12. R. Davis, Hon. Sec.

READING C.B.S.

Meeting, June 7, before a moderate attendance. Chairman having joined Army, Mr. Foster took his place for the evening. Decided to still retain Mr. Munday as chairman, but during his absence a temporary substitute to be appointed each meeting. Decided to hold F.F. show in meeting room this year to save expense of larger room. Members living outside town desirous of making entries to write sec. for schedule, as so many are sent by post to members who never exhibit at F.F. show. This will be a considerable saving of postage. Specials were promised for all classes, so it is hoped members will make as many entries as possible, to make a most successful show. Further particulars in due course. Mr. Cooper was elected a member.—O. C. Smith, Sec.

ABERTILLERY C.B.S.

Meeting, June 17, Prince of Wales Hotel, Mr. Wm. Ferrat presiding over a fairly good attendance. New members elected: Messrs. Scott and Powell. Decided to have ten classes for F.F. show, July 1. Birds staged at 4. Judging at 5 prompt. There are some good specials and we should have a good show.—Wm. Newell, Hon. Sec.

OXFORD C.B.S.

Meeting Headquarters, 58, George Street, May 18, Mr. Gough, chair. On account of several members being called up it was decided not to have F.F. show this season. Mr. Simmons was elected a member. Our sec, Mr. Pilled, being called up, we all wish him good luck, safe and speedy return. Mr. A. Lewin, 58, Marlborough Road, Oxford, was elected sec. pro. tem. The society is in a very prosperous condition, and I shall be pleased to receive suggestions from any of our members with regard to our annual show for the autumn, as we intend to keep the flag flying until the boys come home. Subs. are now due.—A. Lewin, Sec. pro tem.

SOUTH SHIELDS (Always Ready).

Meeting, June 14, Hunt's Shop, Ocean Road; Mr. J. S. Dixon, chair. Messrs. T. Bewick, Gateshead; J. Peacock, Thirlwell; W. O. Purvis, were elected members. Agreed unanimously to pay all prize-money on the sliding scale. We have secured one of the highest halls in the Borough for both our shows this season, three minutes' walk from the station. Specials for our Young Bird show, July 22: 5/- given by J. W. Watson for most points with three nominated young birds; 2/6 by J. S. Dixon, most entries; 2/6 by R. Barnes, best young bird; 2/6 by R. Armstrong for most points in show; silver medal by R. Armstrong for best bird shown by member who has never before exhibited; 2/6 by J. Curry, best Linnet; 2/6 by R. Ridley, best Goldfinch. A hearty invitation to all fanciers within 20 miles to join. Full particulars from J. W. Watson, 75, Leighton Street.

EAST ANGLIAN NORWICH P.C.

Meeting, Festival House, Norwich, June 15; Mr. J. J. Smith presided. Owing to various causes the attendance did not reach the previous average. On the minutes being read and confirmed it was pointed out that owing to an oversight the election of Mr. J. Mitchell as a vice-president was omitted from the report of the last meeting in CAGE BIRDS. This gentleman is giving the new Club most generous and energetic support. The agenda was a rather formidable one, and owing to the amount and nature of the correspondence received by the sec. since the previous meeting, the greater portion of evening was occupied in dealing with questions arising from same. Very encouraging letters were amongst others received from Mr. Hare, Wisbech; Mr. Sissons, Lincoln; and Mr. Chapman, Lynn. Mr. F. Burrows was elected auditor, and the sec. will place before him at each meeting a statement of account showing the financial position of the Club on that day. Sundry other matters were discussed, and it was resolved to hold a meeting to clear the balance of the agenda on June 29.—R. Tomlinson, Hon. Sec.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting and table show of nest feather birds, headquarters, Duke of York, and quite a nice lot turned up. Vice-president, Mr. J. A. Tonks, judge, and Mr. F. J. Weaver, chair. Classes for annual N.F. show, July 8; birds staged 2.30. Mr. S. N. Taylor, West Bromwich, to judge Norwich and British, and Mr. F. J. Weaver Yorks. 6 Nor., including one hen class; 5 Yorks. 4 Brit.; 2 Mules. We have up to now six specials given, all donations will be thankfully received. Spl., best Nor.; best Yorks.; best Brit. or Mule; most points Nor.; most points Yorks.; and most entries. We are in want of a spl. for most points for British or Mule. One of our oldest and well-known members, Mr. Willoughby, who had retired, was re-enrolled a member. Many fanciers in the district will be pleased to know that Mr. Willoughby is taking an active part again.

Nor. Cl.: 1, 2, Hampton; 3, Weaver; vhc, c, Garfield; he, Bendall. Mkd.: 1, vhc, Bendall; 2, Weaver; 3, Hampton. Var. or Green: 1, Weaver; 2, Gibbons. Yorks. Cl.: 1, Pritchard; 2, Worrall. Tkd. or Mkd.: 1, Gibbons; 2, 3, Pritchard; vhc, Worrall. Mr. J. A. Tonks brought over for inspection a splendid light Linnet Mule, a bird which with a little bit of luck will be heard of again.—J. Gibbons, Press Corres.—

YORKSHIRE C.C.

Annual general meeting, June 17, Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. H. H. Towers, chair. Minutes of committee meetings held during the past year read and passed. Balance sheet was adopted, showing a deficit of £1 19s., which was accounted for by the number of outstanding subs. which the Sec. trusts will be forthcoming at an early date. The Sec. had received only one nomination paper for the election of officers, and that after the advertised date of closing, so it was ruled out of order, and it was unanimously decided that with two exceptions last year's officers be elected for 1916-17. Dr. Craig, Sheffield, and Mr. C. Thornton, Otley, were elected to fill the two vacancies. A cordial vote of thanks was accorded the retiring officers and donors of prizes, etc.; four resignations were accepted with regret. Mr. A. Radley, Huddersfield, Mr. F. Myers, Yeadon, and Mr. C. Thornton, Otley, admitted to membership. Decided that club's competitions be continued. In place of the Ramsden cup (won outright), Mr. L. Dykes, the winner, offered to replace same with a cup to the value of 7 guineas. Mr. W. A. Cowgill proposed, Mr. H. J. Chittenden seconded, that this most generous offer be accepted. Competitions for 1916-17:—Ogden trophy, value 10 guineas; Dyke's competition, value 7 guineas; amateur competition, Junior Novice competition, and most points by 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th birds, cash prizes at each show. Next committee meeting, July 8; business: details of competitions, allotment of patronage, etc. Societies desiring the club's patronage and which have not already applied please do so, as applications close July 1.—John Greaves, 279, Hollings Road, Bradford.

THE STOCK BOOK

supplies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

LEICESTER (Hand-in-Hand) C.B.S.

Meeting and table N.F. show, White Swan, Market Place, Mr. Gibbins presiding, and a good number present. The general opinion of the members was that progress in the breeding room seems to be fairly up to the average, and, according to the youngsters staged, quality and type right to the front. Some look very promising birds, but hardly ready. Mr. J. Bent judged open classes, and Mr. Herbert moxie. Yell.: 1, vhc, Moores; 2, he, c, Roberts; 3, Jolly. HALIFAX O.S.

First of a series of shows, June 17, headquarters, Plummet Line Hotel. Only a moderate entry of 61 birds, owing probably to the inclement weather which has prevailed and marred the progress of bird breeding generally. Mr. L. Dykes (Bradford) judged and gave entire satisfaction. Cl. or Tkd. Yell. Yorks: 1, 2, 3, Burdakin Bros.; vhc, Hanson; he, Horsman; c, Ambler. EAST HAM C.B.S.

Very successful young bird show, June 17. The entry was quite a good one, although the majority of the members have experienced a somewhat bad breeding season, due no doubt to the inclement weather. The birds staged were quite good class, special for best in show going to Mr. Parker's Norwich, a bird with plenty of substance, well put together and good quality of feather. Runner-up and winner of best Yorks special, Mr. Farmer's wing mkd. Yorks. Borders were good, buffs being quite strong; the winner, a nicely moulded bird owned by Mr. Stevens, securing spl. for best bird. A feature of the show was the fine array of British, spl. for best going to Mr. Parker's Hawfinch, a very fine specimen. Mr. Onslow, the sec., was as usual quite up-to-date in all the arrangements, and we heard from him that the society is still going strong, although many members are away or doing work that prevents them giving much time to the hobby. Mr. H. Norman judged.

Cl. Yorks: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Parker; he, Taylor. Var.: 1, 2, Parker; 3, Taylor. Amat.: 1, 3, Farmer; 2, vhc, Stevens. Var.: 1, Stevens. Nov.: 1, Tuck. Ch. Nor.: 1, spl. Parker; 2, spl. Taylor. Country Rambles

LOCHGELLY C.B.S.

Members had their annual ramble on June 5 to Blairhill Estate, Rumbling Bridge, by the kind permission of Capt. Haig, leaving the Minto Hotel at 8 in the morning by brake. The weather was very threatening when we left, and we received a heavy shower just before we arrived at our destination, but it cleared off and broke up into a splendid day. On our way along the country roads, between hedgerows just beginning to get into their best, they being late owing to the backwardness of the season, many species of our commoner birds were to be seen, such as Yellow Buntings, Chaffies, Greenies, Blackbirds, Thrushes, Linnets, Tits, etc., whilst by the brooks were noticed a few Wagtails, Greys, and Pieds, all of which seemed to be busy with their maternal duties, as their beaks were all well filled with the wants of nestlings. On leaving the Rumbling Bridge Hotel, our headquarters, we entered by the main entrance, passing by the lodge-keeper's house, at the back of which we entered into the woods, and were soon spread out in skirmishing order. J. Adamson, of "Prince Charlie" fame, drew first blood, a Blackbird's nest and one egg, followed by his son Bob, a chip of the old block, with a Thrush's and two eggs. Shortly after we arrived on the banks of the far-famed Devon, where many species were noted. The Dippers were not so plentiful this time. I noted two pairs of Yellow Wagtails, and while going along the bank many nests were found, mostly Blackbirds' and Thrushes'; empty, but nearly all showing recent occupation. We arrived at the falls, the sound of which was deafening, owing to the recent rains. The river was in full flow, and the spray from the falls was rising to a great height. It was indeed a wonderful sight to see the waters tumbling down and come boiling up between the rocks. Turning to our right, we came to the family private burying ground, which was beautifully laid out, and, leaving here, we passed into the gardens and through the glasshouses, where the vines were well forward, while the tomatoes were almost ripe, and oranges and figs were to be seen. Upon the remark from one of the company that it was just to the warm side for the Canaries we passed out to the fresh air into the gardens, where the keeper, our guide, showed us a pheasant's nest and eight eggs behind a flower. Our guide then led us through the glen, then back by the drive to the main road, and after a walk of half a mile we entered a young plantation, where J. Adamson flushed a Mallard duck off nine eggs, followed shortly afterwards by A. Kirk, who flushed a Mallard off eight eggs. P. Kirk found a Thrush and one egg. After we had beaten it through we crossed the main road into a dense wood, where a Wood-pigeon's nest was seen on the top of a tall fir. A. Strachan climbed up and found two eggs. W. Cooper found a Thrush and four young, J. Jeffrey a Blackbird's and five young, A. Linton a Wren's and three eggs, R. Stewart a Song Thrush and three young, J. Forsyth a Blackbird's and two eggs, R. Stewart a Chaffinch and three young, R. Adamson a Chaffinch and two young. While crossing over a hill trying to locate a Sandpiper's nest M. Smith found a Peewit's and three eggs. As time was almost up, we retraced our steps, passing on our way a run with over 100 ducklings, and a pretty sight they made as they all waddled about together. We arrived shortly afterwards at our headquarters, where a hearty tea was done full justice to, after a ramble through the private grounds of the hotel, where the famous golden eagle was still at his old post, looking none the worse for his long confinement. We wended our way down to the rocks, where many interesting sights were to be seen, as the Devon struggled to get its way through. Messrs. A. Strachan and A. Anderson found a Yellow Wagtail's and three eggs. Back at the hotel, we found the brake waiting, and we were soon on the road, leaving our guide, the head keeper, Mr. Mellhwaith, after having spent a most enjoyable day, thanks to his interest on our behalf. We arrived back in Lochgelly after 9 o'clock.—W. Grewar, Sec. pro tem.

BRIGHTON & HOVE C.B.S.

The annual ramble was held on Sunday, June 11, when enjoyable weather lent to the pleasure of the day. Leaving Brighton at 8.30. "It's nice to get up in the morning," Barcombe was reached just after 9. After a walk through the fields and lanes we reached our destination, Marstake Common, where we ramble at will. Finds, although scarce, were noted of Linnets, Greenfinches, Chaffinches, Wrens, Blackbirds, Thrushes, etc. Club special for best find went to Mr. J. Brown. After a long day in the woods we tramped across to Barcombe Mills, catching the 8.11 back, and voting this ramble to have been one of the jolliest. Members in the party included Messrs. W. Firth (vice chair.), J. Brown, E. Loomes, Master Loomes, J. E. Parsons, A. B. Parsons, Master Parsons, A. Wall, and Will H. Gibb (Sec.).—W. H. Gibb, Sec.

COALTOWN OF WEMYSS C.B.S.

Members held their first ramble on June 5 through the beautiful estate of the Right Hon. the Earl of Rothes, Leslie, permission being granted us by the factor, Mr. Smith, who also sent a guide. Mr. Thomson, Leslie, had everything arranged for our coming, and we have to thank him for a splendid day. We started from Wemyss about 9.30 in a downpour of rain. It looked anything but a day for a ramble, but no one thought of turning back, so we arrived in Leslie by charabanc about 11. It looked a bit better, and a fresh wind had sprung up. We walked to the lodge gates at the Lothrie Bridge, where we met our guide. We were in luck in getting this gentleman to show us round the estate. It was now fair, but grass and undergrowth being wet, we kept to the drive of splendid beeches, the best in Scotland, with rhododendrons clustering round the foot of them, all in full bloom; what a picture it would make for an artist to paint. As we go round a bend in the drive we come in full view of Leslie House, the Scottish home of the Earl and Countess of Rothes. The house is situated on the bank of the Lothrie and River Leven, with its long, broad terraces running well down to the Leven. We had a walk through the gardens, and everything here shows his Lordship's love for birds; privet and other fancy shrubs are cut in the shape of pheasants and other wild birds. The sun is now shining, and the prospects of a splendid ramble are good. We now enter the woods, but keep well to the footpaths. Birds are plentiful; the Chaffinch and Greenfinch are sounding their notes from every tree. The first nest is a Blackie's, and four eggs, found by the youngest member of the party; further along is a brood of young Pheasants, running and hiding in the tufts of grass. A giant beech has been blown down, and in its upturned roots we find three nests: a Blackbird's, just finished; a Chaffinch's, with three eggs; and a Wren's. But Mrs. Wren was "fly"; her nest was placed so that nobody could get to it, so we did not know how she was getting on. We now take along the side of a fir wood, a favourite place for nests. Although most of the party kept to the side of the wood, two or three ventured into the wood in search of nests, and it was a case of a nest in every tree. Blackbirds, Thrushes, Chaffinches, Greenfinches, and Hedge Sparrows galore. The softbills had mostly young; the Finches, eggs. We can also hear the twitter of the Redpoll in amongst the trees. We have never seen as many nests in one wood before, and our guide, on being asked about it, told us it was always a favourite place for nests, as the birds were never disturbed. Pressing on through the wood we come to the turnpike road, and make our way to Leslie for lunch. Starting again, about 2.30, we crossed through fields to the Curling Pond, and there we found some young Water Hens sporting about in the water. Crossing back through the fields, we entered the East Lodge gates, and strolled along the long drives, enjoying the song of the birds in the trees, and the beautiful glen, with the River Leven rushing through it. Turning to the left we descended to the river side; walking here was pretty soft, and we were glad to get on to a footpath. This path led us to the duck pond, with dozens of young ducks skipping across the water. It was grand to see the old birds swimming about with their young, and guiding them to the shelter of a friendly island. We walked round the pond and made our way back to Leslie House, where we met some Leslie fanciers, who joined us in our march back to Leslie. We had had a long walk through the most beautiful grounds in Fifeshire, and all having enjoyed it, we thanked our guide for the attention he had given us in pointing out places of interest, and giving us their history. We now proceed to Mr. Henderson's for tea; the table laden with good things. Mr. Henderson made sure that here too we would enjoy ourselves. After tea we went to the Rothes Arms, where we held a meeting with our Leslie members. The following judges were appointed: Borders and Yorks., Mr. McAdam, Lasswade; Norwich and British, Mr. Smeaton, Musselburgh. It was also settled that we include full classes for Scotch Fancies in our schedule, and secure a judge for same. The show to be held on the first Saturday in December; proceeds to go for the Wemyss Soldiers' Comforts Fund. Entry 1s. per bird. Prizes, 7s., 4s., 2s. This being all the business the members of Coaltown of Wemyss accorded Mr. Thomson, Leslie, a hearty vote of thanks for making all arrangements, and enabling us to enjoy a splendid day.—Alex. Storror, Hon. Sec.

BRISTOL C.B.S.

A very successful ramble took place on Saturday, June 17, the weather being grand. By the kind permission of the President of the society (Lieut.-Colonel George A. Gibbs, M.P., who is at present with his regiment doing his bit), the lovely estate at Tynsfield, Somerset, was visited. About 30 members and friends having turned up, a start was made about 2.30 by charabanc, reaching Belmont Lodge at 3.45. While going through the woods, shrubberies, etc., some very fine specimens of British birds, especially the larger varieties, were found, and some good knowledge was gained both by the champion as well as the novice. At about 6.30 a halt was made at the "Battle Axe," Wraxall, where a good tea was prepared, and greatly enjoyed by all. Tea over, short speeches were made by Mr. Buckland, Mr. Tristram, and Mr. Greenslade, the latter expressing a hope that rambles like this would come more often in the future, as he thought they induced others to take up the cage bird hobby. A vote of thanks was accorded to the Secretary for the carrying out of the arrangements, and a start was made for home, Bristol being reached about 10.15, all having enjoyed themselves.—J. A. Withers, Sec.

Twitterings.

Mr. J. Gibbons (Wolverhampton) will judge Burton-on-Trent Summer show, July 22, writes Mr. A. Wood, Hon. Sec.

Societies desiring the patronage of the Yorkshire C.C. must apply before July 1 to Mr. J. Greaves, 279, Hollings Road, Bradford. The annual F.F. Show of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. is fixed for July 1 at the Homing Societies' Club Rooms, Victoria Street, St. Mary's Gate. Mr. A. G. Davis will judge.

Mr. J. A. Greenslade, whose informative article on the Breeding and Management of Exhibition Canaries began in our issue dated June 10, and is continued this week, writes: "Up to now I have had fairly good breeding results this season, having about 60 youngsters doing very well. I am also pleased to tell you that yesterday I received a cheque from Mr. Crisp for £22 2s. for being the winner of the S.Y.C.C. competition last season. I also won the Elsmore Cup for most points with unlighted birds in the same class, and had a yellow hen claimed at Cheltenham for £5 5s., all bred by myself. I suppose if it had not been for this bit of success I should not have had the courage to send you the article, but now feel glad I did so, and shall be pleased to help CAGE BIRDS any time I can do so."

BREEDING CANARIES FOR PROFIT.
THE COLONY SYSTEM v. THE CAGE SYSTEM.

ON Monday, June 19, the respective merits of the colony system of breeding Canaries in bird-rooms or aviaries and the system of breeding in cages which is more generally adopted by Canary breeders in Great Britain occupied largely the attention of the members of the Central Committee, who are meeting weekly at the offices of CAGE BIRDS to discuss a working scheme for the organisation of Canary breeders in Britain with a view to the capture of the German trade in Canaries. Ultimately the Committee expressed the view that the opinions of breeders on this subject would be of great assistance to them. We agree with that view, and we venture to make an appeal to all who have suitable experience to contribute to CAGE BIRDS their views on the comparative merits of the two systems. For the guidance of those who are disposed to help the Committee in this way we suggest that they should in the course of their contributions deal with the following questions:

Which system do you prefer?

Why do you prefer it?

What is the cost per bird per week for up-keep?

What do you consider to be the cheapest form of efficient aviary (or breeding cage)?

I would like to see as many fanciers as possible attend our F.F. Show at the Crown Hotel, July 1, writes Mr. G. Broome, Hon. sec. Blanacon C.B.S.; the show opens at 5. A hearty invitation is given to fanciers in the district to help us to get funds to run our open show with success.

Ramsden's Pure Peppers.—For the remainder of the season the post office authorities collect my parcels on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday mornings only. The railway companies collect when they can, and as labour is likely to be still more scarce in the future, delays will probably occur. Customers should therefore order well in advance. Owing to the scarcity of high grade pepper I cannot open new trade accounts this season. Every endeavour will be made to supply old customers, both wholesale and retail. Ramsden's peppers are super. quality. Sold packed in cisterns only.—J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London. (Advt.)

OBITUARY.

MR. J. McLENNAN (Edinburgh).

I regret very much to inform you, writes Mr. W. Allan, of the death of one of our most esteemed and respected Scotch Fancy members. Mr. John McLennan, Piershill Lodge, Edinburgh, who passed away on June 12 after a short illness, and was interred in Piershill Cemetery on June 14. The funeral was attended by a large company of friends and fanciers from both town and country. By his death we have lost one who has always taken a very keen interest in shows and had the welfare of the fancy at heart, and who gained the confidence and respect of all with whom he came in contact. I am sure all who knew him will extend their sympathy to his widow and family in their bereavement.

Mr. R. Lile, sec. of the Edinburgh P.A., of which the deceased was President, also writes referring to the loss the Society and Scotch Fancy breeders in general have sustained, and expressing sympathy with Mrs. McLennan and family.

MR. JNO. KENNEDY (Paisley).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. Neil O'Donnell, sec. and treas. Old Club, Paisley, that I have to announce a loss to the fancy in the person of Mr. John Kennedy, who died on June 15. He was well known to Scotch fanciers in Scotland, being an enthusiastic breeder and exhibitor for over 40 years. His loss will be felt by his club mates in Paisley, particularly the young fanciers, as he was always ready to give them his advice and the benefit of his experience in breeding this section of the fancy. At his interment in Woodside Cemetery on June 17 the fancy was represented by the following gentlemen:—Mr. A. Livingstone, Mr. Alex. Baird, Mr. A. M. Baird, Mr. J. Paterson, Mr. John Donnelly, Mr. Thomas Stewart. I wish, on behalf of his club-mates and fanciers generally, to extend to his widow and family our deepest sympathy in their sad loss.

The Red-backed Shrike in Ireland.

Lieut. Dawson, R.F.A., writing to "The Field," says that he saw in April, near Athlone, a pair of Red-backed Shrikes, that they were there when he left Ireland, and he feels sure they will remain to nest. The Editor of "The Field" says, in a footnote, that so far as he is aware this is the only record of the Red-back Shrike in Ireland since one was shot near Belfast in 1878. Two occurrences at Irish lighthouses have been recorded, however: one at Wicklow Head Light, in 1908, and one at the Fastnet Rock Light, in 1910.

A new society has been formed for Lancaster, co. Durham, under the name of the Lancaster F.F. and C.B.S. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. McKey, West Terrace, Burnhope, nr. Lancaster (see Club Notices).

Better Late Than Never.

The "Daily Telegraph" says that thousands of Starlings and Jackdaws are to be seen in Ashted Woods, where the birds have entirely cleared the trees of the caterpillars which had stripped the oaks of leaves.

Gulls' Eggs in Thousands.

Around the edges of a pool on a Welsh moor, the nests of Black-headed Gulls are so thickly placed that it is said there is absolutely no room for another. Thousands of eggs have been collected by the keepers.

An Inquisitive Great Tit.

The Avicultural Magazine says that Mr. C. Barnaby Smith recently received a letter in a torn and pecked condition. The envelope was endorsed by the authorities, "Damaged by bird building in letter box."

Another Club Sec Called Up.

Our Sec, Mr. Geo. Cant, has joined His Majesty's Army, and is now in training with the "Queen's" 24th London Regiment, writes Mr. W. Hodson. I have undertaken to carry on his work as sec. of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. during his absence, and shall be obliged if members and fanciers will address all communications respecting the society to me at 99, Upland Road, East Dulwich, S.E.

How the Pied Wagtail Makes Love.

Among the many things for which the war has been responsible are the letters on bird life from soldiers in the firing line, which have been for many months almost a daily feature of our newspapers, and which tend to show that in the ranks of our glorious fighters there are many keen observers who are able as efficiently to note the ways of the birds they love, as to fight their enemies. Not the least interesting among these is one from a soldier who writes as follows:—"In spite of the hourly procession of killed warriors, a pair of Pied Wagtails have scooped out a recess in the sunny side of a trench, and constructed therein a pretty little nest lined with horse hair. Viewed from above, a rooty twig or two alone betrays its presence, and none of the men seems to be aware of the little home they jump over daily. About eight days were occupied in constructing the nest, and yet, often as I watched, I only once saw the birds carrying material for building purposes. The day on which the nest was completed the pair—or rather the male bird—engaged in some love-making evolutions outside the trench. At all events, he was showing himself off to the best advantage, and very pretty indeed he appeared. Crouching about a yard away from the hen, he would raise both his wings—the right always somewhat higher than the left—in a curved manner, with the primary feathers and the tail trailing on the ground. The head and neck were stretched forward, with feathers erect, like those of the ruff in a fighting attitude. As he advanced thus from the front towards his wife, she would allow him to approach within a few feet seemingly regardless of his presence, then suddenly she would dart forward and drive him off. It was interesting to observe this amusing little piece of by-play, which was repeated four or five times. Ultimately the cock bird grew tired, and flew off to the river near at hand, leaving the hen to feed quietly alone. The four eggs, the usual number in a clutch, were laid on successive days, incubation commencing on the fourth evening."

JUDGES OF CAGE BIRDS

The judge for our Red Cross show, Nov. 3 and 4, writes Mr. D. McFarlane, Hon. Sec. Barrow C.B.A., is Mr. Houlton, St. Helens, not Mr. Houghton, as stated in my letter of last week.

More than Extra Value.

I think CAGE BIRDS is more than extra value for the extra penny. I have been especially pleased to see the extra drawings of noted winners which you have been giving us lately, writes Mr. T. W. Wren, Oxford.

A Twenty-Pound Note

"Up the Spout." A story is going the rounds that a house painter in Sheffield has discovered a £20 note in the nest of a House Sparrow lodged in the rain-water spout of the house he was engaged in repainting.

Coco-nut Shells as Nest Pans.

Writing of a small bird sanctuary in Berwickshire, a correspondent to "The Scotsman" says:—"But what has proved as attractive to the birds as anything has been the shells of the coco-nuts procured for the purpose of feeding the Tits in the winter time. Some of the nuts had a hole made in one of the ends, others were cut into halves. After having served their first purpose, they were affixed, like the boxes, to the trees: A year ago a pair of common Wrens took possession of one, and reared a young brood in it. The nest was lined very sparsely with moss, but even then it was difficult to understand how such a large family could be crowded into such narrow quarters. A half-nut nailed to another tree was occupied, as soon as they arrived, by a pair of Spotted Flycatchers. They reared a brood in its cup-like cavity last year, and have eggs in it this year again. These birds must be exceedingly fond of such nesting sites, for a second pair are carrying material to another half-nut on the trunk of a sycamore in a little wood by the house."

THE BREEDING AND MANAGEMENT OF EXHIBITION CANARIES.

By J. A. GREENSLADE, Bristol.

A Lecture read before the members of the Bristol C.B.S.

If the cock is to be used with another hen it is very desirable to have the second hen's cage as far away from the first as possible, or there will be some difficulty in getting No. 2 to nest at all, and if she does she will very likely upset No. 1 in doing so.

I believe if one had the facility to keep idle cocks in a separate room during the breeding season it would be very advantageous and produce better results in sitting and feeding than when a lot of cocks, some mated and calling all the time, are kept in the breeding room.

During the period of incubation the hen's diet should be plain canary seed, and I believe it is best to have as large a kind as can be got. Should she be inclined to be constipated, a pinch of rape occasionally is beneficial.

How to Use Egg-Food.

When the eggs are due to hatch, about the 13th to 14th day, a small supply of egg-food made with hard-boiled egg and breadcrumbs or crushed biscuits, should be given in a shallow vessel. Many advocate giving only the yolk of egg for the first few days, but in my opinion it is much too rich and unpalatable. If you want hens to feed well, the food must be to their liking, and I find that both yolk and white, mixed with household breadcrumbs, with a little sugar added and well mixed, is much relished, and is about the best and cheapest. It may safely be used from the first day, but care should be used in regulating the amount given as a good number of so called "sweaters" are made, I feel sure, by overfeeding in the early days.

My experience has proved that greenfood during the first four days is positively harmful, but that it may safely be given from then onwards, using only a very small quantity at first. Watercress ranks first with me as a greenfood, because it is easily procured regularly by us city dwellers, and does not scour so much as lettuce, but if I were able always to obtain chickweed I should prefer it to anything. It is no use having it one day, and falling back on watercress the next, because that creates diarrhoea in both old and young, and trouble is bound to follow.

Young birds can only grow and keep healthy so long as their excrement is sufficiently consistent to enable the hen to clear the nest of it as soon as it is voided, which she does until the young are about ten days old, after which time they are able to evacuate over the edge of the nest.

Should the excreta become too liquid for the hen to so dispose of it, there is no alternative but for her either to desert them or brood them in a wet and foul nest. In either case she is bound to get a bad character, and such epithets as starver or sweater are heaped upon her, when really she deserves our sympathy.

When to Give Hemp and Rape.

Another aggravating cause towards this unhappy state of things is the giving of hemp and soaked rape, as many do much too early, as neither of these are really suitable until about the ninth day; from then on, hemp either whole or cracked is very beneficial, and is a necessary adjunct to the hen's diet. Soaked or scalded rape is also a good addition, but should be left out until about the fourteenth day, but should the hen be also very keen on greenfood, and use a lot of it, she should only have a small quantity of either rape or greenfood, and then not both together.

One thing I might have mentioned a little earlier is about perches. While the chicks are very young it is best to have the perch the nest end of the cage, placed immediately over the pan, and about half an inch from the edge. When so placed the hen jumps up on the perch, and if the young happen to be lodged up under her wings, they fall back into the pan again instead of on to the floor, which they will often do if the perch is well away from the nest, or placed below it. Should any young be found on the cage floor never give them up for dead, no matter how still and cold they may be. Place them between your palms and breathe heavily on them until you feel some movement, then put them back under the hen, and she will soon put matters right.

Under the treatment described I find the youngsters generally come up on the edge of the nest for a casual survey about the 15th day, and leave it entirely about the day after.

Should the hen be keen on going to nest again at this time, and they generally are, it is much the better plan to replace the cock bird if he had been previously removed, and place the youngsters in a nursery cage.

The plan I adopt is to use a Yorkshire show cage by hanging it, drinker hole end first, on to the cage fronts with the cage door open; in this way the hen can feed the young through the drinker hole, but the perch at that end should be entirely removed, so that she cannot pluck them, for if the perch were left in their tails would most likely soon be pulled out when they stood on it. The babes can then be supplied with egg-food in a tin drawer placed under the show cage door, but the perch at this end should be placed back a few wires to free it from the drawer.

A "WEE GEM."

This pretty little Clear Yellow Border Canary won 2nd prize at Redhill Show for Mr. J. H. Madagan, Cheltenham.

When they are able to eat up egg-food themselves without chirping to their parents when hungry, they can be placed by themselves. I believe that it is best to put all the nest of young in one cage at first, and not too large, the store cages used for separate cocks are plenty large enough, until they are able to eat whole seed.

The Management of the Young.

The young at this stage want careful management, and I feel sure many are killed by overfeeding. When first placed by themselves the first thing to do is to give them a good supply of grit, as previously described, as without it they cannot properly digest their food. Egg-food should be given morning and evening, with cracked hemp at midday for the first week, after which time only two meals should be given; egg-food in the morning, and cracked hemp in the afternoon, with soaked or scalded rape instead of hemp on alternate days.

During this time plain canary should be within reach, with a full hopper hung on the cage with a sprinkling of dry rape on the top to attract them to it. Here let me again advise the use of the small variety of canary seed, providing of course it is sound and clean. My reason for doing so is that it is easier to crack, and is not so hard and large to digest. I believe many good youngsters are lost annually by swallowing large canary kernels, which fill the crop and gizzard, and there lodge and ferment.

There are two reasons for this; first, the seed is too large and hard; secondly, what grit they have been able to get has not been sufficiently coarse or rough to masticate it, whereas with the small seed they shell and eat it with avidity, without its being either soaked or crushed, and keep always bright and lively until ready to moult.

When they are able to shell and eat canary seed readily hemp should be cut out of the diet altogether, and the soaked rape only given occasionally to take the place of greenfood, which I never give to youngsters until after the moult. But the morning meal or softfood can and should be given until the colour-feeding begins. As a change from egg-food bread and milk can be given occasionally, but I personally do not care to use much of it, only as a laxative and a fat reducer, for which purpose I know nothing safer and better.

When their tails are grown to full length they should be placed in flights in groups, or the best of them in couples in roomy cages, with the show cage often hung on with seed placed in the trough, and the birds frequently run out into it and left then for a time. They will thus train themselves and get used to being handled. Under this treatment they should do well until they are ready to moult.

The Bath, and the Drinking Water.

One thing I have not yet mentioned is the bath. I am a great believer in water, but under certain conditions. In the first place the aspect of your room is a big factor in this matter. If the aspect is a sunny one the bath may be given with good results upon as many occasions as is convenient, but should the room be cold, and not facing the together, and as this brings us to that subject, I must here say that to be in any way successful on the show bench it is essential that the birds should be teeming with natural colour, and then be colour-fed properly to do their type and other good points proper justice.

When and How to Colour Feed.

I usually start colour-feeding about the third week in July, but in any case the first round of youngsters should be started on it when they are ten weeks old, so that it may be well incorporated in them before the new feathers begin to form.

During this time it is best to place the largest and best in twos or threes in separate cages, and the smaller and more indifferent ones left in flights, and not too crowded or they are likely to pluck one another.

Regarding the kind of colour food to use, I do not care to recommend any particular vendor, to another's disadvantage, feeling that they are all good, and have their adherents. I personally have tried several, but believe that with them all the better results are obtained by an addition of three ozs. of hot Natal to each pound of cold tasteless. It is very important to well mix the two kinds, and while these are being blended 1lb. of castor sugar can be added to each 4lbs. of pepper, but if sugar is included now you must not use it later to any large extent.

Many advocate mixing linseed meal with the colour food, for the purpose of imparting sheen and glossy finish, but I have found that it is of little use in this direction, and only makes the colour food very relaxing, thereby passing through the birds too quickly to have the best results.

Of course the pepper must be given to the birds in a palatable state, and a vehicle which is to their liking and suitable from a health point of view is essential. I find a well-known proprietary article of cod liver oil food is very good, especially if a large stock is kept, but I believe if I had the time at my disposal I should prefer egg-food, made rather plain with more bread than is used in the breeding season, for the latter part of the moult specially, as at the latter end, their systems do not use up so much of the feather making properties contained in the cod liver oil food, which then goes to fat instead, which puts the bird out of shape, especially if your variety is the Yorkshire.

Some Colour Fixing Agents.

When the new colour is well showing down the sides it is necessary to give something to fix the colour fast in the new feathers. Some use sulphate of iron, some citrate of iron and ammonia, while others swear by chemical food, but care should be used not to get the birds bound up too tight, or very likely bowel trouble will arise, or they may stick in the moult.

I believe the best of the three is the citrate of iron and ammonia, as the ammonia counteracts the irritating properties of the iron. It is very cheap, and a couple of drops when made into a syrup in the water three times a week, to make it a light brown colour is quite sufficient.

When the moult reaches the head, a little mixed seed is a good change, and is well relished after so much soft food, but the colour food must be insisted upon until some weeks even after they seem to have completed the moult, as there are still a lot of small feathers underneath, not visible to the eye.

Of course, during this time we shall all be on the watch for some extra good specimens which we hope will be able to hold their own later, but that is not enough. They must be run out in their show cages, no matter what the variety, to enable them to gain confidence, so that when the judge is sizing them up they will do themselves, and you, a full measure of justice by showing all their good points at their best.

In conclusion let me say that my main object in penning this article is merely to assist the novice, and I trust that a few may hereby benefit. Perhaps also some of the birdy infantile mortality that is often prevalent, even among experienced fanciers, that have gone off the line a bit, may be avoided, but should anyone now be following a method that has served him well, I hope he will not let these notes of mine tempt him to depart from it.

Some things I don't do and do not intend to do:—(1) Take birds out in breeding condition to a matched pair show; (2) Worry a hen to come off her nest when sitting; (3) Show youngsters that look very promising at an evening table show, or a summer tent show, in their Nest Feather; (4) Get a swollen head and think I have something this time that is going to lick creation; (5) Miss getting my CAGE BIRDS on Friday mornings.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the flea mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else.

sun until late in the day, great care must be exercised only to offer the bath on dry and open days, and not more than once a week to old birds.

I don't care to be very free with the bath to very young birds at all, as I feel sure that many get chilled in this way, and bowel trouble arises through it, but in the summer months, when they are well on seed, and about to break into moult, the bath is very beneficial if put in early in the morning.

Regarding drinking water, I give this right through in its simple state, but think Bristol water is better for being boiled and allowed to cool before using. After some varied experience on this matter I am of the opinion that the less drugs and concoctions used the better, but if you must give something in the water to satisfy yourself that all is well, then syrup of rhubarb four parts and tincture of gentian one part mixed, and a few drops in the drinking water occasionally is a good medicine, and likely to stave off bowel trouble.

Let Enough Suffice.

Many fanciers make the error each year of continuing their breeding operations much too long and late, and thereby exhaust their stock birds, and give themselves quite unnecessary trouble and disappointment. I have never found it worth the candle to sit hens after June is out, and generally satisfy myself with not more than two nests of young from each hen. Young hatched out after the middle of July never thrive or mature like the earlier ones, and in my opinion the early ones are retarded in their moult and kept back from reaching the necessary condition for the early October shows, if they have late and sickly youngsters in the same room that are only just moulting.

Another advantage of breaking up the pairs early is that you are generally able to start colour-feeding all the birds practically

How to Capture the Canary Trade.

Prospects of Breeders. Husband the Stock Birds.

THE present is a critical time for breeders of Canaries in Great Britain; not critical in the sense of impending danger, but in the sense that an opportunity of national importance may be lost.

It has been placed beyond the shadow of a doubt that this war has provided British breeders with the chance of their lives. Hundreds of thousands of birds which, in the usual order of things, find their way out of Germany to this and other countries, have failed, this season, thanks to the activity of the Allied Fleets, to pass out of the Fatherland.

As a consequence, the demand for Canaries has exceeded the supply in a manner which has been a revelation. British breeders have benefited, but they have been unable to obtain more than a limited advantage, because they were not in a position to fully satisfy the market.

It is a national duty to cripple Germany's trade, and the Government is at this moment seeking for the best means to take advantage of the enemies' distress, and to capture trades which have hitherto been monopolised by alien enemy countries.

The Canary Breeder's "Bit."

It has already been shown that one of the enemy trades which may be captured is the enormous trade in singing Canaries. How to make this capture is precisely the problem that the Canary Trade Committee, which meets weekly in London, is trying to solve.

The trade is there, the opportunity to capture it is here, and the opportunity must not be lost, for it is a golden one, and will reveal itself in pounds, shillings, and pence.

If the ambition of the Central Committee be realised, what will be the result? The production of Canaries will be largely increased to meet the demands of a certain market, and the money obtained for that increased supply of birds will go into the pockets of the breeders.

The breeders will require more seeds and more appliances, and the traders who supply those commodities will have to meet the larger demand to their own benefit. Indeed, there is no trade associated with the production of Canaries which will not benefit, and benefit largely in the long run.

The Central Committee are, at the moment, endeavouring to work out a scheme of general organisation, which, it is hoped, will convince everybody concerned of the real advantages to be derived from a sincere combination of all parties to achieve the desired result—that is, the capture of the German trade in Canaries.

In the meantime, the breeder, no matter how large or how small may be the measure of his operations, may do much to prepare the ground.

Look to the Future.

For instance, the breeding season is half-way through, and promising young birds are already "on the sticks." Let each breeder refuse to part with his young stock until he shall have fully and carefully considered by how many birds he may be able to increase his breeding stock for next year.

He may contemplate devoting a room, or a portion of a room for colony breeding, or he may decide to breed in cages. If his cash be scarce he may decide to spend a few happy hours in the winter, knocking up cages from grocers' boxes and loose wire fronts.

In any case, if he is sincere in his support of the movement to capture the Canary trade he will look round for all available space suitable for increasing the scale of his operations next year, and, having decided that point, he will be careful to keep in hand a sufficient number of birds to occupy these spaces.

In other words, he will place himself in a position to increase his revenue from next year's operations to the largest possible extent. Thus, while doing a good turn to his own pocket and to his recreative fancies, he will simultaneously prepare himself to reap the fullest advantage of organisation when it arrives.

A Busy Evening for the Committee.

The Central Committee had a busy evening at CAGE BIRDS offices on Monday, June 19. There were present the following gentlemen: Messrs. E. Carl (Chairman); G. Crabb, President L.P.O.S.; W. T. East, Leyton C.B.A.; H. J. Fulljames, Cage Birds League; H. W. Gutierrez, British Roller C.C.; H. J. Kybert, East Ham C.B.S.; E. C. Last, Crystal Palace and Penge C.B.S.; J. W. Ramsden; J. Robson, L.C.B.A.; T. T. Trower, W. H. Vale, Clapham C.B.A.; and the Organising Secretary.

To avoid confusion in the unavoidable absence of the Chairman, Mr. Carl suggested that a Vice-Chairman should be appointed. The name of Mr. H. J. Fulljames (Cage Birds League) was immediately proposed by Mr.

Gutierrez, and at once accepted unanimously by the meeting. Mr. Fulljames acknowledged the honour, and agreed to serve.

A good deal of time was occupied on matters of detail in breeding, with the object of eventually offering advice to breeders who may come within the scheme, and a summary of the decision arrived at will appear in due course.

From what was said by certain representatives present it was clear that a desire existed amongst some societies to know to what extent the societies and the members of the Committee individually were or might be committed.

Mr. Carl replied to this to the effect that up to the end of six months they could not, under his promise, incur any liability whatever, and he reiterated his undertaking to underwrite the capital of the organisation for six months, pointing out that it was within the power of the Committee to deal with the future with an entirely free hand.

In this way the question of finances was developed, and eventually the Organising Secretary was instructed to prepare a working scheme of organisation, covering the problem of finance, with other matters, for the discussion of the Committee at a future meeting.

In the course of conversation reference was made to fears in certain quarters that the scheme was being regarded as a movement that might eventually conflict with the interests of traders.

This suggestion drew from Mr. Carl the following interesting statement:—"In supporting this scheme it is far from my intention to injure the traders. I wish to benefit them. I wish to put them in a position that would certainly be of as great advantage to them as it will be to the breeders of this country. I am actuated entirely by a desire to benefit Canary breeders first of all, and Canary traders secondly, and I don't want any impression to get abroad that this scheme has as its basis a desire to injure Canary traders."

As a view was expressed that the opinions of readers of CAGE BIRDS on the breeding of Canaries on the colony system, as compared with the cage-breeding system, might assist the Committee, Mr. Carl kindly promised to make an appeal to that effect in his paper.

How to Beat the Germans

SIR,—In your report of the last meeting of the committee dealing with the subject of capturing the German Canary trade I read the following remarks, which I consider of such vital interest to the subject as to warrant an expression of opinion from an outsider—or any outsider, as the more fanciers would enter the discussion the better it would be for all sides. In reply to Mr. Reeks' question whether British breeders could compete with the German in the matter of price we have this dialogue:

"Mr. Ramsden: We never can compete with the German for price.

Mr. Kybert: We can put up something better.

Mr. Ramsden: Produce a fairly good bird that can sing well, and you will get your price."

I venture to say that herein lies a very dangerous principle, and one that will quickly and effectually ruin the project if allowed to take root. If it means anything at all it means that British breeders could expect to place a "fairly good bird" that could sing well beside the German birds, whose vocal abilities are so well known and tested, and still ask and obtain a higher price for it. Such a course would be foredoomed to utter failure. It would be no competition at all, but would be simply giving the trade back to our enemies. When the public wants singing Canaries, if the German breeders put them on the market at 10s. each, or even less, its patriotism cannot safely or rightly be depended upon to pay 15s. each for similar quality singers. No; let British breeders wake up to the fact that it is an essential factor for success to be prepared to face real business competition both in quality and price. It would be a sign of weakness or incompetency to admit we could not compete with our rivals in price. What the German breeders have done, and will be prepared to do again, surely British breeders can do, and must do, if they hope to reap the reward, or the shame is ours. CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

HOW BRITISH BIRDS CHANGE THEIR PLUMAGE.

GREY WAGTAIL (Motacilla c. cinera).

ADULTS.—Complete moult from July to September. In February and March there is a moult involving the body-feathers and usually the innermost secondaries and central tail-feathers, but not usually the rest of the wings and tail, though rarely the whole tail and a good many inner wing-coverts are moulted. In winter the sexes do not greatly differ, the female being only slightly more buffish on the upper-breast and slightly paler yellow on the belly. In summer the male acquires a black chin and throat with broad white malar stripes and the breast becomes yellow like the belly. The female is never so black on the chin and throat, which are usually a mixture of white, black, and dull yellow.

JUVENILE.—The crown and mantle are greyish-brown instead of slate-grey as in the adult, the eye-stripe, chin, throat and upper-breast are pale buff with a few greyish-black mottlings on the sides of the throat, the rest of the breast and belly are very pale yellow, and the under tail-coverts brighter yellow, the fringes and tips of all the wing-coverts are buff.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile body-feathers, lesser and median wing-coverts, and usually greater wing-coverts, innermost secondaries and central pair of tail-feathers are moulted from July to September, but not the primary-coverts nor the rest of the wing- and tail-feathers. The male and female in this plumage are more brownish on the upper-parts than the adult, and the upper-breast is more buff even than in the adult female, while the belly is very pale yellow and often whitish. FIRST SUMMER.—Moult as adult. The male becomes like the adult, but it is probable that those females with the chin and throat white or yellowish-white without any black are first summer birds.

PIED WAGTAIL (Motacilla a. lugubris).

ADULTS.—Complete moult from August to November. There is a moult from January to March which involves the body-plumage and often the lesser wing-coverts, some inner greater and median wing-coverts, some innermost secondaries and the central tail-feathers, but not the primary-coverts nor the rest of the wing- and tail-feathers. In winter the mantle of the adult male has some dark grey feathers mixed with the black, while the adult female usually has more grey than the male and also has less dark flanks, and the wing-feathers and wing-coverts are tinged with brownish and are not so pure black. In summer, while the male has practically the whole upper-parts jet-black with only a few dark grey feathers here and there, the female has more dark grey and also the black of the breast does not extend so far down.

JUVENILE.—There is a narrow dark or blackish line across the fore-head and down the sides of the crown, otherwise the crown, like the mantle and back, is grey tinged with buffish-brown, the rump is sooty brown-black, but the upper tail-coverts are more glossy black like the adult, the lores, line over eyes and ear-coverts are dull buffish-white, mottled with dark smoke, the chin and throat are also dull white, many of the feathers, especially on the sides, being tipped with sooty brown-black, the crescentic breastband is also sooty brown-black, and the breast and flanks are smoke-grey, while the rest of the under-parts are duller white than in adults.

FIRST WINTER.—The juvenile body-feathers, lesser wing-coverts, most median and inner greater coverts, and some innermost secondaries are moulted from August to October, but not the primary-coverts nor the rest of the wing- and tail-feathers. The male differs from the adult male in being tinged with yellowish on the fore-head, ear-coverts and sometimes the chin and throat; the fore-head is also usually mottled with black, the back of the crown often has some grey feathers amongst the black ones, the mantle is dark grey slightly tinged with olivaceous, and has less black in it than the adult female in winter, the wing-feathers and wing-coverts are browner and have duller white edges and tips. The first winter female is very difficult to distinguish satisfactorily from the first winter male, but the crown has usually more grey in it and the mantle often has no black at all. FIRST SUMMER.—Moult as in adults, but some innermost secondaries, a good many greater and median wing-coverts, and the central tail-feathers are more regularly moulted than in the adults, while rarely the whole tail is moulted. The first summer male is indistinguishable from the adult female in summer, except that its wing-feathers and the unmoulted wing-coverts are much browner. The first summer female is very similar, but has a greyer mantle usually with very little black.

WHITE WAGTAIL (M. a. alba).

Moult as in the Pied Wagtail.

ADULT MALE. WINTER.—Much like the first winter male Pied Wagtail, but the mantle and scapulars purer and paler grey and never with black, the sides of the breast and flanks paler grey and the breast and belly purer white, the wing-feathers not so brown, more greyish-black (not so black as in the adult male Pied Wagtail), the tips of the wing-coverts usually not so pure white as in the adult male Pied Wagtail. SUMMER.—Like winter, but with the chin and throat entirely black.

ADULT FEMALE. WINTER.—Differs from first winter female Pied Wagtail in being grey on the fore-head with sometimes a little dusky-white showing, only the bases of the feathers being white; the crown is much greyer with less black and the mantle is paler and never with black. SUMMER.—The fore-head becomes white, slightly mottled with black, the crown black mixed with grey on the nape, the throat black and the chin a mixture of black and white.

JUVENILE.—Difficult to distinguish from that of the Pied Wagtail, but usually rather paler on the upper-parts and with no dark line across the fore-head.

FIRST WINTER MALE.—Like the adult winter female, but with rather more black on the crown. SUMMER.—Like the adult summer male, but with browner wing-feathers.

FIRST WINTER FEMALE.—Like the adult winter female but very rarely with any white showing on the fore-head and the crown grey with no black and usually tinged olivaceous. SUMMER.—Like the adult summer female but the fore-head less white and the chin with more white, the wing-feathers browner.

How to Keep Woodlarks.

SIR,—Will some fancier with the experience of keeping Woodlarks give the information as to whether, in their wild state, they are wholly insectivorous, or partly granivorous? My reason for asking is that, being a great admirer of the Woodlark, I have had several, but have failed to keep them for any length of time, although I keep other "Softbills," including Blackcaps, Skylarks, Thrushes, etc., in song and health without any trouble. The knowledge as to a suitable "stock food," etc., for these grand songsters would be much appreciated by myself, and, I feel sure, by a number of other admirers of the Bread and Milk for Handrearing British Birds.

SIR,—Now that the wild birds are in the midst of the breeding season, some of your readers may wish to hand-rear a few young birds, but may hesitate to do so from the difficulty of providing suitable food. May I say, through our paper, CAGE BIRDS, to these doubtful ones that they can successfully rear almost any kind of British bird on a diet of bread and milk. Perhaps some kinds of insectivorous birds might not thrive on this food, but with the addition of a little finely chopped meat I have reared Blackbirds and Thrushes, and by substituting boiled rape for the meat, have reared splendid specimens of Linnets, Chaffinches, Greenfinches, and Yellowhammers.

More Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids at Darvel.

SIR,—You will be wondering why I have not written you further about the Song-Thrush Hybrids. Sorry to say that owing to family trouble we failed to supply enough of the needed live food for the first nest, and all four young died at about a week old. The Blackbird hen immediately began making her new nest, and laid her first egg of the second clutch on May 21, laying another three on the three following days. On June 6 the first egg-shells were thrown out of the nest, and the following day I found three chicks hatched and one egg not.

The feeding has gone on as last season, and to-day, June 17, I notice the first one sitting on the edge of the nest. So far as I can see it appears just like the last ones. I have had Mr. Hopkin in watching the progress of the breeding operations, and no doubt he will send you a note of his observations to again verify my claim. I hope we may be fortunate this time in getting a cock reared. The last season's three are still doing all right, and there is no difficulty in catering for them.

Two Kinds of Virginian Cardinals.

SIR,—I do not understand Mr. J. H. Hanson's remarks upon the Virginian Cardinals. In the United States there is only one species, which breeds from Florida and right up through the Eastern States. The bill of the male, and the female's is almost as bright, is sealing-wax red, and the plumage of the male, as everyone knows, is glowing scarlet, with a black mask round the bill, the upper parts, with wings and tail, being a duller brownish-red. There is no Virginian Cardinal (or "Nightingale") that I know of, with a dark purple beak and legs. Mr. O. Salvin, writing in "The Ibis" in 1888, says, "We have now a large series of Cardinal Grosbeaks from the islands of the coast of Yucatan, besides several from the opposite mainland, and we altogether fail to see how they can be separated into races."

The song of the Cardinal Grosbeak is powerful, and has a kind of "jug-jug" in it, but there is little variety, although it is melodious. Neither in quality nor diversity of notes and stanzas can it be for a moment compared with the Nightingale.

I had a pair of Red Cardinals from Yucatan, but except that they were perhaps, a little smaller, both male and female were practically exactly the same to look at as the Red Cardinal found in the United States.

There is one which is different, but that is a South American bird—namely, Cardinalis phoeniceus, which is smaller and of a more orange-red, with a longer and more upright crest, but that also has a scarlet bill. Mr. Hanson is mistaken in saying that very few of the genuine Virginian Nightingales have been imported, "Virginian Nightingale" being, of course, synonymous with the Red Cardinal, which is perfectly easy to keep in captivity, where, moreover, it will breed readily.

I see that Mr. Hanson has that trick—is it indolence?—of talking of an English "gale." Surely we had enough of them last winter and early spring without being reminded of them! Why this mauling and docking of a bird's name which in its entirety brings back to one all that is charming and beautiful? It is an old protest of mine, which, if it has given offence, gives me far more as regards the reason for that protest. Supposing I write an article on birds in your useful publication in some such style as this: "I find the 'rows very troublesome, destroying the 'tins' nests and persecuting the 'lows. My gardener complains of the bulls, but does not object to the chaffs. A pair of 'nets have their nest in a gorse bush, and some 'starts have taken advantage of a bird-box. There are no 'gales in these parts, though one came along and blew down a magnificent cedar tree" ('dar tree, I suppose I ought to say, to save time!)

"Gale" means a singing bird; Nightingale, the bird that sings by night. "Gale" by itself means a violent wind, just as net means an article for catching fish, etc., etc.; yet why not write of 'nets for Linnets, just as much as 'gales for Nightingales?

"Khaki" Canaries.

SIR,—Khaki enjoys a very richly deserved popularity and esteem when it covers the mainly form of one of the brave defenders of Britain's honour, but I hope your readers will pardon my saying that it seems to me pedantry to carry the sentiment to the extent of applying the term to what are nothing more or less than cinnamon coloured Canaries. To dub them "khaki" Canaries, with the suggestion that it is something new and novel, could only lead to confusion and misunderstanding among new recruits to the fancy in the future, which, especially at this crucial stage, would be most unfortunate.

The Value of Pedigree Breeding

SIR,—In view of the interesting letters which have recently appeared in CAGE BIRDS pointing out the necessity of line breeding, for the production of exhibition stock, perhaps the following extract from the American "Pigeon News" will be of value; it is by the Editor, Mr. C. E. Twombly, and although it is written in reference to pigeons it applies equally to Canaries, or any kind of show bird.

"Personally, we are a great believer in in-breeding, and think this the only sure way to success. Mating two winners from different strains will seldom, if ever, produce the desired result, and this is one of the main reasons that beginners get discouraged. It takes at least three years to form any kind of a strain that will produce anything like the parents as a rule, and the longer a strain is bred in, the stronger the likelihood of a large percentage of show birds. This, of course, must be done with some sort of a system, and the strength of a strain must be kept up, but to reproduce type the blood must be there from both sides.

"Like does not beget like in pigeon breeding without close relationship. We have known large and successful strains to be built round one single specimen, and fanciers who have had an idea that an out-cross must be procured every year are never successful. We have one particular line in mind where the best daughter has been bred back to the father for the fourth generation, and the best yet bred from this line is the result.—Two lusty cocks in the first nest, with quality and size an improvement over either of the parents. It works the same way on the hen side. Procure the best you can to start with, and work on these lines, and the results will surprise you."

A Linnet Singing Judge's Cheery Letter from "Somewhere in Flanders."

SIR,—Perhaps you would like to hear from me again? Well, I am sending you another whether you like it or not, in case some of your readers would like a hint on how to keep and feed a Linnet for "proud" singing. Firstly, they must have good birds, and must keep them and their cages clean. To do that they must let their birds bath themselves regularly, or hand wash them if very dirty, and scrub the cages thoroughly clean. The birds should be fed on English rape as a staple diet, and a few tit-bits such as lettuce, cornflower seed, inga, dandelion, and thistle seed; not too much of the tit-bits, or the birds get so fat that they don't care for singing, they get more like a pig, and want to sleep.

I can tell you the wild birds here are good company, that is, when things are quiet, though the poor birds get a scare now and again. I would like to keep a bird that can stand this noise with all this scrap iron flying about, for I think he would stand anything. There is a Thrush here who deserves a V.C. for stopping, or a D.C.M. for he pipes away morning and night, and I am fairly in love with the bird. I have a Robin which comes to see me now and again; he picks the bits of meat that we throw away, and I think he has a job on sometimes, but he gets through it. There are lots of Sparrows in the early morn, shouting "Cheer up, cheer up," as much as to say we're sure to win. (There is that beastly Maxim gun at it again, spitting bullets 40 to the dozen. Naughty man, Fritz; he frightens all the birds away). We have a lot of rats here, and some of them can sing like a Norwich Canary, though they sing at night best, so we call them the Nightingales. They are nice company if they don't get running over your face when you are asleep, which they often do. There was one ran over a man's face in our dug-out, and I thought the Germans were attacking us by the way he yelled and jumped about. I used to like me pipe, but they send nowt but "tabs" out, so I am a tab smoker now. If a few of the old boys could see me now they would say "What a swank the judge is getting since he joined the Army. Once more I wish your valuable paper and all CAGE BIRDS readers the best of success. T. FARREY.

Successful Breeding of the Goldfinch-Chaffinch Hybrid.

SIR,—Some time ago, through being grouped up, I advertised in CAGE BIRDS the whole of my birds for sale, and through that advertisement I sold all of my birds excepting five Norwich Canaries and a few hybrid pairs in my outdoor aviary, which my wife promised to attend to if I had to go.

My group, being number 43, and there seeming no sign of it being called up until the end of the summer, I bought five more Norwich Canaries, and I am pleased to say I have 20 young Canaries all doing well, also several more hens sitting.

I have also got a young Hybrid five weeks old to-day, June 18, which I think is the first of the cross ever to be reared. It is between a Goldfinch cock and a Chaffinch hen.

Ule, the Little Owl

By G. H. LEWIN.

A story of the introduction of the Little Owls as birds of our countryside.

ABOUT Christmas time, a terrible storm of snow and hail came on, and held for three whole days; this was bad for Ule, who could do nothing but sit in the hollow of a tree in shelter waiting as patiently as possible for the storm to pass away.

As soon as it cleared, he was out hunting again, but he did not understand the white world around him, but he met another Owl who had passed through several winters, and who knew how this white world sometimes came between the autumn moult and the spring breeding time, but always passed away again.

His new-found friend taught Ule how, when the ground was snow-covered, to catch birds by taking them from their perches in the hedge at dusk, and also how to watch for the small field mice as they ran across the snow.

Strange Voices Calling.

Ule's first year of life had been somewhat uneventful, but when the winter was over, and he began to wander farther afield again, life seemed to hold more for him, for soon the budding of spring began to show everywhere, and Ule had strange voices calling upon him to get a mate.

As he flew from tree to tree, or sat upon a railing or a post, he would call "peu-peu-u" in long-drawn notes, hoping to hear an answering call, which for a long time never came, for he had wandered far away from where the birds of his kind lived. He did not know that the only little Owls on the whole countryside were those whose parents had been freed in the same park as his own; and that few had wandered so far as he, who had travelled quite twenty miles from his old home.

After some days of wandering and calling, with one or two narrow escapes from being shot, he heard an answering call, and to his joy found it was the same bird he had met at the beginning of the winter. They made much of each other, for both had wandered far away from their friends, but the country they were in was very like where they were born, except, that instead of a river running through it, there was a fine pool stretching some mile or more in front of them, with old timber just suited to their habits growing round in great profusion.

Ule Starts House-keeping.

They did not know at first the danger they were in, for in their new home, instead of being protected, they were pursued by every boy who saw them, and shot at by every man; for they were rarities, and so, of course, in accordance with the universal law of sportsmen, must be killed in order to prove that they were something different from the birds common in the district.

I hatched one of the same cross last year, but this only lived five days. I got the hen Chaffinch as a young bird in my garden in September, 1913, and this is the third summer in which she has bred young. The first year she had two Mealy Redpoll Hybrids and two clear nests. Last year she had three nests, but there was only one good egg in the three. This was when paired to a Siberian Goldfinch. I left the young bird with her, and it died on the sixth day, so this year I made up my mind to take the young away if she hatched any out, and I am pleased to say it is doing well.

I took the young bird away from the hen Chaffinch, which had herself hatched the egg, and put the Hybrid with a hen Canary which had four young hatched the day before. The Chaffinch has laid two other nests of eggs since, eight eggs in all, but all were clear, so that this one was the only good egg out of 12 in three nests. She is building her fourth nest again now, and the cock Goldfinch sits in the cage doorway while she sits on the nest. She has built twice in an old Thrush nest, in a bush, in my outdoor aviary, and once before in a small cage with the door taken off and hung in the aviary, and this is the cage in which she is again building.

Mr. Pike, the ex-secretary of Reading C.B.S., has seen the young bird, and has also seen the Goldfinch sitting in the doorway of the cage while the Chaffinch has been on her nest. I should be very pleased to show the young bird to any member of your staff who could call upon me on any Thursday afternoon. It is like the young Chaffinch in the neck, back, and chest. It is yellow in its wing flights, and is buttoned down the wings and tail like a young Goldfinch Mule. It also has two bars on its wings, the same as seen in Goldfinch Mules, and it has white on its shoulders like the Chaffinch; in the tail flights there is a greenish yellow tinge.

T. W. WREN.

They were, however, fortunate, for now that spring had come but few people carried guns, and the home they selected was in a hollow tree not far from the water, and where few folk went. They wandered together up and down the neighbouring land until at last Ule's mate, Brown-wing, stayed in the hole where they made their home, and did not come away until she had left a round, white-shelled egg. She added to it day by day, until there were seven of her treasures on the rotten wood and feathers which formed the bottom of the nest.

Carefully she kept guard over them, sitting closely, and only leaving for a short interval occasionally, while Ule took his station upon a rough stump under the shelter of the adjoining hedgerow, where he ate all his catches which his mate did not need.

One day, after she had sat for about a week, two men came by, and seeing the hole in the tree, one of them swung himself up by the branches and looked in where Brown-wing was covering her precious eggs. At first he could see nothing, as it was dark inside, and while he was peering in, Brown-wing slipped up a long, hollow branch and flew away; soon, however, he saw the eggs at the bottom of the hole, and taking one out, uttered an exclamation of astonishment, for they were eggs he did not know. The other man saw Brown-wing fly, and he, too, was puzzled, but Ule, flying from the hedgerow, sealed the fate of the eggs, for the men guessed what the birds were, and as they were rarities, the eggs must, of course, be taken in defiance of law, leaving Ule and his mate to grieve over their loss.

Second Attempt Successful.

The men often came to watch for the birds, and soon they found that another batch of eggs were being laid in a hole in an adjoining tree, but their collecting craze had been satisfied, and their only fear was that others as heartless as themselves would find the new home and harry it.

This time the birds were successful in keeping their treasures, the eggs were hatched, and four little balls of down appeared, ugly and shapeless, as Ule was himself when he first saw the dim light of the hollow tree where he was born.

A busy time the parents have until the youngsters can hunt for themselves, but they do not have so free a time as Ule and his brothers and sisters had, for they are in more dangerous quarters, and before the winter, two of them are shot, but the others learn a lesson from their deaths, and manage to keep clear of danger until the time comes when Ule and his mate drive them away to seek their fortune by themselves.

They wander, as Ule did before them, but not so far as he, keeping to the open, park-like country full of the old timber, which they loved so much, until they too find mates and make themselves a home. Ule and his mate keep to the two trees by the waterside, and year after year rear broods with varied fortune until the birds are known almost as well as any others of the countryside, and so are less in danger than when they came as strangers to a new land.

My Grey Parrot "Polly."

By EDWIN WILCOX (New Sawley).

A story which will account for the fact that the owner of a really accomplished Grey Parrot will rarely part with so desirable a possession.

I WISH it to be understood at the commencement that I do not wish to pose as an authority on Parrots, but happening to be one of those fortunate individuals who possess a really good one, I thought an account of my experiences with the same might prove interesting to the readers of "our" paper.

Polly first saw the light near Bolobo on the Upper Congo in the spring of 1907, and was imported for me—gratis—by a missionary friend. I first made his acquaintance at Christmas in the same year. "Polly," despite his feminine name, is a male bird, as will be seen by the white of the face coming to a point at the back of the eye in the accompanying photograph. [Owing to the smallness of the reproduction, this distinguishing mark of sex is not apparent in the picture.—EDITOR.]

My friend gave a native "boy" a frame for two baby Parrots procured from the hollow of a tree in the bush, and, not being a fancier, he put them in charge of his native servant, who succeeded in rearing them mainly on monkey-outs and bananas. When able to feed themselves, they were given the run of the garden, but committed such depredations amongst the plants and trees that they had to be confined, but this was not so easy as expected, for they used their beaks in such a practical manner that wood could not stand the strain.

The Last Straw.

One day, breaking loose, they demolished a date tree which had been grown from a stone, and was perhaps the choicest plant in the garden. The missionary staff were disgusted at their depredations, and after clipping their wings very short, and bringing some stout wire-netting into use, they eventually succeeded in keeping them in their own quarters.

When the time arrived for their departure to England, a stout box was procured, with some strong wire-netting as a front, a perch fixed from one end of the box to the other, about three inches from the bottom, and a rough drawer for cleaning-out purposes. This comprised their domicile until I made their acquaintance some four weeks later.

The railway journey down to the coast, Matani, was uneventful as far as the Parrots were concerned, and on arrival at the pier the birds were given in charge of the butcher, who, on a diet of monkey-nuts, succeeded in landing them in England, apparently none the worse for their journey.

My friend had to stay a few days in London, and left them in charge of "boots" at his hotel, who fed them on bananas. The weather was very cold at this time, and not being able to catch a local train to reach my address, my friend left the Parrots, along with his luggage, on Trent platform for some two hours, to be forwarded by the next train. In spite of an intensely cold night, they arrived in good condition, and on being introduced to the light, exclaimed, "Poor Polly," which comprised the whole of their vocabulary at this time.

A Really Proper Dietary.

I had previously written to CAGE BIRDS Foreign Bird expert, Mr. Wesley T. Page, for proper treatment on arrival, and I attribute to his instructions the successful rearing of my pet. I eventually found out that he would not eat certain parts of the seed mixture, and these I withheld until at this time his staple food is two parts corn, and one part each of hemp and sunflower seeds, with a few monkey nuts; the latter he usually eats, shell and all.

I give in addition, as tit-bits, a little Orlene his nut most days, a very small piece of lump sugar once per week, and a walnut daily. The walnut is Polly's chief delicacy, and I usually have to give him this before I get my dinner; in fact, the only time I have heard him screech has been when I have failed to do so. (My friend told me that the only noise he ever heard from wild Parrots was a screech; they were much like Crows in this country, very difficult to approach, and usually seen in considerable numbers.)

I give in addition to the above dietary, dry toast crust, and fine fruits in season, such as strawberries, gooseberries, grapes, plums, and the core of apples and pears; he is very fond of the plum. I give a drink twice per day, and use an egg-cup for this purpose; he usually takes about a dozen sips on each occasion.

"Polly" has his own peculiar ideas of drinking. When my wife offers him the egg-cup

"POLLY."
An accomplished Grey Parrot.

"had," thinking I was one of the family speaking.

He can sing the "Keel Row" and "Oh, Dear, What Can the Matter Be?" in good tune, and will sing alternate lines of these ditties with me. Whatever key I pitch them in, he always is in tune. Happening to be a musical family, "Polly" has ample opportunities to mimic our vocal and instrumental efforts, which he evidently does to his satisfaction, for the moment we begin to play or sing, he mimics to such an extent that it is impossible to sing in the same room, even if hour's duration. I never experience any difficulty in getting him to talk; he is always ready to join in any conversation when invited to do so; the difficult thing would be to persuade him to keep silence.

I have only had one case of indisposition with "Polly," and this was easily cured, it consisted of a little sickness; my remedy was a little carbonate of soda in his drinking water. I wish I could as easily cure him of his feather plucking propensities. I have tried the quassa chip remedy, but have pronounced it a failure. I have tried amusing him with bobbins, pieces of wood and string, and have also worked on his nervous inclinations by placing various things of which he is afraid either on his cage or in close proximity to it. He has a deadly fear of almost any strange object, such as a big piece of wood, a parcel, etc., and usually falls to the bottom of the cage and exhibits signs of abject terror when any such thing is brought near him.

A Novel Cure for Feather Plucking.

My only approach to success has been in the sneering of his feathers with rancid goose-grease, but as I could only procure a small quantity I could only partially try the cure, though even this small amount has reduced his pernicious habit to one of plucking the down from under his feathers. If I can get another supply of rancid goose-grease, I shall give him another dressing during the warm weather, and shall hope for this to make a complete cure. Should I fail to get the goose-grease, I shall try rancid cold liver oil.

"Polly" looked a perfect scarecrow after the application of this, and sat like a statue for a day or two, but as the effects of the operation began to wear off, he gradually resumed his usual vivacity. No permanent injury was done to the feathers, which in a few weeks resumed their wonted appearance.

A friend of mine, who told me of this remedy, said he had an African Grey Parrot which plucked itself until it was practically nude, but one application liberally applied was a complete success, and though several years have since passed, the bird has never since plucked its feathers. If any readers of CAGE BIRDS who care to try the above remedy as a last resort, would publish the result of the experiment in our paper, it would be of interest to all who possess Parrots given to this dreadful habit.

I hope this little effort to interest lovers of Parrots (and their number is legion) will give as much pleasure to the readers as it has to the writer. My advice to all who wish for an interesting and amusing pet is: Get an African Grey Parrot, feed and care for it properly, and you will have a friend that will probably last a life-time.

THE LANGUAGE OF BIRD SONG.

The powers of mimicry possessed by our singing birds have lately inspired many paragraphs in the daily papers, and one among them which has been widely circulated is to the effect that a Song Thrush at Streatham, London, has been heard to whistle distinctly the first line of "The Campbells are coming." Commenting on these, the London "Star" of June 17 had an amusing article, commencing with:

"What does little birdie say,

In his nest at break of day?

Hark! The merry Thrush is singing

"Yip-Iaddy-Iay!"

Referring to the Streatham case, our contemporary says:

"This explains the strange conduct of a Chiswick Thrush recorded by a 'Star' ornithological correspondent. Every evening for a week or so the bird sat on the edge of a chimney-pot. From time to time he would bend his head and listen down the chimney. A few broken notes followed. Again he would listen, cock his wise eye, and try the selection over again.

"Enquiries made in the neighbourhood elicited the information that the chimney-pot was the drawing-room chimney-pot; and in the drawing-room the daughter of the house took her music lesson. Within ten days the Thrush had mastered the first four notes of the 'Maiden's Prayer,' which he now delivers daily to a delighted audience." The article finishes as follows:

Keats Revised.

"But we trust that our Thrushes and Blackbirds will not be encouraged to sing popular songs.

"The war not born for this, immortal bird."

"No hungry generations tread thee down."

The song I hear this passing night I heard Last Tuesday at the Empire, Camden Town."

"We shall have our song writers capturing the Thrushes young and teaching them their songs by gramophone. Think of our green woods and pastures on a summer's evening, full of the strains of 'Keep the home fires burning' or 'Sister Susie,' only for the inclination to laugh. The other day, at the conclusion of grace before dinner he pronounced the "Ameo" as solemnly as a sexton at a funeral.

A FRIENDLY TRIO. The Author, his Pet Bird, and his Pet Parrot.

He is of a very jealous disposition, which is also shared by my favourite Gordon Setter. I have only to take notice of the one to arouse the jealousy of the other, but both seem content if I give to each one hand on which to lavish their affection. Until I do this Polly makes a hissing noise at the dog, and the dog in turn insists on shaking hands with me. Polly takes a delight in talking to the dog, and I have many times, when in an adjoining room, heard him talk like this: "Come in this minute. My word, I'll give it you." Then, after a brief interval: "Do you want an apple? Do you want a banana?" And he will then run through quite a list of supposed wants, including breakfast, supper, drink, strawberry, etc., even including a "banapple."

My dog has a habit of yawning; this is invariably met with the remark, "Oh, you are bad." About a year ago I added a Pekinese dog to my pets, and the second morning after his arrival I was roused from my slumber by a furious barking. I came downstairs to investigate, when, picture my surprise to find the dog on the table, near Polly's cage, and the two—Polly and the dog—engaged in a barking contest, which was continued until I made the dog retire to his box.

Polly is of a very shy disposition, and can rarely be induced to talk before strangers, but this difficulty is easily overcome when our visitors retire to an adjoining room, when he will immediately join in any conversation which may be going on.

Prefers His Own Way.

I have never taken much trouble to teach him to say sentences of my own choosing, as I soon found out that he had his own ideas of propriety in this respect, and that which I wanted him to say he simply would not, whilst at the same time he was always repeating sentences which he had seldom heard; but when I have heard him trying to say certain words I have repeated them to him, and he would try to pronounce them correctly, much as a child does when beginning to talk.

I think the best way to teach a particular sentence is to do so from an adjoining room, for by this means you both arouse the bird's curiosity and impress his memory. I have noticed that sounds which emanate from outside soon attract my bird's attention. Amongst the first things he learnt was the call and alarm note of the House Sparrow, and no one could detect his imitation from the genuine article. The cry of "Rags and bones, any old boots," soon took his fancy, and is still one of his favourite phrases. His most talkative time is about dusk, when he usually gives a "vocal entertainment" of at least an he drinks in the orthodox birdy manner, by placing his beak inside the cup and taking one sip at a time, but when I offer him his drink he insists on drinking after the human fashion, by taking the cup between his lips (beak), and if permitted to do so would empty the cup at one draught.

I have had most kinds of pets, including hedgehogs, but none so amusing as "Polly." He is as affectionate as a dog, and when I sit near his cage I usually have to put one hand inside the wires, so that he may bestow his caresses, which consist of a "crooning" noise, regurgitation of food, and an endeavour to feed me, rubbing both head and feet on my hand, etc.

It would be difficult to find a more intelligent pet amongst the bird family. Very few things take place in the house with which "Polly" is not quite conversant. For instance, as usual in villages, the pump is in the kitchen, and when I reach out my hand to use the same, "Polly" anticipates my action by imitating the noise of the pump handle and the dripping of the water. Again, when I put on my hat or coat to go out, or light a taper to go to bed at night, he always exclaims "Good morning," and if I do not quickly leave the room this is frequently repeated.

Saving a Servant Maid.

I am a member of a co-operative society, and my number is 104. When "Polly" hears the milkman in the street he shouts, "Milk; I want a pint, please; 104." When the baker calls, "Bread, one, please; 104. Thank you; good morning." When my wife opens the door to call my son to get up for breakfast, "Polly" usually anticipates by calling, "Are you getting up? Breakfast ready. You will be late." One day my father drank a glass of water from the pump, and Polly said, "Oh, you were thirsty." I offered him some fruit of which he was rather dubious; turned his head on one side and said, "Is it nice?" I could prolong this list "ad infinitum."

His range of voice is simply marvellous, extending from a piercing whistle to the deepest bass; a metallic ring like the rattle of crockery, and the opening and closing of an iron gate are imitated to perfection. He can pronounce his words as clearly and distinctly as any human being, and will frequently talk for two or three consecutive hours.

Very few things take place without Polly's comment. One time we are holding a "Quakers' meeting," when he breaks the silence by exclaiming, "You are quiet. What's the matter with you? Aren't you very well?" He has a very infectious laugh, and his many times set us laughing, when he will mimic first the particular laugh of one and then of another. He can imitate any individual's voice, and we have many times been

The Rearing and Colour Feeding of Canaries.

A lecture given by Mr. J. F. Park to the members of the Vale of Leven C.B.C., and communicated by the hon. sec., Mr. A. H. McLean.

THERE is little doubt that all the present varieties of the Canary have been evolved from the wild Canary of the Canary Islands and Madeira. An extract from Professor Pearson's notes in the records of Cambridge University, July, 1891, says: "The wild Canary is regarded as a sub-species of the Serin, which inhabited Central and Southern Europe, and occasionally visits the British Isles." Of course, there have been a great many theories put forth in early days, some of which have long since proved to be wrong.

The Canary of Ancient Literature.

Away back as far as the beginning of the eighteenth century we find there were as many as 29 varieties of Canary. About the oldest Canary literature which we can trace is Gesner's book, dated 1555, and some of the wording is very amusing reading. After describing some other bird, he says, "similar to this is the bird of sweetest song, called the Canary, which is brought from the Canary Islands, where the sugar come from." We also get the information here that sugar was imported into England as far back as the early part of the sixteenth century. He goes on to say: "The Canary is sold very dear, both for the sweetness of its singing, and also because it is brought from such a long distance with great care, and but rarely, so that it is wont to be kept only by nobles and great-men."

It would be interesting, if time permitted, to follow the notes we have in the writings under different dates which show the progress towards the present-day Canary as we know it. Dr. Adamson, writing in 1678, points to the grey variety, and states: "The grey kind are not of a uniform colour, some feathers are affected by different shades, some of a lighter and some of a darker tinge." Then, jumping to Pennant's description, in 1776, of some which he had seen, he says: "They were of a dull green colour; they did not sing, so I suppose they were hens." Gesner, in the same year, speaks of a "yellowish-green bird, with a distinctly yellow tinge on its back," which brings it within our scope to picture the further progress.

Take, as among the first, the cinnamon Canaries, which, in the early days, were called Dun Canaries. A great deal of care and study must have been taken in the production of these, and even to-day we must have a thorough knowledge of pairing for colour in the production of cinnamon stock. Expert fanciers have proved that cinnamon colour of plumage in young stock can only be got by using a cinnamon hen and a cinnamon-bred cock. If a cock having no cinnamon blood is mated to a hen with no cinnamon blood all the young which show any cinnamon feathers are hens. I merely note this in passing, and leave the literature of the Canary at this point, with the hope that our own experience of breeding may bring out something of interest as the result of proper mating both for colour and type.

Getting to our breeding-room, we want, if possible, to have the room well lighted and free from draughts, as it is admitted generally that our pets can stand a lot of cold, but they cannot stand any draughts. To the amateur who has been in the habit of having his cage hanging by the side of the window with, no doubt, the well-meant idea of giving it plenty of light, I would say, remove the cage into a sheltered position on the wall where the light will strike without the draught which is unavoidable in most windows.

About Breeding Cages.

Opinions differ regarding the proper kind of breeding cage; some breeders prefer the cage of wood with only the front of wire, known as the box cage, and I have nothing to say against it, provided it is kept thoroughly clean, and regularly washed. Otherwise in the corners and crevices which abound there is the danger of red mite, etc. Being confined, except for the front, such cages are apt to become "smelly" quicker than the open wire cage, which is the one I prefer, and which, if standing on the shelves of a rack where there is no draughts striking it, and in a room where the temperature is equable, I think is much healthier than the box cage.

Of course, my choice is strengthened by the fact that it is the Yorkshire Canary that I keep, and as these birds are wanted to stand up as erect as possible, I think it is better to keep them in a cage with the light on the top of it rather than in one with a wooden top. Again, when these birds are exhibited they are shown in all-wire cages, and it is better that they should be used to an all-wire cage.

With, say, the Norwich variety it is different, as they are shown in wooden or box cages. However, either kind of cage is suitable, and breeders have been equally successful in the use of both. It may, therefore, be left to the fancier to make his own choice, and a visit to the room of some of his birdy friends may help him in this. Whichever one he may choose, I would recommend that he supplies the same with pretty large drinking glasses, as these have the advantage of keeping the water fresher in the warm weather, when a small glass with only a small quantity of water gets easily soiled, and the water gets quite warm, for clean fresh water is as essential as thorough cleanliness throughout the cage and all appliances.

The Furnishing of the Home.

The getting of the cage ready or the arranging of the new home for the soon-to-be-married couple is an important job, and should be carried out with the whole idea of sanitation and convenience for the birds. I use earthenware nest pans, into which I place a sanitary felt lining. These were pans I consider a great improvement on the old wooden nest boxes or nest boards, with the little pot nests, as these seem to me to be fitted up more for the comfort and convenience of red mite and other parasites than for the comfort of the birds. If a box cage is in use these pans are fixed up by a screw nail on the back of the cage with a wire ring hung on to contain the pan, in any desired position in the cage. The top of the nest pan should be slightly above the line of the perches.

I do not give a bird any nesting material other than one or two strands of hemp teased from a piece of string or clean rope, just to amuse the hen, as I find they usually pick and arrange the nest lining to suit their taste, and a lot of nesting material only makes an untidy and dirty cage.

Having prepared the house so far, we now turn our attention to the birds, and we will here take it for granted that the pair has been selected to suit the fancier's taste. I will not enter on the subject of pairing for any special purpose, as this is a very wide subject, and one which would fill a whole paper by itself. But I would say that unless arranged otherwise for some special purpose, it is general to pair a buff to a yellow bird.

We now place these in a cage which has been prepared for them. Some fanciers place their birds for a time in separate cages in a position where they can see each other, their idea being to let the birds make each other's acquaintance. For my part, I think that this proceeding is utterly unnecessary, for it is not very often that there is any severe quarrelling if the hen is in condition to be mated up. The cock is generally the first to wish to strike up a more intimate acquaintance, and when you see him having a look round the nest and singing a coaxing song to the hen she soon comes round to his side, and in a day or two they settle down to their family duties.

When the birds have been placed together a little egg food should be supplied, with a little blue maw seed added as a stimulating diet. This should be given in small quantities of about a teaspoonful every other day for each pair for a day or two; you will surely see the cock feeding the hen with the tasty bit.

The staple food of canary seed, with just about a third part rape, should have an addition of just a little niger seed, for this is greatly recommended as a preventive of egg binding, and, with a few young dandelion leaves or a little lettuce, the cock will be all the more assiduous in feeding his mate.

A Possible Danger.

If all is going well, there will not be much alteration in affairs for a few days, but shortly the hen will become more steady and sedate, and you can generally tell that it will not be long till you have your first egg. This time is not altogether free from danger, and a watch must be kept in the morning to see that all is right.

Some day, when you enter your bird room, you may see the hen sitting with her feathers all ruffled and her wings down, and, in some cases, sitting in the corner of the cage. Then there is a little egg difficulty on, but do not interfere with her; leave Nature for a little to do its part, and probably the next morning you will see the little expected egg in the nest.

If not, something will have to be done without further delay. I think steaming is the best thing to do, and the process is very simple to anyone, even the beginner, if he goes about it the right way. Take the bird gently in the left hand with her head towards the little finger, and the tail projecting between the thumb and first finger, and hold her over the steam from boiling water.

A narrow-necked jug is the most suitable, with plenty of boiling water. The jug should not be quite full, and a piece of muslin or some thin material should be laid over the jug slack enough to form a little nest-shaped hollow.

The idea of this is that should the egg pass during the operation, as it sometimes does, it will drop into the muslin and be uninjured. Expose her vent freely to the steam, and before replacing the hen in the cage place a drop or two of sweet or olive oil on the vent. In special cases a drop or two of equal parts of tincture of ergot and olive oil may be placed into the beak, and unless the case is an extreme one the egg will soon be laid.

If, however, a cure has not been effected, something else will have to be tried to save her life, and as heat is a great factor success has often come by rolling her in a piece of hot flannel and placing her near to the fire, or once more over the steam from the jug of boiling water. In no circumstances should we tamper with a bird while laying, except to save her life; let Nature alone as long as possible.

I recommend the taking of the eggs from the hen as laid, and that a china egg be placed in the nest. On the evening of the day on which the third egg is laid I take away the cock, clean the cage, and replace the three eggs.

I do not leave the cock with the hen after setting (I have always another job for him), and I have had little trouble with any hen rearing her young alone. I have a box with small divisions numbered to correspond with the number on the cages; this saves any danger of mixing up the eggs.

Having thus set the hen, we have to wait patiently for results. If all goes well we may count the hatching on the thirteenth day from the evening on which the hen was set.

How My Khaki Canaries Went to Nest.

By MISS DYDDGU HAMILTON.

WHEN I separated my Canaries into pairs the cages I put them into were all of different sizes and shapes—cages which had housed my Foreign Finches in former days. Only one of the lot was a real breeding cage, and it and one flight-cage were the only two which could boast a partition for a nursery.

When each of the three cocks was housed with his own mate, I had six hens left over. One of these was so broody that she settled down in a corner of her cage and laid an egg there. So I paired her with a yellow Yorkshire cock belonging to the children of the house in which I live. Another hen I mated with a Goldfinch, bought for the purpose, because someone told me that these red-eyed Canaries are the best kind for breeding mules.

In the beginning I had hoped that one cock would suffice for two hens. But I very soon discovered this to be a mistake as they pulled each others nests to pieces, each hen trying to secure all the material for her own home. One hen was so heart-broken when I removed her, that she seemed to faint away, and lay all in a heap on the floor of her cage for hours afterwards, neither feeding nor even moving till I replaced her with the pair she had been with previously, when she immediately became as perky as possible. It was this hen that I later on paired with the Goldfinch; and she quickly seemed quite contented with him, starting away to make a new nest with great industry. She is now sitting on three eggs.

The Mice Take a Hand.

The first to lay was my variegated hen, and she sat so steadily that I had great hopes of youngsters. But, alas! the mice, who had been very troublesome, climbed into the cage one night and ate up the eggs. The only mitigation of my grief was the fact that the remains of the broken eggs showed signs of what looked like hard-baked yolk, which I think proves that those eggs were not fertile, as the hen had then been sitting for ten days, ample time for the baby birds to have been formed in the shell. My other two hens sat for a fortnight, and then left their nests. I broke the eggs, all of which were clear except one in which was a dead chick.

The nests I had provided had wire foundations with felt linings. The first thing my birds did was to tear the linings to pieces, using the shreds of felt to reline the wire holders in a fashion more pleasing to themselves, afterwards filling the cup-shaped hollow with cow-hair and feathers from a nestling-bag. One hen preferred scraps of dry grass and the fluffy seed of groundsel and dandelion to anything else. Of moss none of them made any use.

A Varied Menu.

The food I gave was Spratt's mixed seed, spray, millet, and whole groats, with plenty of green stuff. In cold, wet weather like that of our present June at Whitsuntide, I give extra hemp and linseed. In very hot weather, on the contrary, I diminish these oily seeds almost to vanishing point, while I keep up unlimited supplies of flowering grass and groundsel, green oats, lettuce, plantain, in fact any fresh growing food that is obtainable.

Sharp grit I provide in a little jar, preferring garden mould and grass turves to sand or sawdust for the floor of the cage. There is always a piece of eutle-fish bone stuck between the bars, and of this all my birds, both cocks and hens, devour immense quantities, gnawing it away almost as if they were rodents with cutting-teeth, instead of being birds with bills.

In addition they get broken-up egg-shell every time that boiled eggs come to the table. It is not a bad plan to save some of this in a small tin, against the time when eggs get scarce and dear. It is to the free consumption of these chalky substances by my hens that I attribute my luck in having no trouble with soft shells or egg-binding.

My foreign birds never cared for swings in their cages—generally working themselves into a panic as soon as the swing was set in motion by some bird other than the one perched thereon flying foul of it. Therefore I used to take out all the swings. But the Canaries seem as fond of swinging as though they were children. They also seem to prefer the patent spring perches to the ordinary fixed sort. This is lucky for me, as the patent kind are so readily removed and easy to clean.

The Best of All Perches.

Another kind of perch which all birds love is a plant in a pot. Whenever my plants show signs of caterpillars or green-fly, I pass them into one or another of my cages, and the Canaries soon clear them of insects. They are not quite so gentle in their methods as were my tiny foreign Finches, so I have to take out the flower-pots as soon as the parasites are eaten, or the Canaries would pull all the leaves off the plants in their search for more.

Oxeye daisies and dwarf rose trees make excellent plants for this purpose, as both are very apt to become literally smothered with green-fly at quite short notice when placed out on a London balcony or window-sill.

Whenever such dainties were forthcoming the cocks would hasten to feed their hens. With more ordinary food they would wait until the hens called them by fluttering their wings and squeaking like baby-birds demanding attention.

Better Luck Next Time.

As none of my birds was successful with the first clutch of eggs I felt rather sceptical about any luck with the second nests. But a pleasant surprise was in store for me. On Whitsun eve, as I approached the cage of one of my two khaki pairs, I noticed an egg shell neatly broken in halves and quite clear inside, lying on the floor of the cage under the nest.

In the first instant I feared that my enemies the mice had been at their mischief again. Then I observed that "Cynthia" sat with her feathers more fluffed out than she used to have them when sitting on eggs only; while her husband, "Endymion," seemed to be standing on guard near the nest, and eyeing all my movements with quite unaccustomed suspicion.

Though I was nearly hurrying with excitement and curiosity, I fed the pair as quickly and as quietly as I could, and then went right away from that cage. Nor did I get so much as a glimpse of the baby until the following Monday, when he was three days old. He then appeared to me to be in size, shape, and colour exactly like a ripe raspberry with all the soft downy bloom upon it, as it is seen when growing wild in a wood before being gathered.

Eight days later I had a second peep at him. He was quite four times his former size, with primrose-coloured quills showing in his wings, and tiny tufts of drab down on other parts of his pink body and head.

His parents will not touch either hard-boiled egg, or bread-and-milk, but seem to feed the infant on nothing but grass-seed and groundsel. Nevertheless, I leave a dish of slightly dampened "egg-bisco," constantly in the cage, in case as he grows bigger, he may consider that he requires a more nourishing diet.

Queries Answered

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must be written on separate sheets of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—Queries received during any week, up to the first post on Saturday morning, will be answered in the issue bearing date of Saturday in the following week.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for sixpence must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

A. I. L. and C. P. B.—Replied to by post.
BREATHES VERY HARD (C. Young).—You ought to have said how you fed the bird, and under what circumstances it is kept. It may be bronchially affected, or it may be simply over-fat, but one cannot tell with certainty from the meagre details you give. Try the following for two or three weeks, and if not then considerably better, write again and give fuller particulars. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed only. In addition give separately twice a week half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on two other days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts niger, teazle, white millet and broken groats. Give a liberal supply of green salads daily. In the drinking water for three consecutive days, and afterwards every second day for the remainder of the week, add six drops of syrup of buckthorn and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and in the second week give instead four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day. In the third week give the rhubarb and salts mixture as above every second day.

RETURNING COCK (F. R.).—In the case of a cock which had to be removed during the period of incubation on account of pulling the nest to pieces and molesting the hen, you should not return him until the young are ready to leave the nest, when they could easily take his place on the other side of the wire slide, where they would be fed and weaned by one or both the parents through the wires. Of course, if the hen should show signs of beginning to lay again very soon before the young are out of the nest, you may return the cock and place the nest, with the young in it, in a nursery cage, and hang on the front of the breeder, or, if the compartment on the other side of the wire slide now occupied by the cock is fairly light and bright, you may arrange the nest on the other side of the slide and fix a perch so that the parents can reach them comfortably when they raise their heads to be fed. But do not be in a hurry to return the cock without there is an urgent reason for doing so.

MAKES WHEEZING NOISE (E. L.).—You must first of all see that the exciting causes of the condition are removed before you can hope to cure it. See that it is quite free from cold direct draughts, sudden extremes of heat and cold, fumes of burning lights, or a dusty, irritating atmosphere. Then, every second day for a fortnight, in addition to its staple diet, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of the oil you are now using mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days add to the drinking water five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, and sweet spirit of nitre. If not well at the end of a fortnight stop the medicine for a week, but continue with the oil and sherry, and resume the medicine at the end of a week and give it again for another fortnight.

FERTILITY OF EGGS (Novice).—(1) If the cock is in good vigour and condition there is no reason why the egg laid on Tuesday, and all subsequent ones, should not be fertile. Even the one laid on Saturday might have been given a chance for experimental reasons. (2) Put a small rubber ring over the hind toe and shank for a fortnight, and then remove it and put in the cage thin and nearly round perches, about the size of a lead pencil, see they are fixed securely, and leave these to complete the cure. Make the rings by cutting rather less than 1-in. off the end of the rubber tubing used on babies' feeding bottles. Place the three front toes through this, and, holding back the hind toe against the shank, push on the ring up the leg until it is nearly as far as the end of the hind toe reaches, and leave it there, so that when you release the bird the hind toe will be held back by the ring.

LOUD NOISE WHEN BREATHING (F. F. C.).—It is quite possible that the loud noise the bird makes when breathing is due more or less to a nervous temperament, and not necessarily associated with ill-health. Still, you can do no harm in trying the following for two or three weeks, and if not better in that time write again, and I will advise you further. Every second day, in addition to its ordinary dietary, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed, and on the alternate days during the first week add to the drinking water six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, and in the second and third weeks give instead four drops each of oxymel of squills and sweet spirit of nitre, and two of eucalyptus oil well shaken together in the water.

NO RESULTS (Forest Gate).—It seems to me that you have not yet given the birds any real chance to get to work. All you seemed to need when you put the birds together was a little more patience. You cannot expect every pair of birds to begin to show results within three weeks of being put together. Some pairs will be together much longer than this before making any serious step towards nesting, and then get to work and show quite good results on the season. The hens have probably been a little backward, but now the season is well advanced they should be in better condition, and the best thing you can do is to mate the cocks again with the hens that seem the most inclined to nest, feed rather liberally, as you are now doing; give a liberal supply of dandelion seed heads and crisp young leaves daily and leave the rest to nature to take its own course. Do not separate them any more until the hens have gone to nest, or it is quite apparent that no nesting will be attempted this year owing to the approach of the moult, then you will, at least, stand the best chance of getting some results.

CROUCHING ON PERCH (D.M.).—In the absence of more details I am inclined to think that there is nothing more the matter than soreness of the feet, or possibly, overgrown claws, the latter often so hamper a bird's movements that it sits and crouches rather than attempt to travel about the perches. Examine the claws, and if you find them overgrown carefully cut them back to about the normal length with a sharp pair of nail or embroidery scissors, and in a day or two the bird will resume its normal activity. If the toes are sore, or caked with hardened dirt and grit from the cage floor, soak them well in a saucer of warm water until you can easily wash off the substance and then bathe for a few minutes in a warm solution of boracic acid—a small teaspoonful of the acid dissolved in a saucerful of water—dry gently, and anoint sparingly with a little sweet oil or any simple ointment, or vaseline. Repeat the operation in this case daily for a few days. If neither of these surmises is correct please write again, and give fuller particulars of the bird's apparent health and how you treat it.

CLUB AND RECORD (K.C.).—(1) There are several Cage Bird Societies in Romford and district, some of which may be near you. Consult a copy of "Cage Birds Annual" for 1916, wherein you will find a full list of them, and the Secretaries' names and addresses. You could get the "Annual" from our Manager for 7d., post free. (2) I believe £70 is the record price paid for a Canary, this being the price said to have been paid for a noted clear body Dark Crest many years ago, so you see the price you name is badly beaten as a record. Other high prices paid for Canaries are £70 for a cock and hen matched for breeding; £30 for a pair, ditto; £65 for a pair, ditto; £20 for a single bird; and £21 for a single hen. Instances of such sums as the latter being paid for good exhibition specimens are by no means a great rarity.

UNPRODUCTIVE (R.H.).—I rather suspect that the vagaries of the present season so far are mainly responsible for your very poor results up to the present, and perhaps the birds may have been past their breeding prime, which would be partly observed by their coarse and scaly legs and feet; or, on the other hand, they might have been a little too young to cope with the conditions of the season. At any rate it is quite evident from the result of the last clutch that the cock was probably chiefly responsible for the two clear clutches, and the last clutch may have been due to the climatic conditions affecting the birds or the eggs during incubation, or it may even have been due to weakness in the germs. The added eggs were certainly fertile, but for some reason, which, of course, I cannot say, the germs failed to develop beyond a certain stage. I would advise you to give the hen a fortnight's rest; then, if the weather is warmer and more settled than is the case at time of writing, give her another trial with the cock that appears in the most vigorous condition and stoutest song. Meantime feed them all up a little, as advised for backward birds in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," a copy of which you should get from our Manager, post free for 7d.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

A BUNTING IN IRELAND (W. M. Carroll).—If fancy you are mistaken in supposing the bird you have caught to be the Girl Bunting, which is a very rare bird; in fact, almost unknown in Ireland. Your description fits the Yellow Bunting almost exactly. The head marked with black lines running from beak to poll is characteristic of a well-marked specimen of the Yellowhammer, and another point of resemblance is the reddish-brown colour at the root of the tail. This, I may point out, does not agree with that of the Girl Bunting, which is olive-green. Then you say nothing of the black patch on the throat and upper breast, which is a striking feature in the Girl, and I therefore presume your bird does not possess it. Now, although these birds have a family resemblance, there is considerable difference in the size, the Girl being much the smaller of the two. Perhaps this fact and the differences pointed out may assist you in identification.

FINCHES DOING BADLY.—(W. R. Bearby).—I am sorry to hear of your troubles and consequent disappointments. In the case of the hen Bullies there is still time to do something with them, as Hybrid pairs are frequently somewhat late in breeding. As far as I can gather from your letter your feeding appears to be pretty correct, but you say nothing of other treatment. Are they in cages or aviary; indoors or outside? The trouble with the Bullies points to their being indoors without sufficient fresh air. Birds in outdoor aviaries and buildings seldom suffer from asthma unless they are badly fed, and then, as they get old, they develop it. I would advise you to allow abundance of fresh air, plenty of exercise, and a free use of the bath. Continue aperients occasionally to regulate the bowels, which might also be done by feeding upon wild food and fruit. It is just possible your birds may not be suffering from true asthma, but a complaint brought about by injudicious feeding. This may not be your fault, but may be due to the greedy nature of the birds. If after a time the breathing does not improve, try the following: Equal quantities of glycerine, chloroform, oxymel of squills, and ipecacuanha wine. Give five drops to each table-spoonful of water. Feed on your usual seed mixture, with an extra allowance of maw seed and soaked seeds two or three times a week. Treat the other birds as follows: Reduce the quantity of dried seeds and replace with some soaked or germinated, and offer a little egg food daily and see that they eat it. Give fruits containing acids, and a few drops of fresh lemon juice in the drinking water. The bare places round the beak should also be treated with lemon juice. Supply both birds with insects, all kinds, from green fly to fairly large caterpillars.

TROUBLE WITH DIARRHŒA (Perplexed).—First of all thoroughly examine the canary seed; see that it is sweet to the taste, and free from unpleasant smell. But, anyway, if you can get some from another source you should try it. If you have not tried him with mixed seeds, do so—such as maw, a little hemp, and split groats—removing the canary for a couple of hours daily. I have found that the Yellow Bunting can be induced to partake of a little soft food, and if yours will do so, dust it with powdered bismuth. Give an aperient of Epsom salts and let him have boiled water to drink. If you find no improvement, take half a spoonful of prepared chalk and mix it in the boiled drinking water; keep him without any for an hour or so; stir well and offer to drink.

MOULTING A LINNET (Reader in Trouble).—I do not like your method of moulting. You will find a natural moult much the better in the end. Treat the bird in the ordinary way, but if you find he is a bit backward, just partly cover up the cage with a cloth; but this is seldom needed. They generally commence to drop a few feathers when we get a sudden break in the weather during the autumn months.

FEEDING A LINNET (W. B.).—The stock mixture for feeding Linnets as advised in the Nutshell is quite a good one, and canary seed should certainly be included. It takes the place of grass seed, of which they eat a good deal when at liberty. At this time of the year you should keep your birds well supplied with wild food, and if some of the kinds are difficult for you to procure, you can always find a spray or two of seedling grass, as this grows everywhere. An occasional aperient will be good for your birds, also a pinch of common salt on the sand tray.

BREEDING GOLDFINCH MULES (G. S. T.).—Your birds are going on all right, and I have no doubt you will get good eggs. Birds vary in their dispositions; some are very noisy and forceful, others quite the opposite. You had better watch the Finch. If he interferes with the eggs you must shut him off from the hen. You should be able to tell if the eggs are fertile when they have been sat on about a week. Hold them up to a strong light. If they are dark and full they are generally all right. Leave any clear ones in the nest. They help to support the young ones or prevent them getting squashed.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

AILING AMAZON (H. F. J.).—Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Diet as follows: Seed mixture, boiled maize (boil till soft, but the grain should be whole, drain off all water, then stir in tea drops of cod-liver oil emulsion), ripe fruit, nuts in variety, and pieces of biscuit, dry crust and plain cake. Raw carrot and dry boiled potato are also wholesome, and can be regularly given. Grit (Parrot grit), cuttlebone, and a chunk of wood (for it to exercise its mandibles upon) should be continually in the cage. As regards treatment, the eye should be fomented with a hot decoction of camomile flowers, dabbed dry with a soft cloth, and then painted with a rose-water and zinc solution. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the water with chemical food. Put a little honey and borax into its mouth twice or thrice daily, by means of a small stick or feather—there will be no difficulty in administering this if the bird is fairly tame—but it can be given lightly spread on biscuit, bread, or plain cake. Continue the above treatment for a month, or till full relief is given. Report progress in about three weeks.

TREATMENT FOR YOUNG GREY PARROT (J. S.).—You should get the Nutshell "The Grey Parrot," 21d. post free, from our Manager. Your dietary is fairly satisfactory, but add canary seed and oats to your mixture. You can also give it dry biscuits, crusts and plain cake. Cuttlebone and grit should be continually in the cage, also a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. It should have some kind of ripe fruit daily, you must consult its taste, but most Parrots like sweet apple. You must not stand the cage in such a position that there will be a direct current of air through it, neither must it be in a stuffy corner, but where it can get light and air without draught. The bowels should move quite freely without watery looseness, but at the least sign of constipation give a dose (one teaspoonful) of fluid magnesia in the drinking water. As it is young, put ten drops of Bynosphates in the drinking water every other day.

AVADAVATS AND WAXBILLS (Nonpareil).—You would do well to get our two Nutshells "Avadavats," "Waxbills," 2d. each post free from our Manager, you will then get details which are impossible to give in this column. (1) You must use half-inch mesh netting. The correct staple food for Avadavats, Waxbills and Alario Finches is canary, white millet and millet sprays, with green food, grit and water. For Pin-tailed Nonpareils, canary, millet and millet sprays, and as much paddy rice as they care to eat. (2) Too large a question to answer in two or three words, so much depends on size and situation. A heated aviary should have a minimum winter temperature of 60 degrees. (3) Supply the paddy rice uncooked. In a cage 4ft. long, 3ft. 6in. high, and 20in. wide, you might keep, merely a cage full of pretty pets, twelve; for breeding, one pair only. There is a special paddy rice which is sold for small birds, it is very different to the rice in the husk sold as chicken rice; it is similar to look at, but has not quite so hard a skin, and is slightly smaller; if you get this kind and a healthy pair of birds to start with they will do well.

GREY PARROT (Gloucester).—Its bowels must be kept moving quite freely; one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day should secure this, and on the days you are not giving the magnesia lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. If your bird is tame and will permit you to handle it, then cleanse the sore twice a week with tepid water, using a soft rag; dry it with gentle pressure from a clean soft rag; then anoint with zinc ointment; only a little ointment must be used at a time; the anointing should not only take place after the cleansing of the sore, but daily; before putting any ointment on the sore, any moisture should be picked up with a piece of soft rag. Keep a watch on the bird's mouth and throat, and if either become at all furred or foul, put in a little honey and borax daily, and continue same till the mouth is quite clean again. Shall be pleased to hear how it progresses.

AMAZON PARROT CURGLING (J. H.).—Very probably the bird is merely mimicking the pouring out of water or some such similar noise it has heard in its vicinity. A Hawk-headed Parrot I used to possess, whenever it saw a jug or kettle forthwith proceeded to mimic the sound of pouring out water, and it also did so at other times. There is apparently very little, if anything, wrong with your bird; however, to make sure (it cannot do harm), get a box of honey and borax from your chemist, and as long as it lasts give it a little daily, either from the end of a stick, or lightly spread on biscuit, bread or plain cake. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day for a month, and twice a week for the same period put half a teaspoonful of chemical food in the drinking water. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Keep cuttlebone and grit continually in the cage, also a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon.

GENERAL.

Answered by THE EDITOR.

Red Mite Destroyers (M. M. Wiseman).—When you say that you cannot get either quassia extract or pyrethrum powder in Newcastle, we think you cannot have enquired very far. Both are obtainable from any chemist anywhere. You can make your own quassia infusion by steeping two ounces of quassia chips, which you can get at any chemist's or at an oil shop, in a pint of water, or by boiling the same amount in a quart of water until it is reduced to a pint, or you can buy the concentrated infusion ready for use. Pyrethrum powder, or Keating's powder, is also quite easy to get anywhere.

Linnet Contest Report.—We have received an account of a Linnet contest held at the "Empire Hotel," June 10, but as no town is mentioned we have been unable to publish this under its proper heading.

POST MORTEMS

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATEELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts, Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breed. ing Room Register" a well-known fancier has said: "It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid. FANCYERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memos, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

A HANDY BOOK.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.

CHOICE CANARY HYBRIDS.

Here are shown two favourite crosses of British Finches with the Canary. At the top of the picture is the fine Dark Linnet-Canary Mule belonging to Mr. J. E. Jeffreys, of Swansea. The five appearances of this bird on the show bench have resulted in its winning 1st prizes at Cardiff, Porth and Rhondda, and Aberillery, and 2nds at Cheltenham and Holborn Hall. The other bird is the Goldfinch-Canary which won 1st at Holborn Hall for Mr. J. Crone, Glasgow.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage only way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

GENT'S AND BOYS' SUITS FREE!

Astounding Offer for a few weeks only to "Cage Birds"
Readers! Send only a post card and save pounds.

Now readers, would you like a suit or pair of trousers absolutely free? Perhaps your boy also? A most astounding offer is being made by a well-known London firm! They have discovered a remarkable Holeproof Cloth. You can't tear it! Yet it looks just the same as £3 or £4 suitings. You can't wear it out, no matter how hard you wear it, for if during six months of solid hard grinding work every day of the week (not just Sundays), you wear the smallest hole, another garment will be given free! The firm will send a written guarantee in every parcel. Think, readers, just 15s. 3d. for a man's suit, and only 4s. 9d. for a pair of trousers, or boy's suit 5s. 11d., knickers 2s. 3d., guaranteed for six months' solid grinding wear, and replaced free of charge if hole appears.

The Cloth.

As previously stated, this really marvellous cloth is absolutely untearable—you cannot tear it, no matter how hard you try; but possibly the thought arises that being of such hard-wearing quality, it must resemble in some shape or form the ordinary old-fashioned cord. That is not so. Side by side with the very latest designs in tweeds, and the best of our fancy worsteds, readers without testing the cloth would be unable to say which was holeproof and which was ordinary tweed. It is absolutely identical in appearance, and for considerably less than a sovereign, it is possible to obtain the design and colouring which in ordinary tweeds could not be procured under £3 or £4. The designs are suitable for office and best wear and field or rough wear, so that readers, whether at work or at leisure, need have no hesitation in wearing garments made from this remarkable cloth. The cloth could not be torn by a barbed wire fence, it is quite impossible to tear it, and the manufacturers predict that just as soon as the public learn of its remarkable wearing qualities, ordinary tweeds and serges will become a thing of the past. For your boys it is the very cloth.

Prices Extraordinary.

The prices of garments in this holeproof cloth are truly remarkable—of course, they are cut very low, more or less, to induce the public to test the cloth. It is possible to procure a really well-cut, smartly-finished suit consisting of jacket, vest, and trousers for the absurd sum of 15s. 3d., whilst a pair of trousers guaranteed for six months' solid hard wear could be obtained for merely 4s. 9d., or gent's riding, cycling, or walking breeches for 6s. 3d. Boys' Suits from 5/11, knickers 2/3.

Method in Making.

Readers naturally ask the question, can these goods be well made for the money? Here again is the result of the employment of modern methods and machinery, the outcome of years of experimentation, which have rendered it possible to supply a suit of clothes for 15s. 3d., which our grandfathers could not possibly have obtained at anything like treble the price. As an instance of the labour-saving devices, it must be mentioned that every sewing machine used in the making of these garments is driven by electric power; no work except the actual guidance of the garments through the machine falls on the worker, with the result that double and treble the quantity of garments can be turned out with absolute assurance that every garment is really well made. This is one instance of how the method carried from the beginning to the end of the business has resulted in a better and cheaper article for the public.

The Result.

Readers would do well to investigate this offer at once, before the rush, and the result to themselves will be a considerable saving of money in their tailoring bills, besides being able to wear garments made from a cloth which looks really smart, and yet will wear even better than the ordinary common cords.

Generous Free Samples for Readers.

To induce readers to give this remarkable cloth a trial, the manufacturers offer to send (if readers will send merely a 1d. postcard asking for free samples) a generous supply of cloth cuttings, fashions, and a most remarkable measurement chart, which will enable readers to measure themselves as well as any tailor could measure them. This will be sent absolutely free of charge by return of post. Readers must not delay a day, but should study the advertisement beneath, and send a postcard for the free samples of cloth cuttings. Remember, send now, while prices remain low.

WISDOM IN A NUTSHELL.

Take good care of your best Canary hens, and prevent them going too far.

It is folly to kill the goose that lays the golden eggs.

These hens will lay golden eggs for you early next season.

FREE SUITS & TROUSERS FOR READERS

EVERY GARMENT GUARANTEED TO WEAR SIX MONTHS OR REPLACED FREE.

Remarkable Cloth—Won't Tear—Won't Wear Out—Absolutely Holeproof! Your Boy must have a Suit!

We will give any reader a pair of Trousers, Breeches, or complete Suit, free of charge, if he can wear the smallest hole in six months, no matter how hard he wears goods. We have discovered a really remarkable cloth that will not tear or wear out—absolutely holeproof, looks exactly as finest tweeds and serges, made in all the most up-to-date designs and suitable for farm and rough wear or office and best wear. Just to introduce this remarkable cloth to "Cage Birds" readers we offer a pair of well-cut Gent's Trousers for only 4/9; Breeches 6/3, or complete stylish suit for 15/3, BOY'S SUIT for 5/11, Knickers 2/3, and send in parcel a guarantee, plainly stating if the smallest hole appears in six months (no matter how hard you wear goods) we replace the garment absolutely free of charge. Send 4/9 and 5d. postage, together with waist and leg measures, and state colour, for sample pair of Trousers (Breeches 6/7 post free).

Members please note change of meeting night to July 8 instead of July 1.—Sam Wilcock, Sec.

WOOD GREEN C.B.S.

F.F. show, June 22, headquarters, Wood Green. The entry was not bad, considering the number of members away and that others are hard pressed for time to attend to their pets. The birds consisted mostly of Norwich Canaries, Yorkshires not finding much favour with the Wood Green fanciers. The class for champions was a hot one, the birds being very even in merit, type, and substance, and well to the fore in all of them. Mr. Kerr staged the winner, a bonny yellow, although he was closely pressed home by a lovely typical specimen owned by Mr. Griffith. We gathered that the members had not done very well this season, although one or two had a fair number of youngsters. Mr. P. Brooks, Sec., had everything well in hand. We heard from him that the society is going strongly, although many are away. Mr. H. Norman judged. Nor. Ch.: 1, 3, vhc, Kerr; 2, hc, c, Griffith. Amat.: 1, 2, 3, vhc, Bailey. Nov.: 1, c, Dr. Huggins; 2, 3, hc, Martin. Ch. Old Birds: 1, 2, Griffith; 3, Pettit. Nov.: 1, Martin; 2, Miss Smith. Nov. Yorks.: 1, Miss Smith; 2, 3, Dr. Huggins. Crests: 1, Pettit. For.: 1, 2, Miss Willis. Goldf.: 1, Griffith; 2, Miss Smith.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

F.F. show, Foresters' Hall, June 24. Judges, Mr. Furniss (Yorks), Mr. Webster, Rotherham (Norwich). Cl. or Tkd. Yell. Yorks.: 1, spl, Champion; 2, Jones; 3, 4, Pickering and Fretwell; vhc, Bagshaw; hc, c, Gregory. Cl. Tkd. Buff: 1, Bagshaw; 2, Champion; 3, vhc, hc, Pickering and Fretwell; 4, Gregory; c, Jones. Mkd.: 1, 2, 4, c Champion; 3, vhc, hc, Pickering and Fretwell. Nor.: 1, 2, Waters; 3, 4, J. and L. Woolhouse. Nov. Yorks.: Cl. or Tkd. Yell.: 1, spl, Wall; 2, 3, 4, Williams; vhc, Wainwright; hc, Howarth; c, Hinchcliffe. Buff: 1, 2, 3, Williams; 4, Hinchcliffe; vhc, Wall; hc, Wainwright; c, Howarth. Mkd.: 1, Hinchcliffe; 2, 4, Williams; 3, Dransfield; vhc, Wainwright; hc, Howarth; c, Swift. Nor. Cl. or Tkd.: 1, 2, Gill; 3, Hartley; 4, vhc, Sisson; hc, c, Wasden. Yorks., Williams; Nor., Gill; Brit., Walsh.—E. Sisson, Asst. Sec.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

Eighth annual summer show, St. Thomas's Schools, Ardwick, June 24. Mr. A. G. Davis, Manchester, judged, and gave every satisfaction. Considering the many men's away serving the colours and the indifferent breeding season many are having, we had a capital entry, 130 birds being staged. Norwich were again up to the usual standard, among them being many promising birds of good type and splendid quality. Yorks. came up better this year. There was a nice class of young Borders, and British were great, many of the best which have taken premier honours elsewhere, and they looked as well as ever. Foreigners were quite an attraction. Specials most points: 1, S. T. Oldham; 2, T. Lane; most points with young birds: T. Lane. Best Young Yorks.: A. Taylor, Norwich; T. Lane. Best A.O.V.: J. H. Garbutt, Best F.M. Brit., W. Fairhurst. Leader for the challenge cup: S. T. Oldham, with 27 points. T. Lane next with 26 points; other specials were won by G. Chilton, W. Hubbard, Long, Peters, Blinston. Cl. Tkd. Yorks. Yell.: 1, 4, Taylor; 2, Lane; 3, Gilbert; hc, Fletcher; c, Fletcher. Buff: 1, Lane; 2, 3, 4, Richards; vhc, hc, Taylor; c, Gilbert. Nor. Cl. Yell.: 1, Lane; 2, 3, Peters; 4, Thorpe. Buff: 1, 4, Rev. Gaul; 2, Thorpe; 3, vhc, Richards; hc, c, Warburton. Tkd. Yell.: 1, 3, vhc, Peters; 2, Rev. Gaul; 4, hc, Hughes; c, Thorpe. Buff: 1, Lane; 2, Peters; 3, Rev. Gaul; 4, Thorpe; vhc, Chilton; hc, c, Richards. A.O.V.: 1, hc, Garbutt; 2, 3, 4, c, Long; vhc, Lane. Nov. Yorks. Cl. Tkd. Yell.: 1, Alitt; 2, Blinston; 3, Redditt. Buff: 1, 4, Blinston; 2, Redditt; 3, Alitt. Open and Amat. Bord. Yell.: 1, Garbutt. Buff: 1, Garbutt. Mule or Hyb.: 1, 2, 4, vhc, Oldham; 3, c, Hubbard. Goldf. or Buff.: 1, Oldham; 2, 3, Fairhurst. Brown Linnet: 1, 3, c, Oldham; 2, Fairhurst; 4, vhc, Blinston; hc, Stratford. Greenf.: 1, Austin; 2, Lane; 3, 4, hc, Oldham; vhc, Fairhurst; c, Hubbard. Siskin, etc.: 1, Fairhurst; 2, 3, vhc, Oldham; 4, hc, Stratford; c, Hubbard. Chaff. or Bramblef.: 1, 4, vhc, hc, c, Oldham; 2, 3, Stratford. A.O.V. Hardbill, including Hens: 1, 3, 4, Oldham; 2, Stratford. For.: 1, 3, 4, Hubbard; 2, Oldham. Old Birds—Yorks. Buff: 1, Lane. Nor. Yell.: 1, Rev. Gaul; 2, Lane; 3, Thorpe. Buff: 1, 3, 4, Chilton; 2, Lane. Hens: 1, Thorpe; 2, Rev. Gaul; 3, Lane.—J. Spencer.

HUDDERSFIELD C.S.

Annual F.F. show held at the headquarters, June 17th, with a very good entry of 70, all Yorks. Mr. J. Greaves (Bradford) judged and gave general satisfaction. Cl. or Invis. Tkd. Yell. (1): 1, Skinn; 2, Cox; 3, Batty; vhc, Wood; hc, Whitehead; c, Gledhill. Buff (23): 1, hc, Skinn; 2, Whitehead; 3, vhc, Smithies; c, Holmes and Schofield. Tkd. or Mkd. Yell. (16): 1, Smithies; 2, F. Sykes; 3, Atkinson; vhc, Bray; hc, M. Radley; c, Hicks. Bull (13): 1, Haigh; 2, Bray; 3, F. Sykes; vhc, M. Radley; hc, Batty; c, P. Ellis. Cin. Mkd. Yell. (4): 1, Buttle and Comland; 2, E. Ellis; 3, F. Sykes; vhc, S. Radley. Buff (3): 1, Cox; 2, Smithies; 3, Buttle and Comland. Second F.F. show will be held July 29, Mr. W. Mundell judge.—A. Lawford, Sec.

HALIFAX C.B.S.

Members' first N.F. show of season, June 24, King Cross Band Room; 41 birds staged. Mr. P. Mason, Windhill, judged, and appeared to give satisfaction to all. Some splendid young birds were on view, and there was a good turn-out of visitors after judging, all of which made the show a splendid success in every way. Unfortunately the afternoon was wet, which kept a good many members and friends away. Open—Cl. or Tkd. Yell. Yorks.: 1, Stobart; 2, Walsh; 3, Sutcliffe. Buff: 1, Sutcliffe; 2, 3, Savile. Mkd.: 1, Stobart; 2, 3, vhc, hc, Sutcliffe; 4, Walsh. Nov.—Cl. or Tkd. Yell. Yorks.: 1, vhc, Wilson; 2, Gelder; 3, F. Horsman; 4, Maloe; hc, c, Morton. Buff: 1, 2, Hanson; 3, Wilson; 4, Gelder; vhc, c, Thornton; hc, Senior. Mkd.: 1, Thornton; 2, Senior; 3, 4, Wilson; vhc, F. Horsman; hc, Stocks; c, W. Mitchell. Both sections: Self or Foul Green Yorks.: 1, Thornton; 2, 3, Leach; 4, W. Mitchell.—A. Sutcliffe, Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Young bird show, June 21, Carlton Hotel, the room being all that could be desired for a Young Bird Show. Entries were not so numerous as in previous years owing to a number of the members having a bad start; still, some grand specimens were on view. Mr. E. W. Allsopp cleared the decks in the Norwich section, also winning the salad bowl presented by Mr. Brailly for the best young bird in the show. Mr. J. Bale won special for best Yorkshire, and was runner-up for the salad bowl; Mr. A. Ball best mule and best British. Mr. J. H. Bevan brought 13 entries all the way from Porth. Judges were: Norwich, A. Magge; Yorks., S. F. Whetton; Brit. and Mules, D. J. Lewis; and the awards were well received.

NOR.: Class 1: 1, Allsopp; 2, 3, 4, Rev. Jolliffe; vhc, Slocombe. Class 2: 1, 2, Allsopp; 3, vhc, Jolliffe; 4, hc, Phelps. Class 3: 1, Jolliffe; 2, Slocombe. Class 4: 1, 3, 4, Allsopp; 2, Jolliffe; vhc, Slocombe. NOV.: Class 5: 1, James; 2, Rev. C. J. Norris. Class 6: 1, 2, James. Class 7: 1, 2, James; 3, Rev. C. J. Norris. Class 8: 1, 3, Rev. C. J. Club Reports.

S. SHIELDS C.B.S.

Meeting Cyprus, Mr. Thompson chair. Agreed to hold young show July 15; J. Riseborough, Sunderland, judge. Cash specials given by Messrs. W. Thompson, J. Richardson, W. Priestly, A. Tucker, and W. Howden. Also agreed to hold annual show Dec. 2, T. Dixon, Bedlington, to officiate.—W. L. Smith.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES.

Meeting June 19, Deansgate Hotel, with a fair attendance. Three new members were elected. Decided to have another N.F. table show and judging competition on the last meeting night in July. Next Saturday we hold our annual N.F. show, and we shall be glad to see as many friends and fanciers present as possible.—J. Green, Hon. Sec.

CRYSTAL PALACE AND PENG

Meeting Alexandra Hotel, Penge. Schedule for young stock show was discussed, and it was agreed to have it the same as last year; members that have not received same kindly note the hon. sec. Stewards, Messrs. Smith, Foxen, Whiffen, and Breeze. Discussion was then started in reference to colony breeding of Canaries, but it seemed to be the opinion of the members that it was not a success owing to the hens wanting to crowd in one nest, and it wants somebody to suggest a remedy. Vote of thanks to the chairman, Mr. Foxen.—W. D. Fryett, Hon. Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Meeting June 5, Red Lion Hotel. N.F. show was discussed, and it was decided to abandon same. This course was taken in consequence of members obtaining such poor results. At most we could not muster more than 20 Norwich, and in consideration of the numerous specials offered we deemed it advisable to adopt the above course. To fill the breach we decided to hold a N.F. table show on June 17; all members judged, governed by N.P.C. scale of points. This proved both interesting and instructive, and members keenly awaited each other's judgment. Mr. Pitchford gave a special for most points, which was won by Mr. Hartley. Nor. Yell.: 1, 3, Bagshaw; 2, Ousman. U. Buff: 1, Hartley; 2, Foulks; 3, Ousman; vhc, Fox. Varieg.: 1, 2, Hartley; 3, Bagshaw; vhc, hc, Glover. Linnet: 1, 3, vhc, Forrest; 2, hc, c, Hartley. A.O.V.: 1, Hartley; 2, 3, Forrest.—J. Glover, Hon. Sec.

ABERDARE C.B.S.

A very successful meeting was held at Miller's Restaurant, Aberdare; Mr. Thomas Davies presided. The society is now in possession of three cups: a solid silver members' cup, the E.P.N.S. open cup, and the solid silver Stanley cup, presented to the society by Mrs. W. Davies, Aberaman. There are also quite a number of specials, medals, etc., presented by influential gentlemen in the town. The membership is fast increasing, and are also proud to report that the following gentlemen have consented to become vice-presidents: Charles Kenshole, Esq., High Constable of Miskin Higher; Rev. J. Sulgwyn Davies, J. W. Hurt, Esq., and Dr. Wilson. The society wishes to draw the attention of all fanciers to the show date has been changed to Dec. 7, so as not to clash with any of the other shows in S. Wales. We are indebted to our judges, Messrs. J. H. Payne and E. J. Davies, for their kindness in meeting us as to change of date.—J. M. Shelby-James, Sec.

BRIGHTON & HOVE C.B.A.

In place of the monthly table show for June a private club whist drive was held at headquarters, when members were allowed to introduce two friends. A fair number gathered for a very pleasant evening of 24 games, the Chairman and his wife being the winners. Ladies' highest score, silver-plated butter dish and knife, Mrs. C. Pearson, 173; Gents' highest score, Yorkshire show cage, Mr. C. Pearson, 171. Mr. G. B. Absalom presented the ladies' prize, and the club the gents' prize. It is hoped to hold a young stock show in July, if any members are still left as civilians, and young birds are about on the sticks ready for exhibiting, the season so far being very poor.—W. H. Gibb, Sec.

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Meeting headquarters, Crown Hotel, Hill-street, June 7, Mr. J. H. de Maillet chair, and a very good number present. New members elected: Messrs. Caster, Robinson, Berry, Harris, Barron, Neville, Eginton, and Stevens; proposed, Messrs. Greenwood, Kettle, and Hawkesford. Decided to hold annual N.F. show July 8; birds to be staged by 4. Any member who has not received schedule kindly write sec. for same. We have enough members to be able to stage at least 200 birds. Will members please do their utmost to make this a record Nest Feather show. Mr. Bastock kindly consented to take over the secretaryship of the society in the event of the present secretary being called to the colours.—A. C. Shirley.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Meeting June 20, Mr. Braili presided, Mr. E. J. Banks being unable to attend. Under existing circumstances it was a pleasure to see such a good attendance, and I trust at the next meeting to see all members present. The Rev. C. B. Jolliffe read a paper on "What advantages can the Society offer to its members?" which was enjoyed very much by all present. Mr. Jolliffe dealt with the question of co-operation, rambles, how to help the novice to purchase suitable stock, and the disposal of surplus stock. Mr. Jolliffe, speaking from notes, promised to send his paper when complete to CAGE BIRDS. A hearty vote of thanks to the Rev. C. B. Jolliffe was unanimously passed. Resolved that Committee be called to deal with Young Bird Show, to be held on July 19.—E. Thomas, Sec.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting, June 19, headquarters, Spencer Hall, Mr. P. Johnston, chair, and a very good attendance. Sec. announced that specials for Y.B. and British show had come in very well, and thanks to the generosity of donors it was found quite possible to provide special prizes for all classes without drawing on the society's funds. Schedule of last year was adopted with slight alteration, the classes numbering 41. Members will be able to put on points for Mr. Weston's cup, besides sharing over 40 special prizes. On conclusion of business Mr. G. Gardner, vice-president, gave an interesting lecture, during which he impressed upon members the benefits of pedigree or line breeding. A keen discussion followed, which was beneficial to all present. A vote of thanks to Mr. Gardner brought the meeting to a close. Young bird show, July 8; Judge, Mr. G. E. Weston.—F. C. Knight, Sec.

NATIONAL GREEN-MARKED Y.C.C.

Annual general meeting at Bradford, June 17. Chairman, Mr. W. A. Cowgill. Balance-sheet showing small cash balance adopted. Result of election of officers for 1916-17. Pres., Dr. Craig; Vice-Pres., W. A. Cowgill, C. E. Morrison, and H. F. Towers. Committee (in Yorkshire): L. Dykes, J. Gravies, P. Mason, H. J. Chittenden, T. Ogden, L. C. Casey, J. Chippindale, G. Sneed, S. Midgley, J. Firth, A. Whitley, and A. Firth. Outside Yorkshire: C. R. Bullen (Kent), J. Currie (Barrow), T. C. Crawhall (Newcastle), A. Hirst (Accrington), J. W. Ramsden (London). District representatives: W. H. Hamlyn (Harrogate), E. Clegg (Dewsbury), T. Slater (Keighley), W. T. Furness (Sheffield), C. E. Hall (Leeds), E. Stobart (Sowerby Bridge). Hon. auditors, G. Sneed and W. Firth. Hon. Sec. and Treas., J. Chambers. Decided that the club's competition be continued. In place of the N.G.M.Y.C.C. challenge trophy, now won outright, Dr. Craig, of Sheffield, generously offered the club a trophy value 7 guineas, and this kind offer was accepted. The meeting was then adjourned to July 15 to consider patronages and the rule in respect to the starrng of birds. Societies desiring the patronage who have not already done so will oblige by applying at once. Members who have not yet paid their subs. will also assist by doing so before this meeting.—J. Chambers, Hon. Sec.

Country RamblesSHEFFIELD O.S.

Our annual ramble took place June 18, when over fifty members and friends assembled at Wadley Bridge, where our chairman met the party. Mr. Dawn was accompanied by Mr. Joe Beaver, who acted as our guide—and what a conductor he is! A man of jovial temperament, and a racy raconteur, who knows the district thoroughly, and whose remarks were not only entertaining but instructive. We left the New Inn at 2.30 and passed along the old road to Grenoside. On arriving at the summit of the hill the sun suddenly burst forth through the dark clouds which hitherto prevailed, shining upon the waving depths of cornfield, and the landscape appeared in all the brightness of emerald and blue-green suffused with the warm browns of the ripening grasses and mingled with the rosy purple of the clover; a smiling prospect of the land, heartening in its suggestion of prosperity. Entering Greno Wood, we found it full of verdant vigour, giving us a fresh idea of the power of life's fruitfulness. Butterflies were on the wing, birds were numerous, and there was a continuous droning of the bees, which were helping themselves to the feast provided by Nature. Here and there we noticed a little circle of feathers beside the hedgerow showing where the Sparrow Hawk had borne down his victim. The half-way house was now approached, where, by the usual generosity of Mr. Dawn, all were liberally provided with refreshments. The next venture was the Ant-hills, and here the British bird-men reaped a fine harvest. Arriving at the Norfolk Arms at six, we found Mrs. Morton had all in order, and to our surprise many ladies, wives of members, and friends were there in advance. After a very refreshing wash and brush-up we adjourned to the tea-room and thoroughly enjoyed the good things provided in the usual first-class style. The popularity of this outing increases year by year; two friends walked twelve miles to join us, while Mr. Towers made the journey from Keighley. The prospects of our open show were discussed, and one visitor kindly gave a gold contribution and another promised a ten-guinea trophy. The health of the chairman was proposed by Dr. Craig, who eulogised him for all his kindness and generosity, and expressed the hope that he might be spared for many years to occupy the position he has achieved through his enthusiasm and his respect for fanciers generally. In reply, Mr. Dawn thanked all for their good wishes, remarking that their happiness and enjoyment compensated him fully. It was now time to make a move homewards, having spent a most enjoyable time with Nature.—E. C. Job.

A Talk About Foreign Birds.

With Special Reference to the Hobby in Scotland.

By GAVIN ALSTON.

Of other Parrots, the Blue-fronted Amazon has a good name for talking, and some of the other Amazons follow close up. Do not ask anybody who keeps a Parakeet if it talks, as you will only be showing inquisitiveness, and boring the man at the same time.

The Parakeets most frequently kept in captivity are the Ring Neck, Rosella, Cockatiel, and Budgerigar. The last two breed freely in an outdoor aviary, and for an amateur are good stepping-stones to something better. The Cockatoos are also commonly kept in cages. By far the prettiest is the Leadbeater Cockatoo, and the only one that is worth keeping for exhibition purposes.

A Favourite with the Judges.

The Macaws are the largest of the group. There are few bird shows of importance in Scotland that cannot boast of having a Macaw amongst the exhibits, and it is, as a rule, awarded the coveted ticket, irrespective of condition or staging. Very often it is ragged and unhealthy-looking, often dull and sleepy, as if mourning that it has no more worlds to conquer.

Why the Macaw should be so favoured on the show bench is difficult to understand. There are often rare and equally valuable Parakeets in perfect condition competing, and yet they have to take a back seat to this somewhat clumsy giant of the race.

Following the Macaw in the honours are usually King, Crimson Wing, or Pennant Parakeets, and perhaps an Amazon or Cockatoo. It is little use showing any of the Indian Parrots, or anything else of the commoner kinds, if you wish to get anything better than a commended card. Rarer species, such as the Many-coloured Parakeet, or some of the beautiful Lories, shown in perfect condition, should be able to make the present winners stand back.

In a class for Budgerigars, Love-birds, etc., Rosy-faced Love-birds generally take the lead, followed by a pair of Yellow Budgerigars. Anybody who wants to be in front of the times should secure a pair of Hanging Parakeets. These, I think, should be eligible to compete in this class.

The next class at our shows is for seed eaters, and this class is generally the best-filled in the Foreign section, and the competition, as a consequence, is keen. Here will be found Whydahs, Weavers, Grassfinches, Mannikins, and Waxbills.

A good pair of the rare and beautiful Violet-eared Waxbills would undoubtedly take the lead, if such were forthcoming, and they can now be obtained if one is willing to thrust the hand deep enough into the pocket.

A good pair of Parrot Finches can almost be counted a certainty for securing the red ticket to hide behind. They are pretty birds in their green and red, and are by no means cheap or easy to obtain. The demand is vastly in excess of the supply, and I could fill pages about the disappointments I met with before I obtained a pair.

The Gorgeous Gouldian.

A good pair of Red Gouldians will always bid well for first honours in this class, but one seldom sees a pair exhibited. The female seems to be much rarer than the male, and is apparently more difficult to keep in condition, so the little gentleman has often to stand the contest unsupported.

The Gouldians are grand birds for exhibition. Their rich colours are so clearly cut and so beautifully blended, whilst they are so steady, that it is difficult for a judge to get past them. The Black-headed Gouldian has generally to play second fiddle to the Red. He is beaten by his red-headed brother, becomes the victim of circumstances, and, being in a mixed class, often gets left out altogether.

Gouldians are quite hardy when acclimatised, but when first imported they shuffle off this mortal coil with such apparent ease that one sometimes wonders whether they are not as much celestial as terrestrial. After those I have mentioned, you are never sure what may find favour, but a good pair of Bichenos, Rufus Tails, or Diamond Finches will generally stand a good chance.

The Whydahs and Weavers are also handsome, but as a rule have to take a back seat in such good company. The Zebra Finch and the Waxbills are often represented among the exhibits, but although charming in an aviary, they are usually passed unnoticed on the show bench.

In the soft-billed and fruit-eating class a good Tanager often leads off, and a good

Superb is a show in itself, as it hops from perch to perch, the light reflecting on its wonderful plumage of green and blue and gold. I have seen a Golden-fronted Fruit Sucker do a lot of winning in this class, and a Glossy Starling or a Black-throated Cardinal should also score well, but a Silver-eared Mesia, if it puts in an appearance, would take the shine off them all. A good Shama is sometimes shown, but cannot count on winning, and a Pekin Robin may as well be kept at home.

The Importance of Proper Staging.

The staging of Foreign birds so that they will look their best is also of much importance. In the British section this has been reduced to a fine art, and we have only to look at the birds and cages of British bird exhibitors to learn enough for our purpose. The box-pattern cage answers best for all small birds, and only in the Parrot classes is a deviation from this admissible, and even with them it is best.

Foreign birds have generally the honour of being staged on a table in the centre of the show-room, where people get round about, and the box cage partly ensures the little privacy they are justly entitled to. Many of the exhibits are shown with the inside of the cages enamelled white, which I think is a mistake. White enamel strikes too cold, gives the bird a washy appearance, and shows up any imperfections in its plumage.

I have tried many colours, and I think green, in different shades according to the colour of the bird, suits them best. Dark holly green is often advised, but in my opinion does not suit so well as bright green or emerald, but there is no hard and fast rule. A little must be allowed for one's own taste.

The classification provided at Scotch shows hitherto, with one or two exceptions, has been far from creditable to the societies who have the drawing out of this. I hold that Foreign Bullfinches and Goldfinches should not compete in Foreign bird classes.

They ought to have a class provided for themselves, but if a class is not provided, they ought to be eligible to compete in the British bird classes. The points for judging them being identical with their British cousins, there is nothing to hinder any judge of British judging them side by side with British Finches on their own merits.

Better, however, to have a class for them, and let it follow their respective classes in the British section, as a judge of British is more likely to know the fine points of a show Goldfinch than a Foreign bird judge.

A Plea for Better Classification.

Now, in some Scotch Shows you will see all sorts and sizes of Foreign birds competing for the coveted position. You can see the tiny Waxbill staged against the huge Macaw, and all the different grades between.

These shows are no exception, they are the rule, the exception being that a few shows go one better and provide two classes, one for large and one for small Foreign. This is a great improvement, and the diversity in size of the exhibits is not so ridiculous.

But I think every open show should endeavour to have at least three classes for Foreign, namely: Foreign birds, large; Foreign seed eaters, smaller than and including Java Sparrow; Foreign, insectivorous, or fruit eating, smaller than and including Scarlet Tanager.

The large insectivorous and fruit-eating birds such as the Toucan and Tanager would look more in place competing with the Parrots than in an insectivorous class along with such small fry as the Zosterops and such like. If this were done, I am sure there would be a better turn-out of the smaller species.

The classification is not the only thing that calls for attention. Specialist judges should be appointed, as many of the judges of British are incapable of doing justice to the Foreign classes. I have seen a common Weaver placed first in a large class of small seed eaters containing many rare and valuable Grassfinches in fine condition.

Now, you are not to think I wish to throw any slur on the gentlemen who act as judges. By no means; as far as I have seen they do their work to the best of their knowledge, but it is the fault of the societies in appointing them to work they are not acquainted with.

I know well enough it is far easier finding fault than finding a remedy. Before the exhibiting of Foreign birds becomes popular in Scotland, which it is not at present, something will have to be done in this direction. The formation of a Foreign bird club for Scotland might be the means of solving the difficulty.

Another fresh field for aviculturists is the hybridising of Foreign birds. Some of the Hybrids between British birds are now so common as scarcely to be worth the trouble of trying for, but Foreign Hybrids are so rare, and the possibilities and material so exhaustive, that it would be well worth while devoting more attention to it.

We have received from Mr. W. Errington a sample of his colour food. This is sweet to the taste, of very good colour, and should prove perfectly effective in use.

Societies wishing the patronage of the Border Fancy Canary Club, can get application forms by applying to W. B. Smart, 13, High Street, Loanhead, Midlothian. These must be properly filled in and returned on or before Aug. 19.

Fanciers and friends of Mr. S. Cook, writes Mr. J. Green, Hon. Sec. Manchester and Northern Counties O.S., will be sorry to hear of the loss he has had in losing his buff hen, which caused such a sensation during last show season. Hard luck, Sam!

Please notify through your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. A. Wright, 77, Ransom-road, Coventry, that I have taken on the office of secretary pro tem., of the Coventry Godiva C.B.S., our sec. being much over-worked on munitions, and until further notice all communications should be addressed to me.

I have resigned the secretaryship of Newtownards and District C.B.S., writes Mr. Wm. Montgomery, and the position has been taken up by Mr. D. H. McBride, Balfour-st., Newtownards.

Mr. J. M. Shelby-James, Hon. Sec. of the Aberdare C.B.S., writes that in order to avoid clashing with any other society, the date of the annual show has been altered from Nov. 23 to Dec. 7.

I am very pleased with the picture of my Yellow Border cock which appeared in CAGE BIRDS on June 24, writes Mr. J. H. Madagan. It does your esteemed artist, Mr. Norman, great credit. The 1915-16 record of the bird is 1st Plymouth, 1st and special Cheltenham, 1st Liverpool, 1st Cardiff, 2nd Redhill, 2nd Llanelli, and 2nd Manchester.

At the last meeting of the Cardiff C.B.S. the Rev. C. B. Joffie gave a lecture on the advantages which accrue to bird-keepers by becoming members of a cage bird society. Mr. Joffie has kindly promised to write his remarks in the form of an article for the benefit of CAGE BIRDS readers, and we are sure that the publication of the same will be awaited with interest by our readers.

An important meeting of the Gateshead C.B.S. will be held on July 8, at 7.30, in Lockhart's, High Street, Gateshead, to arrange classes for the open show, nominations for judges, etc. A Nest Feather show will be held on the same date (see Club Notices). Members and those intending to join should bring some entries, writes Mr. W. Curry, Sec., 6, Roxburgh Place, Newcastle-on-Tyne, who will be pleased to give further particulars on application.

A Chance for Brains and Energy

As will be seen by the report on another page of the meeting of the Cage Birds Organisation Committee, the secretaryship has fallen vacant through the resignation of Mr. Usher, who is unable any longer to devote his whole attention to the duties of the position. Much good work has been done while Mr. Usher has acted as organising secretary, and now all is plain, straightforward sailing for his successor. We shall be pleased to hear from anyone who will be prepared to continue the work, and to put his whole energy into carrying out the ideas of the committee. Letters to the Editor of CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, stating the salary expected, will receive the attention of the committee at the next meeting.

We have received the syllabus for 1916 of the Leeds C.B.S. Besides the programme of events for the season, it contains a full list of the specials to be offered at the various shows, classification for the shows, balance-sheet for 1915, list of officers, and members names and addresses. The balance-sheet shows the satisfactory amount of £13 3s. 7d. in hand, an increase of £7 1s. 4d. upon the amount brought forward from the previous year. The hon. sec. is Mr. J. Chambers, 22, St. Ann's Mt., Burley Hill, Leeds.

The Annual Members' First Feather Show of the City and Suburban C.B.A., will be held on July 12. The venue is not mentioned in the schedule forwarded to us, but we presume it will be the Church Institute, High Street, Marylebone, as usual. 34 classes are provided in the schedule, of which 24 are for Canaries, 2 Hybrids, 6 British birds, and 2 Foreign. No less than 40 specials are in competition in addition to the prize money, and the show will doubtless prove up to the usual high standard of the society. Members should note that entries close July 5 to Mr. E. J. Martin, 54, Battersea Park Road, S.W. Mr. H. Norman judges.

"Bird Notes" for June, the journal of the Foreign Bird Club, opens with an article by Mr. W. Shore Bailey on Laughing Thrushes, illustrated by photographs. Mr. D. Dewar continues his notes on Bird Catching in India, Mr. F. Dawson Smith "Bird Life and Sport on Achill Island," Mr. E. Hopkinson "The History of the Budgerigar," and the Rev. C. R. Dawson "Some Colony Birds." The Marquis of Tavistock sends interesting notes on "The Endurance of Birds," and Dr. Lovell-Keays, under the heading of "A Roadside Tragedy," tells the story of the devouring of a young Thrush by a bird which was declared by some observers to be a Cuckoo.

The original drawings of our front page illustrations, and of most other pictures appearing on our pages, may be purchased by readers for framing. Terms for any picture will be sent on application.

Who Lost the £20 Note?

Commenting on the story that a painter had found a twenty-pound Bank of England note in a House Sparrow's nest "Punch" says: "This, we understand has been claimed by various people in the neighbourhood, who had been lately troubled by mysterious thefts of 51s. and 10s. Treasury notes."

THE PASSING OF A YORKSHIRE WORTHY.

James Overend, of Cinnamon-marked Fame.

By C. A. HOUSE.

Although some weeks have elapsed since the passing of Jim Overend, of Ravensthorpe, the news has only just reached me. Jim was one of the old school, and one of the best. He was a true Yorkshireman, and typical of all that is best in the county of the White Rose. He was born in humble circumstances sixty-seven years ago, but by his stern determination and unflinching attention to business had raised himself to the position of one of the most respected tradesmen of the Dewsbury district.

He went to Ravensthorpe in 1870 as a journeyman; ten years later he started in business as a builder and contractor, and from humble beginnings built up a fine business. In the Ravensthorpe district alone he built between 300 and 400 houses and shops, many tall mill chimney stacks (in this branch of the trade he was one of Yorkshires' experts), and the only bank in the district.

"Jim" Overend was a public-spirited, broad-minded man, with a heart as large and generous as the strongly built athletic frame that contained it. There was nothing narrow or small-minded about the man. He had known what it was to be poor, and his heart and hand ever went out to those of his fellows who were in sorrow or trouble.

Formerly he was a member of the Ravensthorpe District Council, and when Dewsbury took Ravensthorpe into its municipal boundaries he continued as one of the representatives of the district, and for some years served as chairman of the General Works Committee. For the last six years he had been a member of the Dewsbury Board of Guardians.

His activities in other directions were great. He was an enthusiastic supporter, worker, and speaker, of the Dewsbury Temperance Society, a vice-president of the Dewsbury Football Club, a member of the Yorkshire County and Dewsbury Cricket Clubs. But above all his other interests and hobbies came that of the Yorkshire Canary. He belonged to the old school which favoured even-marks, and "Jim" could turn them out.

The records of thirty to twenty years ago give abundant proof of his prowess in this direction, especially so far as Cinnamon-marked birds were concerned. He would at any time spend a day going to see a good even-marked Cinnamon that he had been told about, and, having seen it, would not leave it if it was at all possible to bring it back to Ravensthorpe.

About five-and-twenty years ago I was judging at Jarrow, and on going through the even-marked Yorkshire class (all our Northern schedules contained such in those days) I came across a bird which I considered had been dressed too much, and disqualified it. It proved to be "Jim's." His subsequent action shows the man's sporting nature and his big heart. Some time after, I was lecturing before the Dewsbury Cage Bird Society, of which he was then president, and in introducing me to the meeting he referred to the Jarrow incident. "Some thought I should be ill-friends with Mr. House; not me; he did his duty. What is more, I am proud to say that he proved himself a better man than Jim Overend, and there is no other man in the Canary Fancy of whom I can say that. Instead of being vexed with him I congratulate him on being the only man who has ever proved himself a better hand at even-marks than I am."

Only a true-hearted sportsman could have spoken thus, and it was typical of the man. He was one of the best. Those who knew not the Fancy in those days may perhaps judge him harshly, but one must remember that even-marks were invariably more made than bred, and Jim only did what all others did, or tried to do. One needed a good bird to practise on, but it was wonderful what an expert could do in the way of improving a naturally good even-marked Yorkshire, and "Jim" was an expert at the game. So expert that this incident at Jarrow was the only one which resulted in disaster for him. Of recent years he had not taken the active interest in the Canary Fancy that he used to do, but he remained a strong supporter of the Dewsbury C.B.S., and on many occasions proved himself its best friend.

His mortal remains were interred at Mirfield Parish Church, and in addition to his family and a large number of personal friends attended. There were present representatives of the Dewsbury Town Council, Dewsbury Board of Guardians, Dewsbury Temperance Society, Birstall Temperance Society, Dewsbury Liberal Club, the Dewsbury Cage

Bird Society, and a number of his employees; eloquent testimony to his unflinching kindness, generosity, and popularity amongst all classes of the community amongst whom he lived, and whom he is delighted to serve.

I had known him over thirty years, and he was the same genial hearty good fellow the last time I met him, which was just over twelve months since, when I was judging one of the Dewsbury C.B.S. shows, as he was thirty years ago. He is gone, and his going leaves a blank in the Yorkshire Fancy hard to fill. He belonged to a school that is fast passing away. A school which had its faults, but which after all in true sportsmanship, and sincere fancier feeling was ahead of the Fancy of to-day. He was one of the pioneers of the Yorkshire Canary Fancy, and nothing gave him greater delight than to look upon and admire the beauties of a good four, or six-pointed bird.

His end came suddenly. He was about as usual attending to business, visited the Dewsbury Empire in the evening, retired to rest about 11.30, had a seizure shortly after, and passed away at 4.30 in the morning.

He is gone. We cannot mourn for him. He lived his life, and played his part as a man. One who realised that he had a duty to his fellows and ever sought to live in the spirit of it. To his wife and son our hearts go out in silent sympathy, but they with us, we know, will have bright and happy recollections of him, and in all our hearts his memory will live long. As we think of him, we shall miss him, but must feel that we are the better for knowing him. He was a man. Nay more—One of Nature's gentlemen. Jim Overend—R.J.P.

Those Bird Stories!

The latest bird story is to the effect that a Sparrow recently blocked up the supply pipe of a gasworks so effectively that the whole town of Nairn was plunged in darkness, to the consternation of the inhabitants, who thought the sudden extinguishing of the lights was a warning of the approach of Zeppelins. There is, presumably, no electric light at Nairn.

A Substitute for Fruit as a Bird Food.

Mr. E. J. Brook, of Hoddam Castle, an aviculturist of great experience in the treatment of insectivorous and frugivorous birds, says in "Bird Notes" for June, "I find that practically all my birds, seed-eaters and fruit-eaters alike, are fond of boiled greens made crumbly by the addition of bisuit meal. Birds that looked discontented if they did not get their usual allowance of fruit are quite happy with this cabbage preparation."

HOW TO CAPTURE THE GERMAN CANARY TRADE.

A WORD ABOUT GERMAN-BRED BIRDS.

TAKING a general view of what has transpired since the scheme to capture the German Canary trade was initiated, it is reasonable to assume that breeding on the colony system will play an important part in the production of the hundreds of thousands of birds which will be needed annually to make the scheme a success.

In the circumstances, breeders and prospective breeders ought to find abundance of matter to interest them in the pages of CAGE BIRDS this week. There has been an admirable response to the request of CAGE BIRDS for the views of those who have succeeded in Canary culture in the past, and readers, especially those who are novices at the game, will find in the various contributions advice which ought to prove of the greatest assistance to them when they are about to prepare for next year's breeding season.

A Certain and a Handsome Profit.

It will be observed that in no case is any doubt cast upon the question of profit. Practically all the experienced breeders are unanimous in stating that Canaries, properly managed, will yield a very handsome profit in return for the small amount of labour and expenditure needed.

There are degrees in success, of course. Some breeders will make more profit than others. Much depends upon the amount of skill applied by the breeder; but there are no serious difficulties to overcome, and nothing to prevent the careful novice from making a success of Canary-breeding in the first season, especially in view of the fact that really successful breeders are giving away the secrets of their systems so generously.

This subject formed the basis of an interesting discussion at the weekly meeting of the Canary-trading Committee, held at the offices of CAGE BIRDS on Monday, June 26. In the absence of Mr. F. Carl, Mr. H. J. Fulljames (vice-chairman) presided, and there were also present Messrs. H. W. Gutierrez (British Roller C.C.), J. Jeffrey (Metropolitan C.B.A.), H. J. Kybert (East Ham C.B.S.), J. W. Ramsden (Streatham Hill), D. Reeks (Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.), and the Organising Secretary.

As a result of the discussion, a report of the sub-committee on colony and cage breeding appears in CAGE BIRDS this week, and readers will there find what the considered views of the committee on the subject are. At the same time it should be stated that the committee are quite open to conviction, and if any critic be able to suggest a better system than that set forth, or better details for the system, the committee will be happy to give such suggestions their earnest consideration.

It was decided to publish the report on the motion of Mr. Jeffreys, seconded by Mr. Reeks.

Are German Canaries Still Imported?

Another subject of great importance discussed by the committee was the question whether German-bred Canaries are actually finding their way into the English and other markets to-day, notwithstanding the blockade. The matter has been touched upon on several occasions, and Mr. Trower, some weeks ago, produced a resolution passed by three societies, and suggested that the Canary Trading Committee might take it up with advantage.

For reasons explained in committee, it has been impossible to take any steps officially, because of the absence of definite evidence upon which to construct a case to set before the authorities. A step forward was, however, taken on Monday night when Mr. Gutierrez (British Roller C.C.) brought forward a motion, in several clauses.

After discussion, the first clause (as follows) was carried, the remaining clauses being left over for consideration on receipt of Mr. Trower's reply:—

"That Mr. Trower be requested to obtain an officially-signed copy of the resolution passed recently at a meeting of certain clubs, re the alleged trade in German Canaries, the communication to contain full particulars as to date, place and clubs represented, and, if possible, evidence bearing out the allegations made."

In the course of the meeting the Organising Secretary announced that owing to other business arrangements it became necessary for him to tender his resignation, which he did with regret, because he felt that there was a great future before the scheme. He added that he was preparing a report giving suggestions upon which a successful organisation might be built up, and he would be very pleased, notwithstanding his resignation, to submit that report for the consideration of the committee within the next two or three weeks.

The chairman remarked that the committee had four months in which to formulate some scheme of organisation which should be self-supporting, and in the meantime they could incur no pecuniary liability.

The secretary stated that his report would suggest systems of finance. He felt that there would be no difficulty in making the scheme fully self-supporting. He pointed out what a great privilege the movement enjoyed in having the use of valuable space each week in CAGE BIRDS to forward the interests of the scheme. No scheme of the kind could, he said, succeed without the aid of the Press, and the movement in this case had the great advantage of an official organ which gave its services gratuitously.

Mr. Gutierrez said there did not seem to be anything for them to do but to receive Mr. Usher's resignation with regret, especially as he had shown such a lively interest in the scheme.

The resignation was accepted, and it was agreed to advertise in CAGE BIRDS for a successor at once, Mr. Usher's offer of a report being accepted.

Colonies Out of Doors.

A correspondent this week raises an interesting point relating to the breeding of Canaries on the colony system. So far, the question has only been discussed in its connection with indoor-breeding. Experienced breeders know well what an invigorating effect the open-air has on all live stock than can stand the treatment, and Canaries are particularly susceptible to its influence.

The average hardy, healthy Canary will live out of doors through summer and winter where sufficient protection from draughts and cold winds is provided, and under such conditions the fertility rate in eggs will be found to be very high.

It is, therefore, not absolutely essential to use a room for colony breeding; a shed in the garden, or in the backyard will give excellent results, care being taken to render the shed cat proof. This quality may easily be obtained by placing a wire of larger mesh about six inches before the small mesh wire which covers the front of the aviary.

HOW TO BREED CANARIES FOR PROFIT.

What the Sub-Committee Thinks.

VIEWS OF BREEDERS INVITED.

AT a meeting of the Canary Trade Committee, held at the offices of CAGE BIRDS, on June 12, the following motion was unanimously carried:

"That the Sub-Committee's report be published, so far as it concerns the cost of rearing and possible production under the two systems, with the object of getting the opinions of other breeders."

This resolution relates to a report of a Sub-Committee, consisting of Messrs. Gutierrez, Norris, Trower, Fulljames, and W. H. Vale, who sat to consider a paper by Mr. Vale entitled "What has to be done," and to make recommendations to the Central Committee on the questions of cost, production, etc., in the breeding of Canaries under two systems—breeding in colonies, as compared with breeding in cages.

The object of the publication of the report is to indicate, roughly, the lines along which breeders and prospective breeders may proceed in their support of the movement to capture the German trade in Canaries. A secondary object is the stimulation of interest by expression of the views of successful breeders upon the suggestions of the Sub-Committee.

A Choice of Methods.

So far as the colony system is concerned, there are two ways in which the breeder may proceed with a prospect of success, and with a minimum of expense. A room may be wholly devoted to a given number of birds, or a portion of a room may be wired off.

In the case of a small room, two or three vigorous cocks in full song might be turned in amongst ten to twelve hens. There should be an abundance of nesting places, to avoid disputes, and plenty of building material.

Where it is only possible to devote a portion of a room to the purpose—say, 10 feet long, by 4 feet deep, by 8 feet high—one lusty cock may be turned in amongst four or five hens. The dividing partition may be all wire or wood and wire, and the Sub-Committee strongly recommend straight wire, and not mesh wire, because the birds are apt to damage themselves against the mesh wire. Where straight wire is used for the partition an extra sovereign must be allowed for initial cost.

It is, however, possible to effect an economy in wire by making a wooden partition across that end of the room which holds the window. The window may be covered with straight wire, and the only other wire needed would be about a square foot, to cover an observation hole in the partition.

As to the initial cost, the Sub-Committee estimate that wire netting should cost £1; ten young hens, at 3s., £1 10s.; two cocks, at 6s., 12s., making a total of £3 2s., or, in the case of an all-straight wire partition, £4 2s.

From the one cock and five hens it is reasonable to expect a production of forty young birds.

The cost of rearing varies according to locality. In country districts, for instance, green food can be gathered daily, and costs nothing, eggs are cheap, and stale home-made bread may take the place of biscuits. In such circumstances cost would be reduced to a minimum, but, under any circumstances, there is no doubt that a properly-stocked aviary can be made to show a satisfactory profit.

Generally speaking, the Sub-Committee think that produce may be reckoned at eight per hen, and these should sell readily at remunerative prices.

If Breeding Cages are Used.

The birds may be bred in cages, and the Sub-Committee estimate the initial cost as follows:—

5 cocks at 6s., 10 hens at 3s. ...	£3 0 0
5 double breeding cages at 10s. ...	2 10 0
	£5 10 0

ON THE PROFITABLE BREEDING OF CANARIES.

THE COLONY SYSTEM VERSUS THE CAGE SYSTEM.

The Views of Mr. Ramsden, the Popular Manager of the Crystal Palace Show.

SIR,—In accordance with your wishes I give my experiences of Canary breeding, stretching over a period of some thirty years. It is impossible to give a direct answer to your questions, as so much depends on what one is breeding for, and what space is available, so I give my experiences and leave your readers to judge which method best suits them.

Twelve Nest Boxes: One Shilling.

Some years since I had a sheltered outdoor aviary, measuring about 7ft. high, 5ft. long, and 4ft. deep. Into this I turned four medium quality Norwich hens and a very strong year old Norwich cock. About a dozen nest boxes were hung around the aviary—soap boxes at one penny each—half a pound of cowhair, costing a few pence only, was put in a net and hung in the aviary. A large seed hopper hung on the wall, a large water fountain on the floor, a bundle of green stuff in a pot, and some coarse grit and sand on the floor completed the arrangements.

The hens went to nest without trouble, over 40 strong, healthy youngsters were reared, and from a financial point of view the aviary was a huge success. I should mention that the front was double wired, straight wire on the inside, and wire netting on the outside, with a two inch space between, the wire netting on the outside, keeping cats away. The soft food used was bread and biscuit, equal parts, and 1 egg to a basin full.

Later, I wired off some four feet at the end of a first floor room, and tried the experiment indoors, using about a dozen hens and three cocks. The results were not so very satisfactory. The hens fought for certain nests, the cocks fought over certain hens, nests were stripped and eggs broken, and one cock was found dead one morning. Four or five of the most pugnacious hens were got rid of, and then the remaining 7 or 8 hens and two cocks bred and reared some 25 youngsters.

The next season I tried another plan. I bought some 24 boxes from the grocer, a ready-made wire front, and a seed box and water pot for each. I distempered them out, and then had 24 single cages—about 18 by 12 by 10.

At this time, some 15 years ago, my old friend, the late Mr. Greenway, of Croydon, called on me with three or four boxes full of Canaries. He told me he was finished with Canary breeding, and that I must buy his stock. He quoted 50s. for about 30 birds, a ridiculous price, so I bought them and ran one hen into each of the boxes mentioned above.

Where economy is a serious question it is possible to obtain very good results on the following plan:—Take a dozen home-made single cages, made from shop boxes, such as Quaker oats boxes, loose wire fronts, etc.; also one dozen breeding hens and three stock cocks. Turn a cock in with a hen that is ready to nest, and take him away when the hen has laid two or three eggs. In this way three cocks will easily keep a dozen hens going. The young may be turned into a room or into an aviary, as advised for the colony system, until ready for sale.

There is no doubt that breeding on the colony system promotes stamina, and that stamina promotes fertility, while the trouble of looking after the birds is greatly reduced, as compared with the trouble involved in breeding in cages, although when breeding for fancy points, it may be more satisfactory to use cages. The Committee are, however, concerned in this report with the successful and economical production of Canaries in quantity, and it is from that point of view that their estimates are made.

With regard to the cost of upkeep, the Sub-Committee have come to the conclusion that it may be set down at the figure of 1d. per bird per week, but it is not easy to make any hard and fast rule on account of the variety of circumstances that may affect different districts.

There may be many cases where novices who are not in good circumstances may be quite unable to start operations on the scale recommended by the Sub-Committee. Such breeders, or would-be breeders, need not despair. They may start with a pair, and breed enough stock to set them up properly in the second, or, at most, the third year.

The cocks numbered about half a dozen, and these I used as stud birds. Every hen had the chance given her to build a nest, and as soon as she had done so, and was calling for a mate, one of the cocks was turned in with her for about half an hour for two or three mornings. The eggs were properly fertilised, and the hens hatched and reared their young without any help from the cocks; each cock had kept four or five hens going easily.

The youngsters were turned into the indoor flight about 12ft by 8 by 4 previously mentioned, and did remarkably well. About 200 birds were bred from the 24 hens, and many were in the money in limit and selling classes. The others sold fairly well, with the result that a profit of £34 was made on the room in the one season, after labour had been paid for.

Breeding De Luxe.

Later, I went in more for quality than quantity, discarded grocer's boxes, purchased the best 36inch double breeders, and limited myself to 12 pairs of stock birds, which I picked up carefully at an average cost of £2 a pair. The average production of these pairs was eight youngsters per pair per season. Many sold well on the show bench, and I had more customers for my surplus than I could supply, and after paying a lad to look after the birds during the breeding season, the room yielded a profit, a handsome profit on the outlay, every season.

I consider the cost per bird per week for up-keep to be one penny, though this can be slightly reduced in country places where eggs are cheap, and green food to be had for the asking.

In conclusion, I would answer your queries as follows:—

The single cage system answers best in the majority of cases, where the aim of the breeder is to produce a large number of birds, and close attention can be given. Other wise an aviary or a number of aviaries each containing one cock and three or four hens.

The cheapest form of breeding cage is the cage made from a grocer's box and a loose wire front.

The cheapest aviary is obtained by wiring off the end of a room, straight wires for choice, as wire netting is liable to scrub the birds' tails. In normal times, straight wire fronts are advertised in your columns at from 3d. to 6d. per square foot. Curtain rods make good perches, and penny soap boxes make good nest boxes.

When success is assured, utilise part of the profit each year in improving the room. Plenty of reliable dealers advertise their wares at very reasonable prices.

THE PROFITABLE BREEDING OF CANARIES.

A Fulham Breeder Plumps for the Colony System.

SIR,—In reply to your invitation to readers for their opinion as to which is the most profitable system of Canary breeding to enable us to capture the enemy's trade, I consider the colony or aviary system is without a doubt the most prolific and economic in every respect.

I will endeavour to give a few reasons and my experience in support of this opinion. Bearing in mind that only strong, healthy songsters are desired, as apart from "show birds," it is miles in front of breeding cages.

In the first place I consider it the best system for novices, as it is so simple, and requires very little knowledge to make it a paying hobby from the commencement. It will provide both pleasure and pocket money to any person of ordinary intelligence in return for a small outlay.

Second, is the vast amount of labour saved. The small amount of time and attention it requires makes it the ideal profitable hobby for the busy man. Even though he is away from home most of his time it need not deter him from making a start providing he can look to his birds, if only for five minutes each morning during the breeding season, and in the winter months five minutes every few days will suffice; with an occasional half-hour every few weeks to have a clean up. That is all the time that is necessary to spend with one's polygamous family, any further time spent with them is purely pastime and pleasure.

A third reason is that more birds can be bred and reared than under the breeding cage system, from a given number of parents. Fourthly, one cock is sufficient for four hens, thereby causing a saving in the cost of stock birds. And again the trouble from red mite is practically nil. All this I have proved by experience. I consider that one cock to four hens in each small bird room or aviary is preferable to two or three cocks to a proportionately large number of hens. Then you have one happy family and no squabbling.

The Simplicity of the Open Air Method

Personally, I believe in the open-air treatment, or the outdoor aviary (or a small, well ventilated room should answer as well).

During the winter my birds sometimes go a whole week without being even looked at, and yet they are in no way "neglected," a healthier lot you never saw. Never an ailing bird, although they are exposed to every change in the climatic conditions, except that they are protected from the cutting winds, and I firmly believe they are receiving the best possible treatment to insure their health, comfort and prolificacy.

If this is so, how is it done? might be asked. It is quite simple.

All that is required is a small suitable structure in the backyard (or an empty room) five stock birds and a few utensils, and you are ready to start.

Providing you commence with strong, healthy young, coldroom birds of a suitable breed, and give them plenty of the right sort of food you cannot go wrong. The birds themselves will do the rest. Too many people run away with the idea that Canary breeding is a tedious, scientific, and messy job. It is nothing of the sort, if they go about it in the right way.

My aviary is a converted "lean to" greenhouse, 7ft. long, 4ft. 6in. from back to front, and 9ft. high at the back, sloping to 7ft. 6in. in front. The front is boarded 3ft. from the bottom; the rest of the front is small mesh wire netting. One end is boarded entirely, and both that and the roof are covered with tarred felt. At the other end is the door, opening outwards, immediately on the inside of which hangs a canvas curtain to prevent the birds escaping when going in or out.

Above the door is a small glass light which admits the morning sunlight. I have also a glass light which I slide in front of the wire netting in the autumn to prevent rain and snow beating in, or the birds getting "sooty," from the fogs. There is a ventilation space under the eave of the roof, and I have cemented the floor to keep out vermin.

Small branches and perches are arranged round the inside of the aviary, and on the wall are hung two self filling seed hoppers, one contains Spanish canary seed, the other summer rape, and they hold sufficient seed to last a week or two. I have also a poultry fountain which contains the drinking water and that also holds sufficient to last for more than a week. A dozen nest pans and boxes are arranged in various positions, and for nesting material, nothing beats "charpie" for the hen to build with.

The egg food I prepare in bulk with wholemeal flour, as recommended in CAGE BIRDS. Sufficient of this may be damped each morning in the breeding season to last 24 hours. This keeps sweet even in the hot weather. Greenfood I give in abundance. A large bunch of watercress in a jar of water keeps fresh until all is devoured, and in addition to this I give a small pot of mixed seed. The nests require no attention except to remove adhering excreta and any eggs that fail to hatch, which are very few.

One Cock to Four Hens.

My original stock I obtained from a well known high class Roller breeder, and although I paid a good price for them I do not regret it, as they breed such sweet songsters. The result from my one cock and four hens this season up to date is 21 fine healthy youngsters, some of them commencing to sing, two clutches of eggs due to hatch in a few days, and hopes of more to follow.

The outlay for food, etc., since February last is 14s. 6d., and for that I have sufficient to last for some time longer. The seed, nesting material, etc., I keep in tin boxes in the corner of the aviary so that it is always to hand. I have no difficulty in disposing of my birds at good price, and I buy more from other breeders to supply the demand.

I would advise both old hands and novices to give this system a trial. What is possible with one is possible with others, and so long as no unforeseen circumstances occur they will have no reason to regret it. I should be pleased to show any of your readers my aviary by appointment, and give any hints they may require.

There is no doubt that this is a business proposition that can be successfully carried out, if you can only arouse sufficient triers, and I wish it every success.

W. LARKING.

Mr. Tomlinson Likes the Colony System, with Reservations.

THE colony system, or, as it is known to some, "swarm breeding," is practised extensively in Germany. It has several very strong recommendations in its favour. First, there is less expense in the breeding accommodation, i.e., in the purchase of cages. Secondly, the system entails less labour than the cage system. Thirdly, one often gets the benefit of the cock in assisting to rear the young after they attain a certain age.

Still another point may be adduced in its favour. Previous to the war—may it soon be over and our lads back again with us—Germany sent a number of their "all wire" collapsible aviary breeding cages to England, and I have reason to believe that with at least two of our successful exhibitors line-bred birds have been reared on the colony system in these cages.

A Colony in a Cage.

If memory serves me correctly, the cages used were adapted for one cock and either three or four hens. The labour saving with these cages is that the cleansing of one floor space suffices for the one cock and his three or four hens; there is only one bath needed, one water fountain, one egg-food pan, one receptacle for hemp, and one or two seed hoppers.

Still another way of colony breeding is to use a larger space, an aviary, or a spare room, and run two or more cocks with a larger number of hens. I prefer the aviary cage of the two methods, for it and its occupants can be better regulated to order than the larger space with its number of cocks. The "Roller" is often pugnacious when in breeding condition, and the "blackguards" can be taken from the "aviary cage" and tried in fresh company.

In some instances more young are bred on this system, as some cocks will accommodate more hens than others will, but one disadvantage is that a colony is not conducive to economy in the food bill, for more of the following items are consumed during some stages of the breeding than are really necessary: egg food, green-food, hemp, and other varieties of seeds that may be given, excepting the rape and canary seeds, for these are always with us.

The waste occurs in this way. So soon as a nest of youngsters are hatched, or at least in a very few days afterwards, these extra articles of diet go into the menu. The result is that those hens that have not yet gone to nest, and those still with eggs, are having a treat at their owner's expense.

The cocks also are consuming these extras; some cocks will feed youngsters at an early age, others are shy with them, and will not feed until they are about a week old, while others are even later than that. Frequently he will be eager to feed the hen; then, if she be a good one, what does she do? She transfers it to the young, and, whether a good hen or a bad one, she usually settles down again on the youngsters, when she would be better employed in foraging for herself and allowing the youngsters air. Those hens without youngsters will also receive this attention from the cock.

The system gives more opportunities to the feather-plucker, because where a number of hens are kept together it is often difficult to detect the culprit.

To anyone desirous of giving the colony system a trial, I would suggest ordinary breeding cages having three or four removable partitions. Should expense be no object, then the "all wire aviary cage." Our English cage makers would supply them.

The Cheapest of All.

Still another "aviary cage," quite the cheapest I know of, is one made from a match case, costing a shilling or thereabouts. In recommending this I still have you in mind, Mr. Cagemaker, for there would still be work for you in making the fronts and utensils, providing, of course, our "colonist" does not take it into his head to cover the fronts with wire-mesh netting and use the household saucers for food and water. These match cases will serve for three or four hens and one cock by using outside nesting receptacles made to hang on the ends for preference.

As you ask, Mr. Editor for opinions on the methods of breeding, I must say that in practice I prefer breeding cages for my own use, using two or three hens to one cock. A description of this method I must leave, owing to lack of time, for another issue.

J. TOMLINSON.

A Roller Specialist Prefers Cages.

SIR,—As far as my experience goes I have found the cage system of breeding Canaries by far the most successful as regards the number of birds reared, which I take it is the chief consideration in attempting to "capture the German trade."

The colony system takes less time and attention, perhaps, but its few advantages are outweighed by its disadvantages, it is too haphazard a method, and generally there is a lot of quarrelling and mischief going on. I have been looking for a detailed account of the system as carried on in Germany to be given in CAGE BIRDS, but so far little information has appeared.

In my own case I could not tolerate the colony system, as I require the parentage, lineage, and full particulars of every bird registered in a book, also to be able to use my discretion in the pairing up, which can only properly be done by using cages.

Cost per bird per week? Someone else, please.

My own aviary, built for cheapness and efficiency, is of wood framing covered inside and outside with match-board, outside covered with felt, inside papered and distempered. The roof is first boarded, then a layer of brown paper, next felt, and covered with galvanized iron, and loose boarding on top of this; well lighted and ventilated, and floor of cement.

My cages are made of three-ply wood, as plain as possible, without sand trays, and distempered inside and outside, each cage slides in and out on bearers which are triangular in section, and touches nothing else but the top edges of these.

HENRY NEVE.

Mr. Crawhall Prefers the Cage System.

SIR,—In response to your letter in CAGE BIRDS I have very little time to write fully this week, as I am going to camp each night and morning with the local division of the St. John Ambulance. That, with my ordinary business and attendance on my birds leaves very little time for writing, but I will endeavour to briefly tell you my methods and leave it to your judgment whether they are worth publishing.

Of the colony method I have had practically no experience. Some years ago I had two or three spare hens flying in half a room which I had used the previous year for a flight for the young birds. I put a cock in with these hens, and gave them nests inside spare boxes. There were more nests than hens, but in spite of that there was a most fearful amount of fighting and stealing of nesting material, two hens laying in one nest, and all the other troubles which attend this system of breeding.

At the end of the season I had not a young bird from them, some hatched out but were not reared. This was my one and only experience of the colony system, and the results did not justify me trying the experiment another season.

With regard to the ordinary methods of cage breeding, I have no particular method that I favour, having been successful with nearly all methods of pairing and feeding. The great thing for all breeders to bear in mind is to have the birds perfectly healthy and in good condition. This can only be attained from a careful dietary during the winter months.

As in poultry, so in cage birds, you must not have your breeding hens in too fat condition. They should be sprightly and lively. No mopy or dull looking birds should be bred from. As with the hens, so with the cocks, they should, without undue forcing, be strong and lusty in song.

Two such birds paired together at the end of March, not sooner, should be able to produce three nests of healthy youngsters, three to five in each nest.

Asking for Trouble.

The trouble that most people experience is brought on by themselves, they often pair too early because they have brought their birds on quickly with stimulating food, such as the excessive use of egg food and mixed seed, and are afraid of losing a few eggs in the cage bottom before pairing up. They had far better lose those eggs than pair up too soon.

Another fault with a great many breeders is that when the young arrive they give too much egg food. Anyone who has tried to hand feed young Canaries from the time of hatching knows how little it takes to fill their crops for the first few days. What then becomes of the surplus? Generally it is eaten by the old birds, and it has two effects upon the mother—either it produces a kind of laziness, and she gives up feeding, or it stimulates the ovaries and she commences to lay again before the young are able to do for themselves.

Now the sensible way is to give small quantities at a time, three or four times a day, and to give it in a concentrated form. For young birds up to 14 days old the proportion of egg to bread should be as 2 to 1. Most breeders use it in the opposite proportion, but many years ago I read an article by Mr. J. Robson, in which he gave this as the secret of successful rearing, and since adopting it I have never had a failure.

I have reared young with this food without the aid of green food, as well as with green food. I have reared them without hemp seed as well as with it, but I always use rape and white canary seed, the latter ad lib., and the former in proportion to the age of the young.

My chief trouble has been in weaning young. I have not successfully got over the diarrhoea which often attacks birds at this stage, but I think I am fairly well on the road now. My chief remedy is powdered prepared chalk—even whiting will do. I also like a little bismuth added to the soft food, but only use these things if necessary.

With care, attention, strict cleanliness, and a study of the birds, I think that on the whole it will be found a larger proportion of birds will be reared by the cage method than by the colony system of breeding.

T. C. CRAWHALL.

How to Beat the Germans.

Only a Question of Supply.

SIR,—Referring to the remarks of Mr. Claude St. John in last week's CAGE BIRDS, we wish, as one of the foremost firms of exporters of Canaries in Great Britain, to contradict the statement that it is necessary to train the vocal powers of Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries up to the standard of the German singing Canaries in order to compete with them in foreign markets. Breed the Norwich Canary, the bird of the good old bulldog breed, in its thousands. Breed the Yorkshire Canary, the bird of grace and beauty, in its thousands, also Crests, Lizards, Scotch Fancies, and other varieties, and we shall eventually compel the Hun to retire from the Canary markets. It is not a question of patriotism in the Canary markets. The English Canary always fetched the most money and sold quickest in the world's markets. The demand for English birds being greater than the supply, the German Roller has been given the opportunity to fill in the demand. Both the Americans and our Colonies say: Give us a Canary of type and beauty; we are satisfied with his song, which he retains throughout, and will not lose through want of tuition.

A Precocious Youngster.

SIR,—I should like to know through the medium of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, whether any other breeder of Canaries has had a young bird singing at the age of three weeks and two days. I have spoken to two or three breeders in Reading about it, and cannot find anyone who has known of such a thing before, so I should like to know if this is the only case. Wishing CAGE BIRDS every success.

A Novel Nesting Arrangement for an Aviary.

SIR,—A description of my nesting standard for Yorkshire Canary breeding may be of interest to many of your readers. The standard is fixed in a five inch pot, and is exactly twelve inches high; then comes a wooden cup, screwed on to the top of the standard, in which to fix the earthenware nest-pan. The wooden cup is cut in four pieces in order to make it clutch securely the nest-pan. For about two inches deep around the flower pot is sand and grit. Let your readers think what this arrangement means in regard to red mite. The wooden cup may be filled with any kind of mite killer, thus protecting the nest from attack. As my young ones grow I take out the nest pan at times and brush it round with a solution of Jeyes' fluid, which fairly executes the enemy. I am pleased to tell you that we, that is my wife and I, have done fairly well this season; we only take two rounds, and we have now about 95 young birds from 15 pairs, which in due course I shall hope to dispose of through the medium of CAGE BIRDS.

Bird Shows and the Entertainment Tax.

SIR,—I should be very much obliged if, through the columns of CAGE BIRDS, or from you directly, the officers of our society—the Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S.—could be informed as to how we must pay the tax, which we understand is applicable to bird shows. Do we pay on gross receipts from door, including catalogues, or only on tickets actually sold; and if so, must we pay on unused ones? We make a practice of sending out a certain number to each member, but many are returned.

F. C. KNIGHT.

[The tax is payable on admissions only, but it would have to be added to the price of tickets actually sold, even if these were not used. Tickets that were sent out on sale or return would carry the tax for the time being, but only those for which the society actually receives payment would be taxed to the revenue of the country. There should be no particular difficulty about this; all that is necessary is to add the tax to the usual price of the tickets. Cash admissions at the doors would, of course, pay the tax, just the same as if they were by ticket. Catalogues are not chargeable with the tax; it is only the money paid for admission that is taxed, and this would be taxable whether the right of admission, which had been paid for, was or was not exercised.—Ed. Successful Breeding of the Goldfinch-Chaffinch Hybrid.

SIR,—I was glad to see Mr. Wren's letter in last week's issue about his success with the Goldie-Chaffinch Hybrid. I had a good look at it when it was about three weeks old, and even at that age it was possible to trace its parentage on both sides. The hen Chaffinch was sitting in a box high up in the aviary, and while we were there the Goldie went up into the box and fed her on the nest, so I don't think there is much doubt about it. Another of our members has been lucky enough to breed Goldie-Linnet hybrids, but unfortunately they both died, also the hen Linnet. Jolly hard lines for a fancier, and he has my sympathy. I also noticed a letter in last week's CAGE BIRDS from a fancier recommending bread and milk for young birds. I have come across several instances in country districts where this has been given, and the birds all look in splendid condition. One of the most marvellous instances I have heard was "Truthful Tommy's" tale. He was hand-rearing a nest of four Linnets. First thing in the morning he skimmed the cream off the milk, and fed with that. One day a travelling Zoo came along, and by tipping the keeper he got a drop of elephant's milk. He gave them some of that, but didn't see much difference till night time, when they seemed to be filling out a bit. He put the nest in a small cage and went to bed, but in the night he heard a noise—thought it was a bomb—and on investigation found the birds had grown so big that they had burst the cage into three pieces, and were all dead of shock. "And they was nigh as big as pigeons," says he.

"Khaki" Canaries.

SIR,—Mr. St. John is quite right; my birds are Cinnamon Canaries. There is a stuffed specimen so labelled, and precisely similar to mine, in the central hall of the Natural History Museum, South Kensington. But the statement of the fact that they are Cinnamon Canaries does not exhaust the subject, and I should be really grateful to Mr. St. John or any other expert who would tell me a little more about them. These are a few of the questions I should like to have answered.

Is the cinnamon colour just a freak, or do breeders know how to obtain it at will? Am I likely to obtain cinnamon offspring (a) from my cinnamon pairs, (b) from cinnamon hens mated with yellow, or buff cocks? Are cinnamon hens more ready than other Canary hens to breed mules with, say, the Goldfinch or Linnet? What is the proper name for common or singing Canaries like my own, of no definite lineage, and with a natural, not an organ-taught, Roller song? This information I would fain possess, and from whomsoever it comes it will be very welcome.

How to Beat the Germans.

SIR,—Mr. Claude St. John is justified in criticising the statements mentioned, but the bare statements do not quite convey the meaning intended, as the reports of the committee meetings are very much condensed. In reply to Mr. Claude St. John and other correspondents who have written me on the subject, I would like to state that the committee had been considering the question of cost of breeding various types of birds, the market for same when bred, and the probable price they would realise. Experts had given us their valuable advice and experience, and we were informed among other things that there was a very large demand for English Canaries in America and the Colonies, that the English Canary would be bought in preference to the German Canary in the majority of cases, and that in the comparatively few cases where really high class German Rollers were wanted the order would probably go to Germany as before (English breeders of Rollers ought to compete in these cases). It was agreed that the German common Canary was an unattractive bird, devoid of colour or smart appearance, and decidedly lacking in stamina. It was stated also that in normal times these common birds were dumped into London at 1s. 3d. per couple of hens, cage included; cocks, each in a cage, at from 3s. 3d. each. It was for this type of bird that I said, and still say, we cannot compete, and do not want to compete. Mr. Claude St. John's figures and statements do not exactly fit the case. I am not an expert on the Roller Canary, but I have purchased Roller Canaries bred by English fanciers at 10s. and 15s. each that were fully equal in song to birds the Germans were quoting at 21s. and 30s. each. These birds were sent abroad, and gave the greatest satisfaction.

It is not a question of patriotism. It is simply a business proposition to produce a good looking, strong, healthy Canary (much preferred, so the expert dealers tell us) to take the place of the common German Canary, fifty per cent. of which die before they are 12 months old.

In my opinion what genuine Rollers are required can be, and are, produced by English breeders at prices that easily compete with the Germans. As regards other varieties, experts have informed the committee that there is an enormous demand for English Canaries at good prices. A limited number of customers require show specimens for which they are prepared to pay high prices. The majority require, not a nondescript bird, but a fair Norwich, Yorkshire, Border, or Crested Canary, and are quite satisfied with the song of these birds.

Therefore I said, and still say, "Produce a fairly good bird, and a good songster, and you will get your price." In breeding such birds the breeder will undoubtedly breed many smart looking birds that will sell readily at a good price. The remainder, if the breeder is unable to dispose of them locally, dealers have told the committee they are willing to purchase in normal times at from 7s. to 10s. a pair (at the present time the prices they are willing to pay are much higher).

The English breeder can and does produce better and stronger birds than the German, and can profitably offer them at a lower price than the German quotes for his second and even third quality birds. What the English breeder has to do is to produce them in much larger numbers, for up to the present the supply has not equalled the demand. To help willing men to breed such birds is a pleasure, but I could not honestly advise any man to breed common Canaries to sell at the lowest prices quoted in the past by the Germans, for I know that his time, like mine, could be more profitably occupied. Hand-rearing Woodlarks.

SIR,—Replying to "Woodlark," I may say that I have kept Woodlarks for years, and there is something to admire in their little ways of showing their joy and pleasure at their owner's attentions, and I enclose the recipe of a food that I hope will be all he needs:—1 measure of crissel ground fine to powder, 1½ each of ants' cocoons, dried flies, and hard-boiled egg, and 10 measures of dog biscuits ground in machine. The whole should be well mixed up, and enough for each day moistened with carrot, scraped with a clean knife, chopped watercress, lettuce, or water. The above food will keep if kept dry.

Goose Grease as a Cure for Feather Plucking.

SIR,—In this week's issue of CAGE BIRDS I notice an article by Mr. Edwin Wilcock, New Lawley, in which he gives a good cure for feather plucking in Parrots, but he states that he failed through want of goose grease to complete a cure. If he will give me his full name and address I will send him a one lb. jar of goose grease, free of charge.

[We have communicated Mr. Wilcock's address to our correspondent, with thanks for his kindness in making the offer. It is pleasing to note the good fellowship prevailing among our readers, and their willingness to grasp any opportunity of conferring kindness.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.]

Rearing and Colour Feeding Canaries.

SIR,—The lecture by Mr. J. F. Park, published in last week's CAGE BIRDS is so highly interesting that I crave your indulgence to ask Mr. Park if it is his own experience that Cinnamon-coloured young can only be got by using a cinnamon hen and a cinnamon-bred cock. As Mr. Park is satisfied that young showing Cinnamon feathers can be bred from parents without any cinnamon blood in their veins, and that they are hens, can he say if it is possible to breed green-marked young from pure Cinnamon-blooded parents? If so, would the green-marked birds from this mating be cocks or hens?

Bullfinches Breeding in Captivity.

SIR,—I have been given to understand that Bullfinches will not breed in captivity, but I am pleased to say I have bred three from five eggs. Two of the eggs were punctured. The first young one was hatched on June 18 and the third on June 20. I have the Bullfinches in a back-yard aviary along with four Brambling-finch, and the cock Bullie is assisting in feeding his offspring. I may state that I am only a novice at the fancy, and keep the birds to look at only.

"JUST LUCK."

[It is not at all unknown for Bullfinches to breed in captivity, while, of course, Hybrids between other British finches and the hen Bullfinch are to be seen at all our shows.—Editor.]

A Nest in a Shell Hole.

SIR,—My nephew, Sergt. N. S. Price, sometimes sends me notes about bird life as seen in the trenches, and I think the last received from him is worth sending to CAGE BIRDS. The following is an extract from his letter:—

"Having seen something which was interesting in the extreme, I thought I would relate to you the whys and wherefores of it. This morning while on fatigue I was searching for nose caps and while looking into a shell hole, about three feet across, a bird (Lark) flew from almost under my feet. Looking down I saw there was a nest built between two big thistles. It contained three young and one egg, but I didn't touch the egg at all, so I don't know whether that was added or not. It was dark with black markings."

F. J. DAY.

So Near and Yet So Far.

SIR,—In quite a small enclosure in my garden (about 5ft. by 3½) I have a pair of Chaffinches, the cock is a fresh caught bird. Very soon after he was put in the hen built a beautiful nest in the covered in part up near the roof, laid, and sat well, but I did not know when she started to sit; I missed her, and on searching found that she was sitting. The other day I found three young dead on the ground, about a day old, and on looking into the nest found one dead youngster there and no eggs, so all must have been fertile. I had supplied soft food and seed, but if I had given live insects no doubt she would have fed them. I should like to have reared them, as I suppose it is rather uncommon to breed Chaffinches in such a small place. I have bred other British birds and several foreigners in cages or small aviary, but not Chaffinches before.

The Artful Blackbird and the Deluded Worms.

SIR,—A friend of mine had a curious experience some time ago. Looking from his window on to the lawn he saw a Blackbird hopping down the side of the flower bed, digging his beak into the grass as he was going along. When he had finished one side, he crossed over to the other and repeated the actions. My friend wondering what all this meant went to the spot and found at intervals worms had come to the surface. Did this constant picking in the grass resemble rain falling, and induce the worms to come up?

CURIOSITY.

Reported Occurrence of the Cirl Bunting in Ireland.

SIR,—With reference to the Cirl Bunting depicted in CAGE BIRDS, of June 3 inst., Constable Joseph Morton, of Kilmallock, captured on June 1, in the stables of Messrs. Suttons near the town, a strange bird, never before seen in the locality. I saw the bird, and from the resemblance to the Cirl Bunting in your picture, and also to the bird in your coloured supplement "British Birds," which I have, I am quite certain that the bird caught by Constable Morton, is a Cirl Bunting. The head is marked with black lines running from the beak to the poll, the rest of the colour of the head being yellow. The back is reddish brown, the breast and sides and over the tail are the same colour, but richer, and underneath the tail is yellow. Beak sharp pointed, but broad at the base and dark coloured. Eyes large, prominent, and very black. Some years ago, whilst driving on the road towards Rathkeale, in this county, I saw a similar bird perch on the hedge, but I never before or since, until the present one turned up, saw a similar bird. So Ireland along with the other things it has, has more than once, I believe, been visited by the Cirl Bunting.

W. M. CARROLL.

This letter we sent to our British Bird expert, Mr. Norman, and his answer was to the effect that the description fitted almost exactly the Yellowhammer, and that our correspondent was probably mistaken in thinking the bird to be a Cirl Bunting, especially as he had not mentioned the black patch on the throat and upper breast which is so striking a feature in the Cirl Bunting. We communicated this reply to Mr. Carroll, and published it in full in our query columns of last week. Further, we sent to our correspondent a full description of the plumage of the Cirl Bunting, and his reply is appended. Perhaps some other reader in the neighbourhood has seen the bird, either before its capture or after its escape, or it may be that it will be retaken. In either case we hope particulars will be sent us. We believe that, as stated in the inscription to the picture which has given rise to the correspondence, the Cirl Bunting has only once previously been noted in Ireland.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.

SIR,—Your letter of June 19 received, I regret extremely that owing to the tampering with the cage in which the alleged Cirl Bunting was confined, by a little boy of Constable Morton's, who had the bird, it got away, so I cannot verify what the bird was from the detailed description given in your letter, and Mr. Norman's description. That the bird was not a Yellow Bunting I am quite satisfied, as I know a Yellowhammer as well as I know a common House Sparrow. The bird had the black patch on the throat mentioned by Mr. Norman, and rather whitish yellow patches on each side of it. Of course the bird having escaped, I cannot examine it as to the tail feathers, but the description you give of the crown, nape and sides of neck would suit the bird. As I mentioned before, I never saw a similar bird, except on one occasion, and in that case it was flying wild, having just perched on a hergerow whilst I was passing. Others who saw the present bird declare they never saw a similar one, but the Yellowhammer is very common here, and the bird in question was not a Yellowhammer.

W. M. CARROLL.

A further letter from Mr. Carroll is as follows:—

SIR,—Your letter to hand, I shall be pleased that you do as you suggest in your letter of the 24th inst. about the Bunting. I was cycling through the country yesterday (Sunday) and came on several pairs of Yellowhammers, intent on providing for their young, or on courtship bent, but they were Yellowhammers pure and simple.

I am very sorry that the bird escaped, as I'd have sent it to you direct to inspect it. We are on the look out for it around here with a view to catching it again. The interest you have shown in the matter proves you the right man in the right place, and I wish you and CAGE BIRDS both long and successful careers.

WM. CARROLL.

An Exemplary Sire.

SIR.—Living on the American side of the "Herring Pond," I have only just seen CAGE BIRDS of May 13, and I see therein that Mr. T. Williams thinks it is unusual for a cock bird to share with the hen the duties of incubation. I will say it is what any ideal cock bird should do. I have a hen sitting at present, and every time she leaves the nest to stretch her legs and get a drink the cock takes her place on the nest. Every ideal cock should take care of the hen while on the nest, assist in feeding the young, and attend to them entirely for two weeks after the hen has gone to nest the second time. Some inexperienced cocks will fight the hen when she leaves the nest until she returns and then feed her, but these are not what I call ideal helpmates. Other cocks will not help in feeding the young, but stand and "play Indian" and look on.

A Jealous Cockatiel Belies the Reputation of His Species.

SIR.—In October, 1914, I purchased a pair of Cockatiels, and immediately placed them in a garden aviary containing Budgerigars. There they nested, but unfortunately, the hen after laying three eggs died from egg binding. From that time the cock bird remained unmated in the aviary till on May 4 this year I procured through an advt. in CAGE BIRDS another hen for him. From October 17, 1914 onward the Budgerigars had bred freely, and the Cockatiel never molested in the slightest degree either the adult Budgies' young or nests.

The recently bought hen Cockatiel soon mated, laying her first egg on May 25 last. As soon as the sitting commenced, trouble began. The cock Cockatiel selected for attack, apparently without cause, the only Budgerigar that at the time had a nest of young and eggs, and he so maltreated her that she neglected her nest, and the young in consequence died. I then put the poor maltreated hen Budgie in a separate cage, which I placed in the aviary; but so great is the venom of the Cockatiel that his one object seems to be to get into the cage to continue his attacks. At the same time he does not show the slightest animosity towards any of the other Budgerigars in the aviary. Can any of your readers explain such pugnacious conduct on the part of a species having the reputation, as I believe, of extreme gentleness? Or, have any had a similar experience?

W. KEMPT.

Two Kinds of Virginian Cardinals.

SIR.—Like your correspondent, Mr. H. D. Astley, I also wondered what bird Dr. Hanson referred to in his recent interesting letter, and I came to the conclusion that the "Virginian Cardinal" he remembered was the very distinct species, also called "Virginian" by the very clever people who inflict on us scientific names, but which really inhabit the valley of the Colorado and Lower California. Its scientific name is Cardinalis virginianus igneus. It is a darker bird, has a longer tail, a stouter beak, and can be easily identified by the almost complete absence of the black face-mask. On thinking the matter over, however, I decided that he must have confused the Virginian "Redbird" (American popular name for this Cardinal) with another "Redbird," found in much the same localities, and also a sweet singer. This latter is a Tanager (Piranga rubra); it is all red, but has no crest.

The two species are frequently confused in the Southern States. For instance, in a seven-penny novel which is to be found on all book-stalls at railway stations, called "The Song of the Cardinal," there is an allusion to a local saying that, when the Cardinal says "Wet, wet," there will shortly be rain. But a popular work now before me ("Our Bird Neighbours") declares that it is the Tanager, and not the Cardinal, which repeats this note.

For the English aviculturist, however, there are only two races of Virginian Cardinals—the larger, darker bird, which nests and (frequently) winters in the Southern States, and the smaller, brighter bird caught in, and exported from, Mexico. The former is the bird which used to be imported, and has a very sweet song; the latter is the bird which is imported nowadays, and is not nearly such a good singer. I pointed this out in "Bird Notes" a long time ago, and a few years since I asked the opinion of Herr Fockelmann, of Hamburg, who in the past thirty years has imported many thousands of these Cardinals. He replied that he had noticed the same thing, and also stated that, in point of hardiness and length of life in captivity the Southern Cardinal is notably inferior.

I notice that Mr. Astley seizes on this opportunity to make another protest against the frequent use of abbreviations by fanciers. This time his protest is considerably watered down; he only suggests "indolence" on the part of Dr. Hanson. The remark he flung at me, which I recently quoted in your "useful publication," was that such abbreviations were "worse than a mistake—they were common." He asks what would have been the result had he written an article in CAGE BIRDS containing such abbreviations as "nets," "jows," and "tins." Well, I imagine that nothing very dreadful would have happened. I am nearly sure that our Editor would not have lost a night's sleep, and he might even have been grateful to Mr. Astley for saving space. Whether Mr. Astley would have made himself understood is another matter. Every aviculturist, however, understands the meaning of the abbreviation "Cage." Personally, I like the old English word "Nightingale," but most of my correspondents use the abbreviation, and I am never roused to wrath thereby. It never occurs to me to tell them that their literary style is "worse than a mistake—it is common"; if I did do so I should expect them to regard me as a disagreeable person.

But the abbreviation which I used was not "Cage." It was the recognised popular name Blackstart, and I challenge any reader to say that the name Black Redstart "brings back to one all that is charming and beautiful" more successfully than the name Blackstart.

Mr. Astley's protest is one of those avicultural episodes which have amused me more than a little, and I think it will also amuse your readers, if I explain to them the true inwardness of the situation. Mr. Astley has described himself as a "country squire." A country squire, as we all know, does not usually devote much time to literature, and anyone who reads Mr. Astley's contributions to the "Avicultural Magazine" will probably come to the conclusion that literature is not one of his strongest points. Now, I am an ex-public schoolmaster and, however great my ignorance on the subject of birds, I certainly ought to know a little about English prose composition. In Mr. Astley's severe lecture to me on this latter subject there is therefore a faint suggestion of the process popularly known as "carrying coals to Newcastle."

Having been told that my literary style was "common," I, of course, did not expect to have the privilege of being asked to write for this particular magazine again, but, much to my surprise, only a very short time had elapsed when I received two requests from Mr. Astley for "copy"! I did not reply to these communications, and one would think that this would have been regarded by any ordinary person as sufficient indication that I did not wish to have anything more to do with the "Avicultural Magazine" under its present editor. Imagine, therefore, my surprise when I one day came across an advertisement in "your useful publication" announcing that I was one of its "constant contributors!"

Now, Mr. Astley has made his protest, so, in common fairness, I must be allowed to make a protest also. If I have occasionally used abbreviations, it is because I am a believer in the good old adage that "when one is in Rome, one should do as Rome does." I protest against those who, while calling themselves aviculturists, are too grand, too fastidious to use the homely language of their fellow aviculturists; who take no interest in "common" birds, but must have something more expensive and more fragile than their fellows; who write to the "Daily Mail" claiming to have "one of the finest collections of birds in the country"; who insert descriptions and photographs of their moated houses in the "Avicultural Magazine"; who, in a word, set themselves on an avicultural pedestal. They are spoiling our hobby, one of the best features of which should be that it brings all classes together and makes them understand and like one another better.

W. E. TESCHEMAKER.

[While giving publication to the above letter as sent, we should like to say that Mr. Teschemaker seems in our view to be somewhat hypersensitive. We took Mr. Astley's remarks on the practice of abbreviating the names of birds as having a general application, not a personal one. Further, we think that the very fact that Mr. Astley has twice asked Mr. Teschemaker for copy for publication in the "Avicultural Magazine" is in itself evidence of the appreciation Mr. Astley has of Mr. Teschemaker's ability to express his wide knowledge in proper language. This appreciation we are sure will be shared by all those who have had from time to time the privilege of reading in CAGE BIRDS articles from Mr. Teschemaker's pen.]

THE REARING AND COLOUR FEEDING OF CANARIES.

A lecture given by Mr. J. F. Park to the members of the Vale of Leven C.B.C., and communicated by the hon. sec., Mr. A. H. McLean.

WHILE the hen is sitting, the food should be of the plainest, the staple of canary seed, with a pinch of rape, is quite sufficient until a day before the eggs are due to hatch; a very small taste of egg food, or a bit of bread soaked in milk, may be given, but no green food.

On the thirteenth day, on a glance into the cage, one may see a half shell on the bottom, or, on listening closely, one may hear a little "cheep"; then we know there is some results from our efforts. We would not advise the fancier to disturb the hen in any way, but just have patience, and he will find out later on how many young the hen has got.

If he happens to catch the hen off, and sees a little yellow spot on the neck of the young, he will know the hen has given them a feed, and things are going on all right. A little hemp can now be added to the seed supply, and with fresh egg food supplied regularly in small quantities, and a little green food, the young ones will grow rapidly.

I might mention here that I make up my egg food with tea biscuits, having boiled the egg for fifteen minutes, and, when cold, chopped it up as finely as possible (the back of a fork will do when one has no egg mill). I grind five good tea biscuits to powder, and add the egg and one teaspoonful of sugar, the whole, when thoroughly mixed, is ready for use.

A Critical Period.

About the eighth or ninth day the young birds should begin to form their feathers, and there is always a little danger at this period, but provided that all goes well, and they get on all right, I would recommend that they get a clean nest, as if this is left until later they are apt to be disturbed, and leave the nest too soon. At about two weeks old they are strong enough to be about, and on the sticks, but they should be kept snug and warm in the nest as long as possible.

A whole lot could be said about the hen's second laying, etc., but we want to say something about moulting, and I propose to consider this from the point of view commonly known as colour feeding, and which is much more interesting than the simple annual changing of clothes.

The question of what is colour, and how it is produced, has engaged the attention of fanciers for a long time. New plumage, in the early stage, is not feather, but only the little tubes, or quills, in which the blood circulates, and which eventually develop into feathers. This leads us to believe that the colouring matter must be deposited through the blood, and in bygone days many different things were tried in order that this improved colour might be got.

As a result of varied experiments it has been proved that certain foods affect colour to a certain extent. If the feeding then is the secret of colour, what is the "natural" colour of the Canary? If by reason of habit (a habit which has been handed down) we feed during the moult, as at other times, on canary seed, etc., when the bird is confined in a cage, and has no other choice of food, we get the colour which is pale, and is generally known as "natural" colour.

How are we to prove that that is the natural colour of the bird? Is not the word unnatural wrongly used, for how can a colour which has been improved by feeding be called unnatural? We must, of course, admit that nearly all the food supplied by us to the bird is artificial, for where in its natural or wild state could a Canary get hard-boiled eggs, for instance?

I maintain that if we give a choice of foods, and the birds partake of a proportion of something which improves their colour, it cannot be called unnatural, though it may be unusual.

Colour Feeding in the Old Days.

I have not heard or read of anyone who has claimed to be the originator of this colour-forming food. There is a story that it was first found out by a lady giving her singing bird, which was unwell, some cayenne pepper with its food, and the bird, being in the moult at the time, began to show the effects in its new feathers. A friend, noticing these feathers, asked her what she had been giving her bird, and, having found out, he carried the experiment further. Be that as it may, the history of the early effects of colour feeding would take up too much time.

Away back in 1871 colour-fed birds were put on the show bench, and were looked upon with suspicion as having been "faked." Birds shown at the Crystal Palace Show in February, 1872, by Mr. Benrose, of Derby, led to some trouble, but in the year following he made his secret of feeding known, and when it was explained to the Fancy (through the "Journal of Horticulture"), in December, 1873, that it was nothing more than capsicum or cayenne pepper, most people did not believe it. The wonder is that it had not been discovered sooner, for it had long before that been recommended medicinally.

Well, now, having satisfied ourselves that we are going to colour feed our birds, we turn our thoughts back to them, and we look to our flight cage, where our young ones are now about eight weeks old, and by this time it will be necessary to put them on the feed. Some breeders single them out, and put them singly into small cages or moulting boxes, but the breeding cages which we have been using will do all right.

I like to moult them in pairs better than singly, for I find they then take their food better, and thrive better. The trouble about moulting a lot together is the habit of plucking, which some of the youngsters develop. We have to take care that birds, especially those promising ones we hope to show, are not plucked, or have their flight feathers soiled or broken, as, of course, they do not moult these in the first moult.

How to Prepare the Colour Food.

To prepare the colour food I make up the egg as already said, only adding one extra teaspoonful of sugar, as sugar is helpful to their feathers, and I begin with one teaspoonful of the colour food. Several makes are on the market, but they are really very much alike.

When you buy a 1lb. tin, say, of colour food, or cold pepper, as it may be called, really prepared capsicum, it is a good plan to turn some out on a tray, and add, say, two ounces of hot Natal pepper. This small proportion gives a gentle heat to the food. A little fine salad oil, some fanciers prefer cod liver oil, might also be added, and when all have been thoroughly mixed put it back in tin ready for use. Then add one teaspoonful of this colour food to your egg food, and each bird should be allowed a teaspoonful per day, or this quantity per head when several are in one cage.

Gradually increase the strength of the food by adding more colour until it reaches four teaspoonfuls to the egg, and keep at this strength until the birds moult on the head, or go on until the moult is finished.

Some fanciers take away the seed while the birds have the colour food in the dishes, but I have not found this necessary, and do not believe in it. If the birds are healthy and the food rightly made, there will be little trouble in getting the birds to take it.

Do not give the birds green food while on the colour food, but at intervals a little linseed should be given to add lustre to the feather. If the birds are not keen on eating it, a little can be added to the colour food in the form of linseed meal, but see that it is fresh, one tablespoonful to the egg.

When Moulting Time Comes.

When the birds are getting on with the moult a small bit of sulphate of iron, about the size of a hemp seed, should be dropped in the drinking water every other day, and clean water on other days.

A quick moult is always desirable to produce the best results; it shows the bird to be in a healthy state, as the same amount of vital force which enables the bird to throw off its old coat produces the new one.

During the moult it might be well to hang a thin muslin curtain in front of the cages, as it serves the double purpose of keeping off the strong light and keeping the birds clean. The whole moulting should occupy nearly two months, and a big proportion of this time is occupied in moulting the head. A long time after the body moult is done the head and neck will still have to moult, and round the eyes a light ring can be seen; until this is finished the colour feeding must be kept up.

It may appear strange to some that one bird in a nest along with some others, which have all been fed exactly alike, and which has been seen to eat its full share of the colour food, has shown little or no colour. This is a weakness, and the bird would have shown it in the same degree on plain feeding. The deposition of colour is proof of its possessing its functions, and in healthy order, and by giving the food as said we find out the birds which have not the capacity of producing colour.

Capsicum feeding, then, instead of being something which is to hide defects, really becomes a good guide to us, indicating the strength and character of the birds, and helping us to select our breeding stock, which are likely to carry out to a practical issue the theory of like producing like in regard to colour.

Questions having been invited, Mr. Park answered the same in a manner that the merest novice could readily understand. Mr. A. Maxwell, of Partick, one of the most prominent Norwich Plainhead Canary breeders in the West of Scotland, stated that he was thoroughly pleased with Mr. Park's remarks, and heartily endorsed the advice given, and a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY AS A NORWICH CANARY BREEDER.

By G. W. SAUNDERS (Haslemere.)

An old hand at Canary breeding gives some advice on how to build up a strain of winning Norwich that should be useful to novices, and some others.

I HAVE been a lover of birds for a good many years, and still have recollections of the time when, at about eight years of age, I kept a hen House Sparrow for two or three months during one very cold winter, and then let it have its liberty when the weather got warmer.

But it was about twenty-six years ago when I first commenced to breed Canaries. I had a very bad start, for I bought a cock bird from one man and a hen from another. The hen died egg-bound. I bought another, and that also died during the process of laying.

I had been told by a friend that one never could breed Canaries the first year of trying. Of course, we had no birdy paper like CAGE BIRDS at that time to tell us differently, and where I was living I knew only one bird fancier, and he was one of the "never breed Canaries the first year" men.

Still, I paid another modest three shillings and got another hen, a foul green mixture sort of bird, and from that hen I bred three youngsters. Of course, I really thought I had done something clever in breeding young Canaries the first year of trying. Not only that; I also thought they were real champion Norwich.

The next year I bred nineteen youngsters; I may say I didn't make a fortune out of them, for as I was moving I sold the lot, except one cock bird, at the big sum of two and ninepence each.

Suspended Animation.

Though I had to dispose of my birds I still had the birdie fever a bit bad, and after a year or two I was again able to try my hand at breeding Canaries. It was about that time that I went to live at Sutton, Surrey, and I there made the acquaintance of that well-known Norwich fancier, P. J. Muscutt.

Being an old Northampton fancier and exhibitor, he was well in the know about the ins and outs of the breeding and exhibiting of the chubby ones, and I should like to say I learnt more from him than from any other fancier I know. He put me on the right road by the advice he gave me, also by selling me a decent pair or two of birds to make another start in breeding.

At that time he used to show at the Crystal Palace shows, and I used to go with him. Several of the old hands would get together and discuss the merits and defects of this or that bird, where this bird beat that one, and so on. This little novice used to hang on right behind with ears open, and perhaps mouth as well, so that I should not miss anything that was said; then in my little way I used to weigh the lot up, and by so doing I learned a lot which helped me in my hobby.

I think that a good show is the place for a novice to learn. If he is willing to keep quiet and know nothing, I'll bet he will soon learn what a bird should be like, but I am very much afraid there are novices of to-day who know, or think they do, more than the old hands who have been at the game for a long time.

The Luck of the Beginner.

It was in 1901 I exhibited at my first show, that was at Caterham Valley. I sent two birds, a yellow and a buff cock, both competing in the same class. It was a fifty shilling limit show. I find, on looking up the catalogue of that show, that the well-known judge, Mr. T. Heath, who judged the Norwich at the late L. and P.O.S. show, was also judge at my first venture.

Being my first time out, I am afraid I was, like many others had been before me, rather excited, especially as friend Muscutt had told me he reckoned I should beat him, so after leaving work I rushed home, didn't stay long for tea that night, and it was not long before I was on my bicycle and doing that seven miles to Caterham.

Only those that have had the "bird fever" very bad know what it is like; it takes a bit of getting rid of. But once in the show I soon found the birds (it was a mixed show), and, what's more, I found one of my birds was first and special, and the other yhc, and in a class of twenty Norwich. What did I feel like? Why, it was one of the proudest moments of my life, especially as I had beaten a Palace winner belonging to friend Muscutt, but I had bred it from a pair he sold me, so a lot of credit was due to that fancier. Alas, next day I received a notice from the secretary, Mr. Kilby, to say my winning bird had been claimed. Well, that was a little set back to me, but I had the pleasure of supplying four hens to the lucky purchaser.

From that time I have every year but one bred and exhibited my favourites, the chubby ones. I have been fairly successful on the show bench. I was told the other day that to be successful on the bench one must needs have a long pocket to buy the winners, and I may say if that had been correct I should never have been able to have managed it, for I always breed my own winners, and sometimes other fanciers' winners as well.

Of course, we welcome the fanciers with a long pocket, and we cannot do, and don't want to try to do without them. I only wish to point out it is not necessary to buy your winners, for if one is a real fancier with a certain amount of grit or a certain amount of staying power, coupled up with a good dose of birdie fever, I feel certain he will come out on top at times.

Make Haste Slowly.

I was speaking to one of our well-known judges some years ago at one of the shows, and he said to me, "You are doing very nicely with your birds, now keep gently on as you are going." I think that was good advice to a novice, for as novices we are rather inclined to want to go too fast, trying to run before we can walk.

As I am penning this in the hopes of helping the novice (I don't profess to be able to teach the old hands anything, though there are none of us but can learn something from one another), I would say, first get to know what a Norwich Plainhead should be like; visit the shows; don't fancy you know enough or know more than the champions; hang on behind and listen to the criticisms on the birds, and I can promise that you will hear plenty of that, as a rule, at our shows. What you don't know, and cannot find out without asking, ask some fancier, or the judge if he is about, to explain to you. I know by experience they will be pleased to tell you what you want to know.

If you find your birds are far from the mark, then I would advise you to go to a reliable fancier and get him to fit you up with a good pair or two of stock birds. But first of all find out if he breeds his own winners, for if he cannot breed his own winners it is very certain he cannot sell you birds for you to breed yours.

Do not think you are going to buy good, sound, reliable stock birds at the price of song birds, or you will be mistaken. Pay a fair price for a pair or two of real good stock birds, and then you may expect to breed something decent to look at.

One big mistake some novices make is in having too many pairs of half-raters. My advice to those is, clear out most, or all, except, perhaps, a pair or two which have been proved to be good feeders, as they may be useful. It is not number we want in our rooms, but quality.

Type and Quality All-Important.

I am a stickler for type and quality, and would like to advise the novice to keep type and quality well to the front. Size is all right when you have type and quality with it, but without the real Norwich type and quality of feather size will not often get you the red ticket which we all like to see on our own cages at the shows. I was speaking to an exhibitor at the late L. and P.O.S. show, whose birds were a bit down in the prize list, and he said, "I can see where I have made a mistake. I have bred only for size."

If I wanted to stamp type into my stock I should pick out two or three pairs of birds which excelled in type, and in breeding from those I should expect to stamp the proper Norwich type into my stock. I have proved this in the building up of my own strain of Norwich, for when once we have the proper Norwich type fixed in our birds then we can increase the size.

To keep up the size I usually mate up a pair or two of the largest birds I have, and they generally breed me one or two large stock cock birds, and sometimes a show bird.

Some fanciers will tell us the way to breed show birds is to use a large cock and small hen; others say medium sized birds, and some will have large birds. As so much depends, however, upon how and what the birds are bred from, I myself do not think that one can make a hard and fast rule, though I certainly have a leaning to the large cock and medium sized hen, as my experience has been that the small or medium sized hens prove the best feeders, but I have bred winners from all the three different matings.

I was once asked what I considered the hardest point to breed and maintain in the Norwich Plainhead. I replied that my experience had been that the hardest point to breed was a good bold head, a head with a good entrance, full cheeks, and with a nice rise from the beak.

LESSER AND MEALY REDPOLLS.

These charming British birds are great favourites both as pets and as exhibition birds. The Lesser Redpoll (the top bird in our picture) is resident with us all the year round, but the Mealy is only an Autumn-Winter visitor, sometimes coming only in small numbers, and in other years in immense flocks. It is better known in the North of England and in Scotland than in our Southern counties.

As the pairing of the birds correctly is very important, and I should say the most important part in breeding good birds, I should like to advise any fancier, if he does not quite understand the art of pairing to the best advantage, just to ask some kindly fancier who does know to give him a hand at the job; it will pay to do so.

To improve the heads in my little stock, I pair two or three pair of birds together which excel in head properties. Instead of looking at my stock, and saying to myself, "Now, G. W., you have three or four cock birds and three or four hens which have all got good heads, and you have others that fail a bit in head, and you must make them go as far as you can by putting those with good heads with those that fail a bit," I should pair the best-headed birds together.

If they only breed me good-headed birds it would pay me, for the point is I am helping to stamp good heads into my stock, and a Norwich is nothing without a good head. The very first thing that catches the eye of the judge is the head and front of the Norwich, and if during the process of judging the bird gets put back because it fails in head properties, it would take a bit of doing to get it up again into the first three. Nothing looks worse than a Norwich with a head on its shoulders about large enough for a Border.

I have not had much experience in double yellowing or buffing, so on that point I cannot speak. To keep up the colour in my stock I usually pair a clear to a marked or variegated bird, and I have found no difficulty in keeping up the colour in that way, but if I wanted to improve, and I had not got the right kind of bird to do it with, I should procure a yellow variegated green cock or hen, not the "Liverpool green," but a bronze green, as there are such birds to be had. I certainly should like to advise any fancier not to try the Lizard, for I think so doing would bring a lot of trouble into one's stock.

Then there are some that recommend the Crest-bred to improve the size of the Norwich. I should say don't use this either, for I think we have enough size generally in the Norwich at the present time, and our birds want a bit of pulling into shape.

A mistake some novices make is that when they are fortunate enough to breed a good bird, and they find that someone is after it with a tempting offer, very often they are induced to part with it, thinking that they have still got the parents and can breed another like it.

My advice is, don't part; those parents may never again breed you such a champion. If a novice wishes to keep his name well up in the prize list he will need to keep his best for some time. Better sell a few half-raters than your best, for by keeping the best you can improve your stock year by year. I can safely say, without boasting a wee bit, that that has been the rock on which I have been able to build my strain and breed a winner or two each year since I commenced exhibiting.

Keep your best until you have built up a strain of Norwich that you can always rely on to breed you some winners; then you can part with one or two now and again. Remember that winners are not bred in every nest, and if you sell your best at the start you must, if you think at all about it, know you are letting the best of your brains go out of your stock, and you cannot afford to do that in building up a strain of Norwich.

I have no need to go into the feeding, etc., of my birds, but before closing these few rambling notes I should like to say again that if any fancier has the ambition to breed winners it can be done with the advice and help of CAGE BIRDS' staff of experts and other fanciers, who are always ready and willing to give advice if one is willing to learn. If these few remarks only help one novice I shall be satisfied, and I close in wishing CAGE BIRDS and all the staff good luck.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

P. J.—Answered by post.

STRAINED TOE (A. E. W.).—The bird has undoubtedly strained the toe a little, probably by too violent exercise about the perches, or possibly by getting a claw stuck in the wires and struggling to release itself. You should see that the claws are not overgrown, as this greatly increases the risk of these accidents. For treatment get two saucers side by side, fill one with fairly hot water, but well below the scalding point, and dissolve in it a small teaspoonful of boracic acid, and fill the other with cold water. Catch the bird and hold the foot in the hot water for a few minutes, then transfer it to the cold for a few minutes, and repeat these operations several times in the same order, being careful to finish up with the cold immersion. Wipe dry, and carefully massage the foot with a drop of some stimulating lotion, such as Elinman's, or even a drop or two of a mixture of equal parts of olive oil and whisky well shaken together. Repeat these operations once daily for a week, and see that it has well fitting and properly shaped perches.

GONE BLIND (Clydebank).—Sorry to disappoint you, but the bird is clearly suffering from cataract, and nothing whatever you can do will be of the least avail towards effecting a cure. Neither can I advise you to breed with it any more. It would, indeed, have been advisable not to breed with it this season, as there is a great probability of the progeny being predisposed to the trouble. There is no real necessity to destroy the bird on account of this trouble, as it will live happily enough in its cage alone, and also probably sing more or less as soon as it gets accustomed to its changed condition. It would certainly live the full length of its days in spite of this affliction.

THREE IN ONE (Rainbow, Tottenham).—(1) It is extremely doubtful whether this bird will be of any use for breeding this season, but there is no reason whatever why she should not be a successful stock bird next year. The cause of her sitting in the nest and getting no further was that the ovaries were not fully developed, and now the moult has set in there is no likelihood that there will be any further development this season. Your best course when she was sitting in the empty nest was to have given her a small clutch of some common eggs to hatch out and rear the progeny if she would, which would have been a very likely circumstance. Now you cannot do better than keep her in a good-sized cage, in a comfortable place, and get the moult over as completely as possible, and after that keep her on a fairly plain dietary for the rest of the winter. About the middle of next February begin to feed her rather liberally, and give a regular supply of young dandelion stools and seed heads as soon as you can get them, and keep her near to some young and vigorous, singing cock. Then when the proper time arrives mate her with a lusty young cock in full song, and she may go to nest and complete the cycle in a normal manner. (2) Add a teaspoonful of lime water to the drinking water of the hen with diarrhoea, and mix in the egg food a little rice powder. A teaspoonful of well-boiled summer rape daily will also help to correct it. (3) I should suspect the cock as being responsible for this repeated infertility. If the hen shows signs of going to nest again, although she has already done enough in ordinary cases, you might let her have another chance and mate her with a robust young cock that has been filling the eggs well.

COLOUR-FEEDING (Colour Feed).—You ought to have said how you have been feeding and treating the birds generally, then I may possibly have suggested some cause for the lack of results in your attempts at breeding. If you have not a copy of "Canary Breeding for Beginners," get one from our Manager, 7d., post free, and digest its contents between now and next season, and you should be able to show a better record at the end of next year. As regards the colour feed thoroughly mix together a teaspoonful of the colour you name with two tablespoonfuls of the soft food you propose using to begin with, and give the birds a teaspoonful each daily of the mixture slightly moistened with a drop or two of water. Begin to give this strength at the end of July or two three times a week to all the birds you are going to feed, whether they show signs of going into moult immediately or not, and as soon as they show any signs of the moult approaching give it daily, and as soon as feathers begin to drop increase the proportion of colour to three teaspoonfuls to each four tablespoonfuls of soft food, and a week later again increase it to a teaspoonful of colour to each tablespoonful of soft food, and continue with the latter strength until you see the new feathers beginning to come on the neck or head, then gradually reduce to the strength you began with, and finish off with that. It is best when using the food you propose to mix a quantity to last some little time, so that it can stand a little for the colour to thoroughly penetrate into the biscuit food. Keep it stored in an air-tight tin. If birds do not take to it as freely as you would like, add a slight sprinkling of maw seed after mixing for each feeding time. About half a pound of colour should be quite sufficient to moult four birds.

WILL THEY INHERIT? (Novice).—Whether the young you have managed to rear from the hen that has persistently "sweated" her progeny will inherit a predisposition to the same vice depends largely upon whether the vice is prominent in the strain from which the hen is bred. If this is so, then there is a great chance of the young being predisposed to it. But in a great number of cases this "sweating" is a mere accident arising from temporary conditions or environments, or management, and in such a case as this there would be no inherited taint. One cannot tell what vices, or virtues, for the matter of that, any given brood may be likely to inherit without knowing rather closely the history of their progenitors. All that could really be said definitely of these particular birds is that they will not necessarily be addicted to "sweating" their young, and if kept in good sound health and normal breeding condition they probably will not, unless there is a strong hereditary taint in the strain.

EFFECTS OF THUNDERSTORM (J. N. A.).—I do not think the thunderstorm would really have anything at all to do with the hens allowing the young to die. The incidence of the storm would be merely a coincidence. Judging from what you say about the cocks, I am inclined to think that they were already in very high condition, and the freshness and exhilarating after effect of the storm increased their vigour, and probably that of the hens also, with the result that the behaviour of the cocks quickly obliterated the broody instincts, which had already suffered somewhat in the excitement of the storm, and brought the hens into nesting condition again, with the natural consequence that they allowed the young to starve. Many hens will act in a similar way without any storm to condone their behaviour. Had the cocks been further away, out of sight and earshot of the hens, I should imagine the hens would have got over the little disturbance in a short time, and all would have gone on as usual in the course of a day or so. After this experience of your hen's idiosyncrasy it would be the best plan, if there is another brood coming along, to see that the cocks are well out of the hen's way during the process of rearing the young.

IS IT TOO LATE? (Unlucky).—If you could get a hen that is ready to begin nesting at once there is no reason why you should not try the cock with her. There is still time to pull off a brood with luck. You may treat the Yorkshire hen the same as advised to "Rainbow, Tottenham (1)" in this issue, and possibly with a little more patience she may do something yet.

YOUNG DYING (Matthews, Ilford).—It is difficult to even hazard a guess as to the cause of young dying from the details you give. It would have been helpful if you had said whether the young had food in the crop when they died, and the condition of the nest, or, at least, the state of the evacuations of the young before death. There is really little fault to find with your feeding, except that you should scarcely give a "few lettuce leaves" at once. One moderate sized leaf in the morning and another in the afternoon, or the equivalent in other green salads, would be quite sufficient for a brood at a week old. As the cocks were removed with the previous broods try leaving them with the hens the next time, and give the egg food in moderate quantities only each time you give fresh, begin about the fourth day to give green food as indicated above, and vary the lettuce with seedy chickweed and flowering groundsel, begin with egg food composed of equal parts egg and bread crumb, and gradually bring it by the time the young are a week old to equal parts each egg, bread crumb and crushed sponge cake. If the hen seems to slack in her duties at once add to the drinking water ten drops of lemon juice and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pin for one-half of each day until she resumes her duties properly. Otherwise continue your present treatment and I see no reason why you should not succeed in rearing the young when they get to this age.

NORWICH COCK MOULTING (Ches.).—There is nothing materially wrong with your treatment, but you might with advantage make your staple diet a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape, instead of two parts canary as now. The bird was doubtless more susceptible to the recent weather changes than its companions. Treat it the same as advised to "E.N." Jan. 22 issue, which will apply wholly to your case.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

MULE MOULTING (Great Scot.).—It is undoubtedly very early for your Linnet Mule to commence to moult, but sudden changes of weather appear sometimes to affect these bachelor birds in this way. You had better keep him in the same room, and feed him as you would during the moult, that is, give a little mixed seed with his staple food, and a spoonful of egg food twice a week, unless you intend to colour-feed him, when he will require it daily. The seed mixture you mention is quite a good one, but you might add to it a little sunflower seed. (2) If you intend to try to breed exhibition Mules from your Finches you will require for the purpose some really good Canary hens; these should be Norwich birds and yellow in colour. With these yellow hens you stand a chance of breeding a good yellow Mule, besides one or two richly coloured buffs. From buff hens you would get nothing but buff Mules. Select the two largest hens for the Goldfinches, the two smallest ones you can run with the Redpolls. If you have big hens for these you will probably get a majority of unfertile eggs, and yet you want them of fair size and your Mules will come out on the small side, and will probably be useless for exhibition purposes.

HAND-REARING THE NIGHTJAR (T. M.).—I have never heard of any one hand-rearing the Night-Jar, but I see no reason why you should not attempt it. Your chief difficulty will of course be the food, as they are purely insect eaters. I do not think you can do better than proceed on the usual lines in hand-rearing small softbills, that is by using the very best brand of insectile food, and adding to it at first a small portion of hard-boiled egg. Take a small quantity and make moist with fresh new milk, and feed the bird every hour, giving only a very little at a time; later increase the time between each meal. In addition to this food you must supply insects. The small green fly will do admirably for the first few days, then small caterpillars and winged insects, taking the wings off the larger ones before giving to the birds. Keep clean and warm. If you succeed in bringing them up I see no reason why they should not be kept in a suitable aviary with other softbills. (2) I believe snipe have been kept in captivity among the Waders at the Zoo. I have had no actual experience of them myself, but I should think they would be rather difficult subjects to meat off, on account of their peculiar method of feeding.

ABOUT REDSTARTS (A. Rutter).—Your young Redstarts will moult later on, but they will not show their full beauty of plumage until they get their spring and summer dress. Respecting colour feeding, this is quite a matter of taste, and although it darkens the breast colour somewhat, and gives it a more even tone, some bird lovers prefer them in their natural plumage. The colour food used is the same as supplied to Canary breeders, and is that generally advertised by dealers in our columns. This should be mixed with the soft food, commencing with a small portion, and gradually increasing it to the required strength. Feed well during the moult, adding fruit to the soft food, and allow a big cage, and the bath on suitable occasions.

WHAT BIRD? (Brython).—It is rather difficult to identify birds from a written description unless the sender is very careful in giving full particulars. For instance, you say nothing as to the size of the bird, which of course of the first importance. The British bird that I find fits the nearest to your description is the Chaffinch, but possibly this bird is well known to you. It may not be a British bird at all, but some foreign species that has managed to escape.

WHO IS THE FATHER? (H. Scottney).—We have had evidence from time to time of Mules breeding with a Canary, but in your case the fact of the hen running with a cock Canary for some time throws doubt upon the parentage. The cock you say was away from the hen 15 days, but this would not prevent him being the father. I have known the germ to be dormant longer than this before maturing. You say the Mule feeds the hen and young; this does not prove that he is the father, only that in all probability he mated with the hen, and therefore thinks the young are his. It is in any way a doubtful case, but you should not be long in doubt. If the Canaries are clear, then the young should be clear, or nearly so. If the Mule is the father, the young are almost certain to be dark in colour, and this should show in the dark colour of the skin, so that you should be able to give a shrewd guess as to their parentage before they feather, and as soon as they feather there should be no doubt. If they should prove to be Mules, perhaps you will kindly send me a card.

BUILDING AN AVIARY (A. C. Westlake).—Corrugated iron, used alone, is not a desirable covering. The objections to it are that it is cold in the winter and hot in summer, besides sweating n damp weather; but, of course, at the present time when all kinds of building materials are so dear, I can understand your wanting to use it, and you can do so in the following manner. Put up your framework for the aviary, cover it with common roofing felt, and over that fasten the corrugated iron. I would also advise you to so arrange your framework that you will be able to board up the interior when wood is to be procured at a reasonable price. A couple of coats of paint on the corrugated iron will preserve it and somewhat modify the extremes of heat and cold.

BIRDS DOING BADLY (C. H. M.).—The unusually cold weather is the cause of your muling pairs not doing well. Hens that fail to nest or build and not lay, are quite common this season. Good food, such as a spoonful of egg and biscuit, mixed seeds, and wild food, is the best remedy, together with exercise and a free use of the bath. You may manage to get a good brood yet. There is still time.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S.

PARROT IMPROPERLY TREATED (W. C.).—Owing to the improper dietary the bird has become in a heated condition generally. Bathe its feet in warm water containing a little borax. Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and continue this for a month at least. If it shows any signs of weakness owing to the change, etc., give a little cod liver oil emulsion thinly spread on the biscuit, and put half a teaspoonful of chemical food in the drinking water twice a week, on such days as you are not giving the magnesia. It can have, in addition to what you are now giving, nuts and a little plain cake; the supply of fruit should be liberal. Do not omit to supply regularly grit and cuttlebone, and keep a chunk of wood in the cage for it to exercise its mandibles upon. It will gradually recover tone as the improved treatment makes itself felt. Report progress about six weeks hence.

PULLING ITS FEATHERS (F. A. F.).—We must hope the lapse is only temporary. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, so long as the bowels do not become abnormally loose. Give a liberal supply of fruit daily (most Parrots eat sweet apple freely), any kind it will take. Give it a seed mixture of sunflower, oats, and giant canary seed, mixing with it half a pint of monkey nuts to each quart of the mixture. If it gets at all run down or thin, then lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food, except when giving the magnesia. Supply regularly cuttlebone and grit, also keep a chunk of wood in the cage for it to exercise its mandibles upon. You can also supply dry crusts, biscuits, and a little plain cake. The green food is quite in order. Continue to use the quassia spray, as some of the skin parasites can only be discerned by the aid of a microscope. Report progress in a few weeks.

PECKS ITS TOE (F. W. S.).—You must bathe the foot in warm water to cleanse it, dry with a soft cloth, and then anoint with Friar's Balsam; you must do this every other day till a cure is effected, and oftener if necessary. It should be caught and treated whenever the toe is bleeding. Put one teaspoonful of fluid magnesia in the drinking water every fourth day, and on the intermediate days lightly colour the water with chemical food. Supply as much seeding and flowering grass as the bird will eat. I presume the bird has continual access to cuttlebone and grit; if not, keep up a supply.

BUDGERIGARS AND CATS, ETC. (Eperance).—As to cats, I am afraid the only remedy is to put another lot of netting over the open roof portion of your aviary, twelve inches above the existing roof, of course you must close in sides and ends as well (1 to 1½ inch mesh netting will be fine enough); this will leave a space of twelve inches between the two lots of netting, and even if cats sit there it will not frighten the birds—a few rows of fine barbed wire above, resting on the top lot of netting would make very uncomfortable sitting quarters for the cats. Put magnesia in the water at the least sign of constipation till it yields. Re pets loose indoors, I am afraid the only suggestion I can make is that you have wire-netting on a light wood framing fixed across the brickwork of window opening, then your pets would be safe and the window could be opened with impunity, and the cost of it would be very trifling indeed. If you do not do this you must keep them caged. Avadavats are Waxbills (get our Nutshell). The present value of Zebra Finches is 15s., and I should want to see the bird before sending my money at the price you name. No birds are cheap now, and very few are on the market, and you'll have to wait your opportunity to purchase. Zebra Finches, Avadavats, or Gold-breasted Waxbills would meet your case, but you would have to tame them. Keep caged at first and gradually train them to go in and out—only feed in cage, they always go there then to feed and roost.

FOREIGN BIRD QUERISTS

should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3d.); or the "Nutsell" booklets (2d. each): No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Avadavats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

BUDGERIGAR WITH SWOLLEN EYE (Miss D. C.).—Apparently this bird has been in a draught; avoid such in the future. Catch the bird and give it two drops of tasteless castor oil direct to the beak from the end of a quill, and before releasing the bird bathe its eye with a tepid, dilute rose water and zinc eye solution, repeating this every other day till full relief has been given; once the bowels have been well opened, cease giving the castor oil, but continue to bathe the eye till the swelling disappears. Give unstinted supplies of seeding and flowering grass, and good sound seeds (canary, white millet and millet sprays), also cuttlebone, grit and water. While the trouble lasts lightly colour the drinking water with chemical food. Do not permit any constipation, at the least sign of this give a mild laxative at once.

YOUNG GREY PARROT (Staffy).—Your diet is quite satisfactory. As regards your other query, you may change and fare worse; as you probably know, an unacclimatised Grey Parrot is a risky purchase. She, or he, whistles and mimics, the dog, and in like manner it will ultimately mimic the human voice. You cannot fix an age period when they should talk, individuals vary so considerably. Continue your present training methods, though its first utterance is quite as likely to be some word or name it has heard in conversation as what you have striven to teach it. Keep it where it will hear plenty of talk, and will have a share in your home life, yet not in a position where it will be continually scared by hurried movements. Personally I should keep the bird, as you have had it over two months and it remains healthy; power of speech to a greater or lesser degree should come in due course.

PICKING ITS FEATHERS (G. M. L.).—Continue the use of the fluid magnesia, putting one teaspoonful in the drinking water every fourth day. Your present dietary can be continued in full, and in addition try and induce it to take either a piece of biscuit, bread, or cake, that has been lightly spread with cod liver oil emulsion (it can have whichever it prefers), once or twice daily. Do not omit to keep Parrot grit and cuttlebone continually in the cage, also a chunk of wood for it to exercise its mandibles upon. A piece of raw carrot occasionally is very wholesome if it cares for it. Stand it out of doors in some sheltered position on all suitable days, but do not subject it to cold winds, draught, or the full glare of the sun. Continue the use of the quassia in the bath. Persevere with the above treatment for about a month, then report progress.

POST MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 2s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent in the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

All the experience of years of careful study by experts is at the disposal of readers.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, J. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kluch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is brimful of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/-, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc., Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said: "It makes bird-keeping easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCIERS' PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic memoranda, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

THE BRITISH BIRD MANUAL.

By H. NORMAN.

The Most Thorough and Practical Work on British Birds ever Produced. Published in two parts, or complete bound in cloth. Part I. Hardbills. Deals in the fullest manner with Linnets, Goldfinches, Bullfinches, and all other species of Finches. Part II. Softbills. With Blackbirds, Thrushes, Jackdaws, Larks, and most of the more commonly kept species of insectivorous birds.

This work, lucidly written by a noted specialist, contains fullest directions for Hand-rearing, Keeping, and Exhibiting the most popular of our British Birds. Each bird is dealt with separately, its nesting habits, etc., are fully explained, and these, together with a description of its general characteristics, will enable the novice to easily identify the various species. Each part contains a coloured plate and numerous black and white illustrations by the author.

MULE and

make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES LOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid.
Magnificently Illustrated by that great bird artist
MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

ALWAYS USE "CAGE BIRDS" DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers. In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller stating what he is required to send on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit will be returned to the depositor.

6.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient plus the extra postage incurred has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

"CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL"

FOR 1916.

The Golden Reference Book for all Bird Keepers

NOW READY.

BETTER THAN EVER THIS YEAR.

The first edition last year was sold out in three weeks, and the first edition this year is nearly all ordered. Last year many were disappointed through waiting. Order quickly or you may be again too late.

In its pages will be found information of value to every bird keeper, and no bird keeper can afford to be without it.

It tells how to breed English Canaries to equal the Germans in song. How to mate Canaries to ensure success on the show bench. How to make a perfect drying cage. How to keep mice out of the Bird-room. And many other things of every-day value.

The price, as usual, is only Sixpence.

AVIARIES, BIRD-ROOMS, AND CAGES, 2/3 (cloth gilt).—By H. Norman. Contains ten lovely full-page photographic plates. A practical guide which deals thoroughly with the proper Building, Fitting, and Management of Aviaries and Bird-rooms, and the making of Cages.

YORKSHIRE CANARIES, 2/2.—By H. W. Battye (Past President of the Yorkshire Union). Absolutely the very best Handbook dealing with the Yorkshire and its sub-varieties. Contains complete instructions upon Pairing, Breeding, Moulting, and successful Exhibiting, also how to treat in both health and disease.

NORWICH CANARIES, 1/1.—By C. A. House. Tells the fancier all that he needs to know to enable him to become successful as a breeder, and exhibitor of the Norwich Plainhead. The chapters on "Forming a Stud," and "How to Produce the Ideal" are worth the cost of the whole book.

THE SECRETS OF HYBRID BREEDING REVEALED AND EXPLAINED.—By many notable Mule and Hybrid Breeders. Among the contributors are such well-known breeders as Messrs. R. Colton, W. H. Vale, C. Houlton, C. J. Ward, R. Beswick, G. Lander, T. H. Kinch, T. Smith, etc. This Handbook, which contains 212 pages, 7 inches by 5, is bristling of the most practical information on the highly interesting subject of Hybrid Breeding. Price 1/6, post free 1/2.

PARROTS FOR PLEASURE AND PROFIT, 7d.—By C. P. Arthur. A practical handbook, dealing with the keeping, feeding, and general treatment of the Grey, the Amazon, etc. It explains how to sex these birds, the treatment of newly imported specimens, and cures for their various ills.

SEEDS, FOODS, AND WILD PLANTS FOR CAGE BIRDS, 1/2.—By various leading authors. Full information on the seeds suitable for all cage birds, their food values, uses, etc., with descriptions and illustrations of the wild plants indispensable to the successful keeping of British and other birds.

HOUSE'S CANARY MANUAL, 1/2.—By C. A. House. A thorough, practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, including the Roller (or Singing) Canary. An illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman; exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge.

BUDGERIGARS AND COCKATELS, 6d.—By C. P. Arthur. The breeding of Budgerigars and Cockateels is recognised as one of the most profitable and pleasure-giving sides of foreign bird-keeping. This eminent authority gives full details on how to keep, feed, breed, tame, and teach them to talk.

FOREIGN BIRDS FOR BEGINNERS, 1/1.—By W. T. Page, F.Z.S., etc. Foreign Bird Expert to "Cage Birds." A highly instructive Manual. It contains a magnificent coloured plate and a number of black and white illustrations. Indispensable to all keepers of Foreign Birds.

BRITISH BIRD MANUAL, 2/3 (cloth bound).—By H. Norman; or may be had in two parts. Part 1: "Hardbills," and Part 2: "Softbills." Either Part, price 1/1, post free. Each part contains a beautiful and life-like coloured plate and numerous illustrations of birds and cages. Up-to-date information on the keeping of British Birds.

THE STOCK BOOK, 7d.—Of our invaluable "Breeding Room Register" a well-known fancier has said:—"It makes bird-breeding easy." No breeder of birds can possibly afford to be without it. It simplifies the operations in the bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. Contains both Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird, and Show Registers of simple and unique character, in addition to useful account pages.

CANARY BREEDING FOR BEGINNERS, 7d.—By Claude St. John. A Practical, up-to-date guide to Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner. Deals very fully with the choice, sexing, and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS.—Complete bound in cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. This great work is written by Charles Houlton, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading exhibitor and a leading expert and judge. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist, H. Norman. There are no less than sixteen coloured and sixteen art plates in this work. Each plate is a perfect study of an individual Hybrid.

FANCY PRINTING.—Fanciers requiring business notepaper, postcards, trade envelopes, etc., should write us for a quotation. We are now in a position to supply these at specially low rates combined with first-class work. Artistic mementoes, with block of any desired bird, and fancier's name, address, and words of description as desired, 250 5/-, 500 7/6, carriage paid.

PARROT CATCHING IN NEW ZEALAND.

THE New Zealand Kakapo, or Large Parrot, with all its credit for brains, allows itself to be caught in a very simple manner. In the dusk of the early dawn the Maoris, carrying tame Kakapos tied to long sticks, set off to hunt. These are the call-birds used to attract by their screams the large flocks of Kakapos flying overhead. While one Maori tethers the call-birds by the leg, and sets them screaming to the full extent of their lusty lungs, another cuts as many perches as there are men in the hunting party from the neighbouring bush. By means of flax bands these are lashed firmly to different parts of a little hut or whare (in which the hunters secrete themselves), so as to act as perches for the unsuspecting birds. Each perch is so fixed that it can be drawn down into the whare through the roof. On the perches are placed running nooses of flax, and when all is prepared, each Maori sits quietly within the whare with his flax cord in his hand ready to pull at the right moment. The call-birds are then disturbed by means of a long stick, and presently a large flock of Parrots, hearing their cries, wheel down and settle with a great chuckling on the adjacent trees. One by one they settle on the perches of the whare to hold converse with the call-birds, and when every perch is occupied a Maori gives the signal and the nooses are pulled. The hubbub of screaming and scolding as each perch with its captured Parrot is drawn down into the whare can be best imagined.

"Kakapo" is the Maori name for the Ground, or Owl, Parrot of New Zealand, the word signifying Night Parrot. The bird is almost entirely nocturnal in its habits, and when it is not hiding in holes in trees or rocks, spends most of its time on the ground, hence its name the Ground Parrot. Its face is furnished with hairs and elongated feathers which give it something the appearance of an Owl, and these account for its name of the Owl Parrot. It is a brownish-green bird of the size of a Raven, and makes a most intelligent and affectionate pet in captivity, though it is said not to live long as a captive bird. It is somewhat curious to note that the note published above, and which has kindly been sent to us by a Canadian reader, states that large flocks "fly overhead," for it is pretty generally understood that the Kakapo is incapable of real flight, and that it is in danger of becoming extinct because of its incapacity for flight making it such an easy prey.—Editor CAGE BIRDS.

Club Reports.

PLYMOUTH W.C.O.S.

Meeting, June 20, Oddfellows' Hall, Morley St.; Mr. W. French presided over a fair muster. After the general business a pleasant hour was spent on questions and answers. Decided to arrange at next meeting for annual show, and we hope to see a big muster of members. Members elected: W. A. Clift and S. Press.—J. E. Rowe, Press Corres.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.S.

Meeting, Village School, Alexandria, June 27; President W. B. Gillies, chair. Agreed that the F.F. show be held in Village School, Alexandria, July 8, at 3. Norwich, 4 classes; Bord., 5; Crest and C.B., 2; Yorks., 2; Scotch Fancy, 2; Mule and Hyb., 2; and a liberal classification for British and Foreign, including Mules and Hybrids. Mr. R. H. Livingston, Rutherglen, will judge Canaries, and Mr. A. Steel, Pollokshields, the remainder. A big turn-out of birds is requested as there is a grand lot of specials.—A. H. McLean, Sec.

RICHMOND C.B.S.

Meeting St. John's Hall, June 26, Mr. W. Phipps chair, and a good attendance. The business was final arrangements for the F.F. show at St. John's Hall July 10. Mr. J. Robson judge. Many members and friends came forward with specials, and Mr. White with a medal. Messrs. Rudd, Bishopgate, have also promised a special, so that there is a special to every class. A diploma presented by the society will be given to the best bird shown by both champion and novice. Birds are to be at the hall by 8.30 sharp. Anyone overlooked as to receiving schedules kindly apply at once. Four new members were elected last meeting, and if members will bring friends to our show we shall be able to propose more names for our next meeting, Sept. 30.—Colin Brown, Hon. Sec.

MIDLAND ROLLER C.C.

Meeting, headquarters, "Seven Stars," St. John Street, Wolverhampton, Mr. J. Willows presiding over a very good attendance. Letters were read from gentlemen asked to officiate as judge at forthcoming annual show, and the selection was left until the July meeting. A very interesting paper was given by Mr. T. Twigg on his experience of "Breeding the Roller Canary." Members present very much appreciated Mr. Twigg's efforts, and at a future date he promised another paper on the "Training of the Roller Canary." Next meeting, July, an explanation of the different tours of the Roller Canary. Several members promised to bring a few birds. I shall be pleased to supply any information to Roller fanciers wishing to join the society; entrance fee, 1s.; annual sub., 2/6.—Hon. Sec., J. W. Thompson, 9, Gorsebrook Road, Wolverhampton.

EAST ANGLIAN NORWICH P.C.

Meeting, Festival House, Norwich, June 29, Mr. J. J. Smith chair, and the attendance was very satisfactory. The business carried over from the last meeting was the agenda. The correspondence received and other business which had been transacted by Sec. occupied considerable time. The Chairman reported on his visit to Lynn, and that after judging the F.F. Show of the Lynn Society he addressed a meeting of the members explaining the objects and possibilities of this new club. The support he was promised is very cheering. Decided that the Norwich portion of the committee should consist of six members and on a ballot being taken the following were elected: Messrs. Dunham, Leggett, Mitchell, Russell, Shearing, and Whitmore. Various other matters were briefly discussed, and it was decided that the next meeting would be held July 27.—R. Tomlinson.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES CLUB.

Meeting, July 1, Good Templars' Hall, 122, Ingram-st. Vice-Pres. Dinwoodie presided over a meagre attendance, caused no doubt by the inclement weather. At special meeting, rule 4 was amended by the striking out of the words agreed upon. The classification for Young Bird Show, July 29, 3.30; judge, Mr. Alexander, McFarlane, Shawlands, is Nor., 4; Bord., 4; Yorks., 2; Liz., 1; A.O.V., 1; Nov., 1; Mule, 1. Judges were confirmed for Annual Show, Jan. 27. Plainheads and Crests, Mr. A. McFarlane, Glasgow; other Canaries, Mr. Al. Walker, Mules, Brit. and For., Mr. J. Crauna, Wichterader. Third raffle of the season was fixed for July 15, to Bridge of Weir, by train, leaving St. Enoch's Station at 3.5. Good turn out requested. Young Bird Show begins at 3.30, July 29; judging at 4. New members can be enrolled at this meeting.—J. H. Adam, Hon. Sec.

PELTON FELL C.B.S.

Meeting held May 27. There was a heavy debate about the pool; the section special at 18, each member to show as many as he liked, did not suit a few of the members, though they thought it would suit the novices to pool. It was, however, proposed and seconded that it was a pool, each to pay 1s. a bird. I am sorry the South Moor has taken our date, July 15, for it will hurt both societies, as there are about twelve of our members belonging to both societies. The South Moor show has its judges picked; there are 22 classes; they are putting 2s. a class, and a friend has given £2 so it is a good start. Pelton Fell has 16 classes, and the show was made a table show, to stage at 2, and pick a member to judge. We always took 1s. out of the funds, and it is left for the members to settle. I think if one is a member of both societies he will show where the money is. Pelton Fell had a meeting on Feb. 19, and they settled their table show for July 15. Special meeting, July 8, business important.—J. Stanger, Sec.

BLAYDON-ON-TYNE C.B.S.

Meeting, July 1. Decided to hold a one-day Open Show, Nov. 11, an experiment during the war. Also to hold a Nest Feather Show at next meeting, Aug. 3, two classes each for Norwich and Borders. Mr. Jos. Carr judge. Admitted as members: Mr. J. B. Bell, Rev. C. R. Appleton. The judging then took place, there being some very likely young birds shown. Yorks., Cl.: 1, Harris; 2, 3, Lynn; 4, vhc, Graham. Mkd.: 1, 3, Harris; 2, Dobson; 4, Lynn; vhc, Graham.—G. Haver, Sec.

SOUTH MOOR (Social) F. & F. & Co.

Meeting held July 23, Mr. Taylor chair. The confirmation of the new rule was carried; the principal item was the arranging of schedule for annual show Nov. 4 and 5, and it was decided to run 36 classes for all sections. Messrs. M. Hodgson, Brown, and M. Atkinson were elected to judge. Decided to run a char-a-banc trip, and a meeting will be held on July 9; members who intend to go with same should attend this meeting. Members were also delighted to see our fellow fanciers, Mr. J. Paddle, who is back from the front wounded, and is enjoying his bit of leave; all the members wish him a speedy recovery.—Geo. Lane, Sec.

HALIFAX.

Meeting, headquarters, July 1. A fair number turned up to listen to a lecture by Mr. S. Dean, on "The Treatment of Young Birds from Nest to Moulting," and very interesting and instructive were the different methods of treating young birds in various ailments, and at different stages of their life. After the lecture many questions were put to Mr. Dean and answered in a very satisfactory manner, and all enjoyed a thorough good evening. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer, who in replying said how pleased he had been at being able to spend a night with the Halifax fanciers, and hoped to be able to be with them again on some future occasion.—J. J. Dunn, Sec.

The Young Bird Shows.

NOTE.—Secretaries will greatly facilitate the work of ourselves and our printers if they will kindly endeavour to send their reports as nearly as possible as they see these accents printed, and if they will also write the names of exhibitors as distinctly as possible.

RUNCORN B.B.A.

Nest feather show, July 1, Union Buildings. Mr. Hampson, Penketh, judged, and his awards were well received. 43 birds entered of good quality, especially in novice Yorks. Mr. Lutton won silver tea-pot with four nominated birds: Yell. Yorks. (5): 1, 3, Bradbury; 2, Whyte. Buff (7): 1, 2, 3, Lutton. Yell. Nor. (5): 1, J. Guy; 2, 3, Walker. DARLINGTON C.B.S.

First Nest Feather show, George Hotel, July 1. Considering so many members having been called to the Colours the show proved a success, a grand lot of babies being on view, and it was quite an attraction to the many visitors, the ladies especially taking a great interest in the exhibits. Mr. Jeffries won special for most points in Canary Section, his Crests and C.B. being feature of the show. Mr. J. Cuthbertson judged Canaries and show. Mr. H. Hawkins British. Yorks.: 1, Mudd; 2, Wright; 3, Warrington. Nor.: 1, Gent; 2, 3, Jeffries. A.O.V. Canary: 1, 2, 3, Jeffries. 2, Robinson; 3, Warrington. Linnet-Redpoll: 1, Robinson; 2, Headfield; 3, Carter. PLYMOUTH W.C.O.S.

Second N.F. show, Oddfellows' Hall, Morley St., June 28. Entries came up a bit better, 70 birds being staged. Yorks. were a great improvement. Norwich mustered 17 in two classes, and some fine ones were staged. Crests were small in numbers, but quality tip-top. The feature of the show was the fine display of Cinn., ten grand birds being on view. Mules and British were about the same as at first show. Judges, whose awards were well received: Yorks., A. E. Cheney; Nor., Crest, J. Perrin. F. Pope; Mules, I. Ouch; Brit. and For., J. Perrin. Yorks. Yell.: 1, 2, 5, Woolley; 3, 4, Craven. Buff: 1, 2, Craven; 3, 4, Woolley. Nor. Country Rambles

BRIGHTON AND HOVE C.B.A.

The second ramble of this season was held June 25, when an enjoyable half day was spent. Leaving Brighton at 2.10 for Falmer by train, we walked to the hills. Nests seemed scarce, or rather difficult to find, owing to the dense foliage. Yellow Buntings haunted us, but no find was recorded, and it was the same with the Linnets and Green-fiches. Reaching Plumpton V. several finds were made, with Blackbirds and Thrushes well to the front. Having enjoyed the fine view from the hill top the botanists amongst us commenced gathering a nosegay, and at the finish we all had "some." Then by way of Ditchling and Keymer we reached Hassocks, where we trained to Brighton, arriving home at 10 p.m., still ahead of darkness. The party included Messrs. W. Firth (Vice-Chair), J. Brown, H. T. Gibb, E. Loomes and Will H. Gibb (Sec.).

The Ideal Yorkshire Green Canary. How to Produce It.

A Lecture delivered to the members of the Halifax O.S. by Mr. R. E. Helliwell, Halifax.

I am with very great pleasure that I offer an article upon that most pleasing and beautiful bird "The Yorkshire Green."

The Yorkshire Green is known by all experienced fanciers as the bird of colour. There are three kinds of Greens, the bronze colour or cinnamon green, the black or smutty colour green, and the bright dark grass green; the latter is the colour required.

In giving my experience of past years and my idea of a proper commencement with stock birds, and the proper pairing of them, I shall have to give an account of different experiments that I have tried, some with good and some with bad results.

Its Popularity Increasing.

The ideal Yorkshire Green is not so plentiful in this country as the clear Yorkshire bird, but I am pleased to say it is increasing gradually in popularity. One reason for the comparative scarcity is that it is not easily bred as might be thought, that is so far as an ideal bird is concerned; but when an ideal bird is really produced it compares more than favourably with the clear Yorkshire.

We have to-day Greens as good as any Clears, but these are confined to a few fanciers, though I think by the way the Greens are improving, including the Liverpool Green, in which especially there has been a marked improvement during the last few years, we shall soon get on a line with the clear and marked birds.

An important consideration is that a breeder of clear and marked birds should never be without a good Green in his room for the purpose of crossing into his stock. The Green bird is the foundation for producing colour and is extremely valuable if for this alone.

Proper Birds to Pair.

I would recommend getting a full-blooded bird, say a self yellow bird from two Greens, so as to start at the beginning. The novice should purchase this from a reliable Green breeder, and the purpose for which the bird is wanted should be explained to the breeder who, if he be a true fancier, will provide the best in his power.

The desirable cock bird having been obtained it should be paired to a clear hen bird from clear or ticked parents, it may be that not many marked birds are got from this mating, but such as are produced are very valuable, both for stock and show purposes, as there are now classes provided for them at our shows, though in past years these heavily marked birds have been in many cases discarded by breeders who did not know their value.

It is possible that from this cross might also be obtained a self or fowl Cinnamon, these are exceedingly valuable, especially the hens, for quality of feather and ground colour. This ground colour is always found in a good show bird, no matter what its variety; in clears the ground colour will be of a pinky nature, and greens will have a dark greasy looking skin, providing they are in good health and condition.

The time when the stock birds are paired, and the time immediately following are very important ones, for if the birds do not exactly "hit" in pairing up it is very disheartening to a beginner, although if he is a true fancier he will stick to it through thick and thin. This is the one way to become successful, we all have our ups and downs in any hobby, and fanciers will have to be prepared to meet with such as egg eaters, non-sitters, layers of soft eggs, clear eggs, no eggs at all, and hens that become egg bound, these will come everybody's way in one season or another, and we must take them as they come along.

Make a Good Beginning.

In making a start it is important to go as far as one's pocket will allow; a pair of good stock birds may be got from a reliable breeder at say from 25s. to 35s. per pair. One pair may consist of a self yellow cock and self buff hen, or fowl marked wing or tail, but be sure they are bred from Greens and Green.

The cock must be extra good in colour, of good size and with plenty of stamina. On the hen's side you may allow a little for colour, but here you must be sure to have deep quality of feather and pencilling. For myself, I do not believe in the very big buff hens, big, sluggish, rough boned ones, for these mostly carry too much feather; a medium sized hen suits my taste if it has a good position. In selecting yellow hens, however, I like the big ones with the same properties, though I find they are difficult to breed.

For No. 2 pair get if possible a buff cock with a fowl wing or tail; size, quality, and all round properties to be the same as in No. 1. This cock I would recommend pairing to a good big yellow Cinnamon hen, self or fowl will do, make sure also that these birds are green and green bred.

Cinnamons the Foundation of Colour.

My reason for breeding with Cinnamon hens is to produce a green colour as the good Green is no use without it. These hens we call "Sports," and when your stock is paired together to produce the good green birds it is not very often these birds crop up in the produce, that is to say when you are breeding what we term "Green and Green."

The old maxim is that you will never breed a Cinnamon cock from the Green cross, as the Cinnamon birds will be hens, although I am proud to say I have bred them though in small numbers. The cock birds so bred, however, were, in my estimation, of no use for Green breeding; I have tried with them a few times, but always with bad results.

The hens I find are very valuable, the produce from a Cinnamon cock and a Green hen is too bronzy with no ground colour. I also find breeding green-yellow to yellow produces the same result.

I am a firm believer in double buffing for hen breeding, always providing that one has suitable buffs to pair together. I have never bred a yellow cock or a yellow hen in this way, and the buff cocks from this cross I find are of no use. In pairing these double buffs let them be snaky birds with good long flights not short-barrelled ones. Never mind a hollow neck either in cock or hen, but see that they are short feathered birds. If you should breed a yellow cock from double buffing keep him by all means, he will be full of colour, but discard the yellow hens if you should get any. As I have already stated, I have never bred a yellow hen from this cross.

Now for No. 3 pair, in this you should have Belgian blood on one side, I prefer the cock bird to have this Belgian blood, as you get stronger and bigger young ones in this way than from the hen's side. Pair the Belgian cross bird to a big variegated or unevenly marked buff hen, especially well filled in in neck, one with plenty of length preferred. Yellow hens from this cross in my experience are too fine in bone and frame.

If possible get a half or quarter bred Belgian cross, but mind you get it from a reliable man with pure Belgian strain, and then you are on the right road to success, provided you have the luck to breed young ones. The lightest marked of the produce of this pair you must cross with No. 1 pair, and the heaviest marked to No. 2 pair.

Just a few words here as regards Belgian birds, there are many Belgian birds crossed with the Scotch Fancy, my advice is to get the straight backed ones, that is to say, those without dropped tails. Get straight legs, not V shaped, as in the Scotch Fancies. Never mind the feather at the front, but avoid feathered thighs. If you get the pure Belgian cross they will have good wing carriage and be very narrow birds.

When crossing Belgian blood into the stock I prefer as big a bird as possible. I find from the hen's side they are too fine in bone to gain size, and that is what we require, but I have bred good birds even in this way so you see there are exceptions in any case.

The Nest of the Long-tailed Tit.

THERE is a bird, a fairy rather, that conjures to such good purpose with its favourite building material of lichens, feathers, and the webs of spiders, as to turn out a labour of love that must be among the most beautiful bird homes in all the realm of Nature. This is the Long-tailed Titmouse. Twenty years, says a writer, have gone since, in the days when, alas! life seemed longer and art of less moment, I watched the building of such a palace, but the other day, at any rate, I came upon one all but finished high in a blackthorn. Within this snug retreat the hen lays a prodigious number of eggs, the clutch that we associate with partridges, and the wonder is that these pretty little creatures, which do not migrate, are not more plentiful later in the year when the leaf is off. It may be that some of the little eggs slip away out of reach and are never hatched. It may be that, in the struggle for existence, which begins ere the young are fledged, some drop out and die unnoticed in the hustle at mealtime. There must be some explanation of the comparative scarcity of a bird that should be as plentiful as it is prolific. If the patient watcher can approach the nest at day-break with the noiseless Indian tread attainable only in "sneakers," and with due caution not to tread on snapping twigs, he may find the little couple at home, their long tails apparently (since, with the bills, they stick out of the tiny front door) tucked, squirrel-fashion, over their backs.

Twitterings.

The Wild Birds Protection Act has been extended in County Kildare, making it illegal to "kill or take" between Mar. 1 and Aug. 1 the Goldfinch, Linnet or Skylark.

Codnor Park and Eastwood C.B.S. are holding their F.F. Show on July 15, not 17, as stated in CAGE BIRDS last week, writes Mr. A. Smith, Secretary. Birds to be staged by 5. Mr. B. Simpson, Pye Bridge, judge.

The Young Stock Show of the London C.B.A., will be held at Headquarters, the Red Lion, York-st., Jermyn-st., on July 13. There are 24 classes for Canaries, 2 Hybrid classes, 8 British, and 1 Foreign, and the show promises to be a very interesting one.

REVIEW OF SCHEDULES.

Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S.—July 11, Reindeer Hotel, Rye Lane, S.E. Judge, H. Norman. 14 classes: Champ. Nor. 2, Yorks. 2, Brit. 1, A.O.V. 1, Mule or Hybrid 1; Novice ditto. Fee, 1s. first cage, 6d. after; prizes on sliding scale. Entries close July 8 to W. Hodson, 99, Upland Road, E. Dulwich.

Tonbridge.—July 26, Castle Grounds. Judge, H. Cross. 12 classes: Nor. 3, Yorks. 3, A.O.V. 1, Mules 1, Brit. 4. Prizes, 7s. 6d., 5s., 2s. 6d. Fee, 1s. 6d. Entries close July 12 to C. Greenaway, 11, Gladstone-road.

The annual First Feather show of the Edinburgh C.B.S. will be held in Cairns' Memorial Hall, Gorgie Road, on July 15. There are 11 classes for Canaries and 4 for Mules. The show opens at 3, and admission to non-exhibitors is twopenny. Mr. J. Holmes, Edinburgh, will judge.

Societies wishing the patronage of the National British Bird and Mule Club for their forthcoming shows should apply for same to Mr. E. Stephens, "Torrington," Devonshire-road, Palmer's Green, N., on or before July 24, giving name of judge and classification.

The 9th Annual Members' Show of Highgate and Hampstead C.B.S. takes place to-day, July 8, at The Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill. There are 41 classes in all, 23 being for Canaries, 6 for Mules or Hybrids, 9 British and 3 Foreign, and the show should be well worthy of a visit. The admission fee is 3d.

May I make an appeal through CAGE BIRDS to all members of the Coventry Godiva C.B.S. to attend the next meeting, July 8, when arrangements for young stock show will be completed, writes Mr. A. Wright, sec. (pro tem)? All fanciers in the district will receive a hearty welcome. The meeting will take place at the new headquarters, the Dun Cow, Jorden Well, at 8, and I hope to meet a good muster.

The leading article in the July issue of "British Birds," Messrs. Witherby and Co., High Holborn, one shilling monthly, is the conclusion of "Some Breeding Habits of the Sparrow Hawk," with photographic illustrations by the author, Mr. J. H. Owen. The rest of the number, except for an obituary of the late Major F. W. Proctor, is taken up by "Notes," which as usual form an interesting part of the issue.

A GOOD POST VACANT.

AS announced last week, the position of Secretary to the CAGE BIRDS Organisation Committee has fallen vacant through the unavoidable resignation of the late secretary, and an opportunity now offers itself to someone with the capacity and energy to carry on the work. A thoroughly practicable scheme has been drawn up, and all is ready for an immediate start. The position is a good one at the commencement, and should improve as the scheme matures and gets into actual practice. Letters to the Editor of CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, stating the salary expected, will receive the attention of the committee at the next meeting.

On Wednesday next, July 12, bird lovers should not miss the show of the City and Suburban A.C.B., at the St. Marylebone Church Institute, 60, Paddington Street, W. The hall is within five minutes of Baker Street Station (Metropolitan), and Regent's Park (Bakerloo) Railway Station. There are 34 classes of birds, and these will include Canaries, Hybrids, British and foreign birds. The show is open from 2 till 9.30, and the sixpence charged for admission includes catalogue.—(Advt.)

OBITUARY.

Mr. JAS. RONALDSON (Belfast).

It is with feelings of regret, writes Mr. Robert Browne, Belfast, that I inform you of the death of Mr. James Ronaldson, of this city. He was secretary of the City of Belfast Ornithological Society, and took a very keen interest in everything pertaining to birds. His valuable experience in "running" of shows will be sadly missed. He was a great favourite with everybody, and all extend their sympathy to his widow and family, all the male members of which are at present doing their bit for King and country.

MR. J. LUCKHAM (London).

It is with deep regret, writes Mr. G. F. Crawford, S. Bermondsey, that I inform you of the death of Mr. J. Luckham, hon. sec. of the South London Columbarian and Fanciers' Association. He was knocked down by a motor lorry in the Old Kent Road on Thursday morning last, and at 5 o'clock that afternoon, in Guy's Hospital, died from the injuries received. He was such a popular fancier that I am sure that the whole of London and the Provinces will join with the South London and Col. F.A. in tendering deepest sympathy to his wife and family.

A Pious Hope.

The collection of birds in the aviary at Victoria Park, Swansea, is to be dispersed, and poultry is to be cultivated in the aviary. The "Western Mail," Cardiff, says: "The idea is certainly a commendable one. If the corporation hens do no more than keep the hospital supplied with eggs that will be communal gain." It would seem to depend a bit on the size of the accommodation for the hens and the demands of the hospital.

Mr. H. G. Hannaford, a picture of whose successful variegated Yorkshire hen appears on our front page this week, writes that, although fanciers generally appear to have had somewhat of a bad season, he has done fairly well, having about 40 young birds from ten hens.

Fanciers residing within ten miles radius of Lochgelly, who wish to become members of the Lochgelly C.B.S., writes Mr. W. Grewar, must become members by the end of July in order to compete for the club's trophies. The fee of 2s. 6d. allows every one to compete for all trophies and members' specials at open and club shows.

Six Guineas: and "Thank You."

IN these times of stress it behoves each of us to do his utmost for the benefit of others without thinking too much of the cost to himself, and we hope we may say that CAGE BIRDS has "done its bit" throughout nearly two years of conditions such as have been bad enough to break the heart of anyone.

The hobby of bird-keeping appeals to people in every grade, from the humblest working man to the proud owner of wide-spread possessions. It extends even to Royalty, for the keeping of pet birds is one of the delights of our Queen, and of other members of the Royal Family, and all these people come under the heading of the much-abused word "fanciers."

It is for fanciers and by fanciers that CAGE BIRDS exists, and we are indebted to very many of these fanciers for their loyalty to their only weekly paper. Some of the most interesting and most instructive articles which have ever appeared in our columns have been published since the beginning of the war, and to the contributors we beg to tender our sincere thanks.

We now ask for a continuance of these favours, and invite one and all, whether "fanciers" or "aviculturists" (the terms have their separate meanings, but after all denote one and the same thing, lovers of birds), to let us have for publication for the general benefit their experiences with their pets.

In furtherance of this we offer a first prize of a guinea, and a second prize of half a guinea for the best and second best article in each of the four sections of bird-keeping, Canaries, British, Mules and Hybrids, and Foreign; eight prizes in all, amounting to £6 6s.

We know that there are many to whom the idea of competing for money prizes does not appeal; they are fortunately so placed that they do not want the money, and they would not care to be associated with a competition. To these favoured ones we would say: mark your contributions "Not for competition," if you so wish, but let us have them, nevertheless. The prizes will be given, someone will benefit by your generosity, and all will benefit by the reading of your experiences.

Others there are who have any amount of practical experience which would be of the utmost value to less experienced bird-keepers if they could know of it, but who are deterred from entering into a competition through a lack of literary ability. We have a word to say to these also. Let us have the information; we will put it into form, even if we have to re-write the whole from start to finish, and it will suffer nothing from your own inability to express yourself in academically correct phrases.

Articles may be sent at any time, the sooner the better, but the competition will close on Tuesday, August 1, and the prize-winners will be announced in our issue dated August 13. The Editor's decision as to the prize-winning articles must be accepted as final, and the right to publish any articles sent in, whether prize-winning efforts or not, is vested in CAGE BIRDS. Envelopes should be addressed "The Editor, CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.," and should be endorsed "Competition."

Mr. George Foreman has been obliged, owing to ill-health, to resign his position as secretary and treasurer of the Ulster Ornithological Association, writes Mr. R. Browne, 28, Oldpark Road, Belfast, and I have been appointed to succeed him. Mr. Foreman's retirement has been greatly regretted, and all the members wish him a speedy recovery.

I regret to say, writes Mr. J. Patterson, Chirside, that our esteemed president, Mr. M. Jamieson, Hawick, has been unwell for some time, and is down at Spittal just now to see if the change will do him good. I know that you and all members of the B.F.C.C. and your readers in general will join me in wishing him a speedy return to his usual health and spirits.

Who Frew Dat Brick?

Commenting on the fact that at the Nest Feather Show of the Sheffield C.B.S. there was an increase of entries, the "Sheffield Independent" says that the opinion was expressed that that might in some measure be due to the fact that men had had more time to devote to the care of birds since the earlier closing of public houses.

A Canary Back from the War.

A convoy of wounded soldiers which arrived at Halifax this week brought an unexpected inmate of the war hospital in the form of a Canary belonging to a Canadian. It rested in a cage on the stretcher of its owner until the strange scene on the railway station platform stirred it to excitement, expressed in wild chirping. "It's all right, Dickie, I'm here," exclaimed its master in a cheerful voice, and immediately the bird seemed contented. The Canary accompanied the Canadian from the Dominion and has been with him both in this country and in France. — "Yorkshire Observer."

Mr. George Graves as an Ornithologist.

In the column of the "Evening News" for which "Quex Senior" is responsible the inimitable comedian, Mr. George Graves, is reported as having said, after explaining how busy he is just now with rehearsals: "So I never get any food at all," he said in his best fast-man manner. "I haven't the time—but there it is, I don't mind—I don't mind, for my voice is now improving daily. Once I sang like a moulting Hedge Sparrow ejected from its mossy nest by a Cuckoo's bailiff. Now I have a voice like a Nightingale in full song, handed on a special diet of hemp-seed and groundsel." This is in Mr. Graves' best manner, but one needs to be also something of an ornithologist to appreciate the subtle humour of it. When a Hedge Sparrow is moulting, whatever might be doing by the "Cuckoo's bailiff," its employer, the Cuckoo, would have left our shores for its winter sojourn in Africa, and the Hedge Sparrow would long ago have vacated its "mossy nest" of root fibre, wool and hair. As if this were not enough, Mr. Graves rejoices in having a "voice like a Nightingale in full song, handed on a special diet of hemp-seed and groundsel." If to sing like a Nightingale that was being poisoned were the best Mr. Graves could do, we think he would not command the enthusiasm with which his audiences invariably greet him. He must have been "pulling the leg" of "Quex Senior."

THE ROLLER CANARY: ITS BREEDING AND REARING.

An instructive Paper given by Mr. H. G. Hill before the members of the Midland Roller Canary Club.

Telling particularly how to avoid the trouble of so-called "sweating" hens, the danger of too much egg-food at an improper time, and how to feed the young when they leave their parents.

OUR Hon. Secretary, Mr. Thomson, having invited me to give a paper on the "Roller," dealing with aspects of our hobby especially interesting to the novice members, I have pleasure in assenting to his wishes, not with any idea to pose as an authority, but in the hope that my own experiences, and the deductions I have made from them, may be useful to you.

I will not go over much-trodden ground again; I will conclude that you have kept your hens in roomy cages, and on a moderate diet through the winter; that you have selected hens which come from the nests of your best singing cocks, also considering their robustness and general health; the same with the cocks; and that now you have paired up your birds in the usual way, and are, like myself, anxiously awaiting results. You are wondering if you will be troubled with "sweating" hens, and "bad feeding" hens, and hens which don't feed at all. It is with such that I wish to deal chiefly in this section of my paper.

The Trouble of the "Sweating" Hen.

How does the trouble arise? If you do not know already, I'm afraid you soon will. Better, perhaps, if I give you a short sketch of your little hen-mother as she will appear in each of the stages of this annoying trouble.

First, then, she has gone well through the moult the previous season, ended the winter in good condition, and paired readily with the cock.

After the plain winter diet, you will have given her egg-food when paired, which she has eaten with avidity. About four days later she will look a little sick, and ruffled. "About to lay," you say; "that's the reason." Very good. A day or two later she lays. More egg-food till she has laid her last egg, then plain diet whilst sitting.

Now, about the time she looked sick and ruffled, you may have noticed that her bowel excrement was a little copious, loose, and yellowish. But, after commencing incubation, and back on plain diet the excrement becomes normal again, and the hen finishes the incubation period in excellent condition and health.

Perhaps on the thirteenth day you notice an empty shell on the cage bottom. The chicks are hatched. In goes a small half-teaspoonful of pure egg yolk. You keep to this for a day or so, then mix a little biscuit with the yolk, and later you get her on the ordinary egg-food which you give all your birds.

Let us go back to the first day. You put in the egg yolk, and an hour or so later find it all cleared up. In goes some more—soon vanishes. All's well, you think; she's eating the egg-food, and must be feeding the chicks. You watch her. Yes; up come the little beaks, and she feeds well, mothering them afterwards with fond care. "Good little hen, that!" you will say.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

About the third or fourth day you find the egg-food hasn't gone. "You empty it away, and put in some fresh to tempt her. Two hours later, still there! You watch. She comes off the nest, hops on the egg-pan, takes one half-hearted nibble, and hops off. Next you will see her at the seed hopper. From that hour she shuns the egg-food, but continues feeding a little—a very little—on seed.

A day later you will begin to notice, with a sinking heart, a certain damp stickiness on the under feathers of the little mother-bird. Very little feeding that day; egg-food hardly touched. Next you see the down of the young plastered flat on their heads. Nest foul—stained yellow. Hen restless. Young gape for food which never, alas! comes their way. A morning or so later you will find her off the nest, calling pitifully, and the young dead—starved to death.

That is one case. In another the hen will "sweat" very little, if at all, but the feeding will stop in just the same gradual way, and death end your hopes. There are various degrees of this "sweating" and "starving" business. The question is, do they all spring from the same cause, and, if so, what is that cause? I believe they do all spring from one cause, and I believe I know what that cause is. I do not believe that this poor little hen is to blame—the blame rests, in a large measure, upon us, and not on her.

First let me say that to call this trouble "sweating" is grossly misleading, and wrong. The hen does not sweat, nor do the chicks. Nor does she starve them because she is callous and cruel. She does not warm them with her little body through the dark night, only to starve and kill them in the light of day. Nor, if she were heartless, lacking in maternal instincts, would she have talked to them, mothered them, fed them in the early hours of their lives.

Why, then, does the nest of one hen die thus, whilst that of another hen, fed under exactly the same conditions, is reared into active and robust birds? I will do my best to explain according to the belief which my own observations have led me to. I have a firm conviction that the whole trouble is due to a deranged metabolism of the hen, and that this is due entirely to an over-indulgence in egg-food, or similar rich food.

The Secret of the Trouble.

Before going further, let us understand what the word metabolism means. Metabolism is a general term for the chemical changes of living matter. It means the whole chemical process entailed in the taking of food, digesting it, assimilating it, and converting it into flesh and blood and bone.

After the plain diet of winter your hen tastes egg-food when paired, and acquires a great appetite for the toothsome food. She sickens herself of it a little before laying; remember the sick and ruffled look, and the abnormal excrement, after the first few days. But during incubation and the plain seed again, she comes back to the normal condition. Then comes hatching time.

You will remember that the egg-yolk quickly disappeared. After two weeks' abstinence from the egg-food she has come back to it keenly. As fast as it goes you hear her more. She takes far more than she can feed to the chicks; the little beaks soon cease to gape, and she sits on them with the rest in her own crop.

Next day you slightly increase the supply, and it all goes—into the hen. About the third day she is in the condition of a boy who has eaten too much plum-nudding—she begins to suffer, sickens, gradually begins to loathe the egg-food.

That is why you begin to find it untouched about the third or fourth or fifth day. The hen has upset her stomach, to use a popular phrase. She begins to have flatulence, heartburn, looseness.

The whole digestive tract becomes over-worked, causing acidity of the stomach, or crop, due to fermenting and partly-digested food. Hence the food she feeds from that crop to her young is acid, sour—literally poisoned food. Diarrhoea is set up in the chicks. She cannot clean away the thin and offensive evacuations, and the moisture of those discharges stains her feathers, fouls the young, and the trouble gets worse.

In the later stages the poor little hen takes no food herself, or extremely little; she loathes it, and it probably gives her pain. So, as she has none, the young can have none, and they slowly starve to death, and you say that hen was a bad mother!

She was a "sick" mother, that is all—so sick that at last she gave up in despair, very probably feeling that she'd like to be dead herself.

"But," you say here, "if it is the egg-food, why doesn't it upset all hens alike?" I answer that, just as some of us have strong stomachs and other delicate ones, so it is with our birds. Some hens will never feel any ill effects from a liberal supply of egg-food, others are thrown by it completely out of gear, so to say. Again, some hens are not so greedy after the egg-food as others, and therefore not so likely to gorge themselves.

Watch carefully the hen that hops eagerly from her nest and waits for you when she sees you coming with the egg-food; she is the one to fear.

How to Prevent It.

Is there a remedy? Of course, the hens must have egg-food. Is there a way of giving it that will avoid this trouble?

I can only tell you my own methods, since adopting which I have been very little troubled with "sweating" and "non-feeding" hens, so called, though I do get them occasionally even now. This is what I do:

I do not take the hen off egg-food whilst she is sitting; she gets just a little—only a few crumbs—every day. This makes her less greedy after the egg-food when it is supplied at hatching time—much less so than if she were kept away from it during the sitting time. Then, when the chicks are hatched I give her only a very little for the first few days—just enough to keep the chicks going, and no more.

Briefly, I keep her slightly on the "lean and hungry" side, keen on her food, and so, by increasing the egg-food a little every day, gradually accustom her system to the richer food diet.

The Yellow Bunting is the familiar bird whose cheery song has been rendered into the words, "A little bit of bread and no ch—e—e—e." Our picture is a portrait of the specimen exhibited by Mr. H. Simmonds, Vauxhall, London, winner of many prizes at members' shows, and 2nd at the London and P.O.S. Show the only time shown in an open class.

I make it a rule, too, that there shall be several hours every day when the hen does not have access to egg-food at all, even when feeding a growing brood. I give egg-food at ten in the morning, removing it at mid-day, and giving mixed seeds. Egg-food again at five. Last thing at night crushed hemp, which is left in cages all night to form the first next-day meal.

You will wish to know what results have I had from this method. Well, I had a hen that sweated badly all last season, and this year she had reared one nest, and is now feeding her second nest, without a sign of flagging, treated as above.

I would impress upon you that this trouble is not due to the hen being a "bad" hen, but a delicate one. And I have got very bad sweating hens, which starved their young, into excellent mothers by carefully dieting them and dealing out their egg-food with a sparing hand. I do not believe that there are five hens in every hundred born which would willingly let their young ones starve. Nor do I believe in the "nervous" hen which lets her young starve.

Shy; but Watchful.

I breed from some hens in my study, in which I work all day, and sometimes far into the night, and though some of the shyest will never come off their broods while I am in the room, yet they rear them. If I leave the room for only five minutes, when I come back the egg-pan is empty, and the chicks are full. If we only knew our business in the Canary breeding line as well as our little hens know theirs we should have to complain far less of "bad mothers."

"But," you will remark here, "I ens that have never sweated yet let their chicks die." I answer that by reminding you that just as some babies are born into the world to die, in spite of all the loving care of mothers—and doctors too—so are some Canary babies; birds just strong enough to hatch, but not to live long.

And if they grow weaker and at last refuse to gape for food, what can the little mother do? They are the weaklings of Nature—just a little stronger than those you find dead in the shell, which, in turn, lived a little longer than the dead germs you find in "addled" eggs.

To put the foregoing remarks into a nutshell; try to select hens of strong digestion as your breeding hens, and even then keep them accustomed to egg-food. Don't starve them for weeks, then dote it out with a lavish hand. The temptation to go in for a "good, square meal" is one we ourselves might fall to had we been on prison diet for a fortnight, and then taken out to supper at the Savoy.

Remember that if you get over the first week, and the hen's digestion is not impaired, there is little to fear. If she goes off the egg-food a little then, there are the hems and mixed seeds to fall back upon, and the chicks will thrive on them then. But if you upset her in the early days she won't feed on anything, perhaps because the young are not strong enough then to demand their food with the same irresistible entreaty and force as they acquire later on.

Now we will imagine that you have rounded this corner, and at the age of three weeks mated the hen again, and that the young, after being fed in the nursery through the wires, are doing for themselves.

I may say that I work on a regular system here. At the age of twenty days my young birds are banded out of the nest, whether they want to or not, and divided off. If they are able to just stick on the perches they have to go all at the same age into the nursery; I believe they are better there, as soon as they can perch, than in the foul nest, where the hen, coming into the building fever again, begins to pluck them. They will be a month old before the hen sits again, and at that age should do for themselves.

I divide them off from the hen a full day before putting the cock back to her, as then she gets used to feeding them through the wires without him to worry her. Then whether the cock feeds or not, they go on all right.

Young Birds and Egg Food.

Now they go to the flights. Well, I have impressed upon you to be sparing with the egg-food with your hens; I now turn round and ask you to be liberal in dealing it out to the young in the flights. I cannot justify this advice better than by relating my own experiences.

The first year I bred Rollers I got fifty young, reared up to three or four months old; and then I lost quite half of them. "Going light" was the trouble; the birds went emaciated and "thick," and finally died.

I had gone by the sixpenny books, which tell you to get your young birds, when seven weeks old, gradually on to "hard seed." I did so, giving them, as per book advice, a little egg-food two or three times a week, and a little hemp crushed on alternate days.

Well, they died; and I sat down to think. It worried me for about a week, and then the sixpenny book went into the dust-bin, and I hope some poor scavenger hasn't found it and tried to rear Canaries by it himself.

The first thing that occurred to me was that a young Canary of seven weeks is about like a growing lad of fourteen. Suppose you cut down that boy of fourteen to bread-and-water, with a bit of butter, or meat, twice or so a week. What would happen? Especially bearing in mind that he had, up to that age, been fed on the most nourishing food?

Most likely he'd "go light"! He would be got on to "hard seed," so to say, at the very age when he wanted to develop frame, and "make up" all round. So with the young Canary.

ON THE PROFITABLE BREEDING OF CANARIES.

THE COLONY SYSTEM VERSUS THE CAGE SYSTEM.

SIR,—I should just like to say a word on the above, which I consider has opened up a very important question to fanciers as to which is the best system. Last year I tried the cage system; I had one cock and hen in a good sized outdoor breeding cage, and from this pair I produced 17 young. This year I am trying the colony system with eight hens and four cocks, and consider up to date I am doing very well. I have 31 strong, healthy youngsters on the perch; away in another aviary I have also another two sitting on five eggs each, and nine young I have lost. This latter is accounted for mostly by the hens going to nest again too soon and neglecting the young. The cage system, I think, is undoubtedly the best, for you get a better percentage of young, but for the "busy man" the colony system is the easiest, and if you keep the birds in a well-ventilated light outdoor aviary the birds should be strong and healthy. I have never had any trouble with my birds, and a healthier lot you could not find, and the outdoor breeding makes the birds hardy. I am putting up another outdoor bird room ready for next season to hold about 13 breeding cages, so as to enable me to give both systems a good trial. I may say that all through last winter my birds were out of doors, and many a morning I had to break the ice out of their drinking vessel. They were strong and well, and had no artificial heat of any kind; I consider Canary breeding a most fascinating and profitable hobby.

WM. HY KETTLE.

THE VIEWS OF MR. J. TOMLINSON

REGARDING the outside nesting receptacles advised for an "aviary cage," useful detachable boxes are those made to hang perpendicularly on either or both ends of the cage. A set of nests somewhat similar in construction—only in miniature—to those one may see in or attached to the outside of poultry houses are provided, and each compartment should be fitted with a separate door large enough to admit the ordinary earthenware nestpan.

The entrance holes in the end of the "aviary cage" are made on a level with the top of the nest-pan. In case these entrance holes do not admit of sufficient light, a hole of about one inch in diameter is made in each nesting compartment, and the aperture is guarded by the insertion of a few wires.

If one questions why I have wandered from the point at issue, it is for the reason that whatever system of breeding is recommended there will be those to whom the opposite scheme will have its attractions, and here is a cage large enough for one pair of birds, or one cock and three or four hens. It is suitable for a moulting cage either for youngsters, or a stock cage for the hens. Further one of these match cases is easily convertible into a cabinet to hold a dozen wire song cages—a description of this cabinet appeared some time ago in these columns.

Writing of one's own preference, I have a "sneaking regard" for breeding cages (using those having four compartments) and keeping the cocks as much as possible out of the breeding room. Hens, that is Roller hens, generally sit quieter, brood their youngsters longer, and will not come forward so soon for another clutch of eggs, where there is little or no singing to be heard.

This may be regarded as an advantage or a disadvantage according to the breeder's objective. Where one is breeding solely for the market, it is to his advantage to obtain the largest quantity of birds in the shortest space of time, and so get his birds away before the other breeder has finished breeding. Where the cock is left with the hens the third brood would be getting on before the single hen had finished her second round.

Having the object in view of keeping the breeding hens as quiet as possible, I use one cock to two or three hens, three as a rule. Each hen is allowed a separate compartment of the breeding cage, which already is provided with a lined nest pan and a little building material.

The cock is kept out of the breeding room until the approximate time for his introduction to the breeding cage, one is not long in becoming experienced in this. He is then placed with the first of his hens that appears to be in the most forward condition. Should she not respond to his singing in a few moments, he is run with No. 2, and No. 3 hen if necessary.

If there is "nothing doing," a couple of days elapse and the same procedure is gone through, and so on successive days until one hen responds. Should this be No. 1 hen, then on the following day, he is run with No. 2 or 3, and if neither of them are ready he is put with No. 1 again, and so the game goes on until each hen has laid her second or third eggs. In no case does copulation take place more than once in one day, and to one hen only.

Vigorous cocks will work with three hens on this method; I have had an aged cock put three hens to nest, visiting each hen every third day, and fertilising fourteen of the fifteen eggs laid. The method is quite simple in practice, and it will be found in a room where the cock's song is not often heard, that so soon as a cock commences to sing, nearly every hen in a forward condition in the room will show a desire for the cock's attentions; and these can be noted for the cock's early introduction.

Still another method that I have found to answer well, especially when genial weather conditions prevail, is to run one cock with three hens in a breeding cage, with the compartments removed, until each one has gone to nest. Then like a thief in the night, steal their cock away from them, and replace each slide, reserving each hen a compartment to herself.

Of the two methods I like the first one, for whatever may be the quality of the song of the cocks a breeder does not desire it to become any worse. It is the best he has got, and the method of running the cock with one hen just a few moments is the best way of preserving whatever song qualities it may have.

Long spells in the breeding cage, and the extra diet to be found therein have the reverse tendency. Further economy in the breeding cage system is found in the food bill, for the hen or hens have only what the breeder desires. Feather pluckers are easily detected. It is easier to administer medicine should such be required.

Another item might be added, the youngsters only hear that song which is desired by the breeder. I don't attach much importance to this, as "anything foreign" heard in the breeding room is usually soon forgotten, or over-ruled by the constant tuition from the bird or birds of their own strain of song.

This subject has arisen out of a desire to capture the German Canary trade, and a few words are sufficient to explain it, as we know it. The breeding on a large scale of a variety of Canary that has very little recommendation other than its singing abilities, and the majority imported into the country have not even that asset.

This is the third rater, a class of bird that the Englishman cannot or will not cater for. The Canary food bill must have been lighter in Germany, for we could not compete in the production of cheap singers even before the war. The fact is more prominent to-day, and I don't believe our fanciers have altered their opinions in the matter of breeding "rubbish." It has had its purpose, I must admit, for the cheap singer has been the means of inspiring many fanciers here for the better class of bird.

The second class bird, say at 15s. or thereabouts, should be safe enough in our own breeders' hands in our "cast-offs." The first class bird, the exhibition type, is the class the importation of which has been in the hands of very few indeed. They have usually been privately imported, or the customer on this side has gone across to Germany for them, buying privately from the breeders' rooms or from the shows.

I have previously related how one of our breeders visiting Germany offered £5 for the worst singer amongst a breeding stock of 14 cocks. A level lot of birds indeed when £5 will not suffice for one when the breeder had thirteen more. It is quite probable that they were the result of years of labour, a labour of love if you will, and some very deep thinking, and for such the price offered is by no means large.

The man "outside" knows little about the routine of the importations of this A1 type of singer, so much in demand to improve our "singing qualities." Yet the sun is setting on the day when the German exporter can make

A specimen which, though ideally marked on the wings, loses in value because of the foul mark on its head, and the "ticks" on eye and cheek.

AN UNEVEN-MARKED YORKSHIRE CANARY.

this country a dumping ground for anything with feathers on, providing it has a new tour.

If this should meet the eye of one of these German breeders, let me say that one of the latest tours they sent to us has proved itself generally the same with us as it had done with them; to the sorrow of many of us. I have "preached" and written often against the uncertain ultimate value of this tour, and have warned novices against the purchase of a new tour with nothing else to recommend it.

I am not biased against it, far from it, as I have found some good ones, yet I believe it will be better for our novices' pockets, if they will leave it alone. I take no credit for writing about it, yet it is very pleasing to notice that in some quarters the tide is gradually, very gradually, turning against so much variety. It is much too early yet to predict whether we shall follow the fashion of the German breeders, and have one section for Hollow Roll birds and another for the Glucke birds.

A Well-known Breeder Will Not Have the Colony System.

SIR,—As requested by you I give my views re the colony as compared with the breeding-cage system. To my mind CAGE BIRDS and its contemporaries can do much towards solving the problem of capturing the trade from Germany. All we shopkeepers know that we must keep the article in demand, not the one we would like to sell. The same holds good with birds; unless the bird-loving public who buy and keep birds for song and pleasure are brought to realise that they are doing their country harm by buying those so-called "musical boxes," I am afraid as long as there is a demand the supply will be forthcoming. Therefore let the Press educate the buying public that one good healthy home-bred bird is worth a dozen Germans, both as a pleasant companion and pet. What is more to the point, he has the song which nature intended him to use in his natural way, and this is much more pleasing to the ear than the song of the artificially trained birds. A fit comparison would be the human voice, and the same heard through a gramophone. Once the buyers are taught to think between the one and the other, home-bred birds will always be in demand as they live much longer, and are not so much trouble to keep in health and song.

I am a firm believer in the single breeding cage with movable partitions, and, what is more, I must have them of the best material, well-fitted, and well-finished. A beginner may start somewhat cheaply with home-made boxes converted into the appearance of cages, but what of his troubles with insect and other pests? A few extra shillings are well spent in the start, for then you have cages that will last, and give you pleasure for years.

After a lifetime spent among birds, I stick to the method of one cock to each hen, as far as possible, and I find they do much better when thus paired for the season. If they were at liberty in their natural haunts they would pair in this way, and polygamy would be unknown. My point of view is that when left together both cock and hen take their own responsibilities, and in most cases carry out their domestic duties better than some of the fathers and mothers in our own households. Many a quarrel is caused through a cock bird being taken from the hen, and run with another one. The hen reasons in her own mind that this is not right, and plainly tells him so when he is returned to her.

Another point: if songsters are what we are requiring, then we stand to breed far more cock birds from this method than we would when the cock is used with four or more hens; this has been proved in more ways than one in the animal world. Some hens do well enough when sharing the attentions of their mate with others, but others resent it to the last, and no one can say that they are wrong. We cannot do better than in following nature closely, and we cannot find in any of her laws that such a method was ever intended. There is a story about a certain city father, whose duty made him visit the cemetery every now and again. One very fine morning in spring the foreman said to him "Such a fine morning will bring everything out of the ground." The city father answered "It has d— little need. I have three wives lying here, and the fourth at the gate, and if they all meet I am in for trouble." It is likewise with the colony system to my mind."

J. PATTERSON.

SIR,—I have read with deep interest the many letters on the above subject, and I send you my experience in case it may be of interest.

A few years ago I decided to go in for breeding Roller Canaries. I purchased from a well-known cup winner six hens at 10s. each, a cock at £3, and another at £2. I commenced to breed in small cages 18in. by 16in. by 9in., and I have found this method far more satisfactory than breeding in an aviary.

I have one aviary 9ft. by 9ft. by 2ft. 6in. wide, which I use for my young stock. Last year I turned into it six hens and two cocks; the latter fought so much that I was obliged to take one out and three of the hens. Then the trouble commenced with the remaining hens wanting each other's nests, two laying in one nest, etc.; in short, just the experience of Mr. Henry Neve and Mr. Crawhall in last week's letters.

This year I have been breeding in small cages as above, putting up six pairs on April

How to Beat the Germans.

The above remarks will partly reply to Mr. Ramsden. As regards my figures not fitting the case, I must point out that I used the first figures that entered my mind, not as any definite value or trade price, but merely to illustrate the point that patriotism should not be counted upon in a real trade competition into which this may develop. The German must be met and competed with both in price and quality. To argue that English breeders cannot, or will not, do what German breeders have done, and will do again, if allowed the opportunity, is simply to "throw up the sponge."

Canary Mules to Order.

SIR.—Meeting Mr. James last week, and visiting his stock, I saw the following Mules: Goldfinch-Canary, Linnet-Canary, Greenfinch-Canary, Siskin-Canary and Redpoll-Canary. Mr. James has not only succeeded in breeding these five crosses this season, but is also confident in having a topper of each variety. Is this a record for one season? Mule breeding seems to come second nature to this fancier, and he told me he could have obtained close on a hundred this season if he had let them go to nest and hatch their eggs. Can anyone top this? W. H. GIBB.

A Precocious Youngster.

SIR.—I am sorry to disappoint Mr. Tombs, who wishes to know if his three-weeks-old Canary has achieved a record. There is nothing very unusual in the fact that his baby bird has displayed its vocal talent at so early an age of its career. I use the word "talent," advisedly, because, as in the case of human songsters, a capacity to sing well in mature age is often exhibited in the infantile age. You may call it precocity if you like, but not uncommon precocity. As a matter of fact, a fledgling which warbles softly at the age of three weeks may generally be depended upon to mature to a more than average songster. Perhaps Mr. Tombs may have comfort in that fact. The writer has on several occasions had experiences such as that described by your correspondent, more especially when breeding common songsters as distinct from fancy birds. —Yours faithfully, X.

CAGE BIRDS in Canada.

SIR.—I have received my weekly copy of CAGE BIRDS, and notice the answer to my query re six eggs in five days from Border hen. Please accept my thanks. I notice that you have found it necessary to charge a trifle more for CAGE BIRDS weekly, and under the existing circumstances I don't see where anyone interested could have nerve enough to kick. It costs us a bit more to get it sent to Canada, but we should worry.

I think CAGE BIRDS a great help to anyone interested in feathered pets, and it is well worth fourpence a copy. I never lose any time, when my journal comes, to get right to reading its contents and inwardly digest same; so long live your valuable paper. I am herewith enclosing a clipping on the catching of Parrots in New Zealand, which I cut from one of our morning papers, as I thought it may interest you or your readers.

Two Kinds of Virginian Cardinal.

Mr. H. D. Astley Replies to Mr. Teschemaker.

SIR.—May I write just a few lines to express my thanks for your footnote to the letter written by Mr. W. E. Teschemaker in your last week's issue? As for the letter itself, I need only say that I am sorry for anyone who, after more than three years have passed, should continue to foster such a spirit of "strafing." I am well aware of my deficiencies as editor of the "Avicultural Magazine," but I undertook the work because the Council of the Avicultural Society asked me to do so, and for three and a half years I have done it, receiving in return the thanks of that society, and nothing else.

I am only too pleased to encourage all classes of the bird-loving community to contribute to the pages of the magazine, and I have never (with the one exception) received an uncourteous word from anyone. I have twice invited Mr. Teschemaker to write again, not for the moment imagining that because I, as editor, objected to a Black Redstart being called a black 'start, he would continually preserve a store of bad feeling, a good deal of which one sees doled out in his letter; a letter which speaks for itself, as I think your readers will agree. He does not know me, and as far as I am aware, has never seen me.

The Opinion of a Noted Fancier—
"IT MAKES BIRD BREEDING EASY."

THE STOCK BOOK

Simplifies the operations in the Bird-room and makes it possible for everyone, even the veriest novice, to breed his birds as they should be bred. It affords facilities for the recording of the complete pedigree of all your birds; of your experiences during the season; an account of every bird reared. Contains also Pedigree, Breeding, Young Bird and Show Registers of simple and unique character; Cash and Profit and Loss Accounts for the year. Gives valuable hints for times of emergency during the breeding season.

Price 6d., from your Newsagent, or 7d. (postal order), post free, from "CAGE BIRDS," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

It is not true that I take no interest in "common" birds, for with the exception of the House Sparrow, I have the greatest love for all birds, and those rarer ones which I possess are greatly appreciated by anyone who wishes to see them, including people of all classes, from the more opulent aviculturists to those who inhabit cottages in the neighbourhood. But our British birds are hard to beat. As a songster I have never heard anything more beautiful than the fluting of the "common" Blackbird, neither as a cage pet is there any bird more charming than is our Bullfinch, or indeed, more handsome.

HUBERT D. ASTLEY.

SIR.—May I crave the indulgence of a little space in your absolutely indispensable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to protest with all the effort I can call to my aid, against the deplorable outburst that appears above Mr. Teschemaker's name. How an aviculturist of his reputation and attainments could stoop to personal attack on a gentleman who, simply for the love of aviculture, devotes much time to editing a magazine is beyond my comprehension. Mr. Teschemaker says that literature is not one of Mr. Astley's strong points; apparently manners stand in the same category with Mr. Teschemaker. The letter is a gross libel on a gentleman who possesses the old-fashioned courtesy now apparently fast disappearing; more is the pity. I don't doubt that Mr. Teschemaker was (I notice it is the past tense) a public schoolmaster, but why drag it in unless he feels he is thereby displaying his superiority over his humbler brethren? If he advocated coining words and unpardonable abbreviations when a master, one can well understand how it is he was and no longer is. But perhaps (horrid thought!) he was not an English master, but taught mathematics, science, Latin, Greek, or some modern language, such as German.

Let me say that I know Mr. Astley very intimately, just so far as avicultural matters go. I have always found him to possess all those qualities which one usually associates with a gentleman. I can assure Mr. Teschemaker that he is quite as interested in common birds as he is in rare foreign birds. Only last month he procured a pair of the common Black Redstart from me. Naturally he prefers rarities, but who does not? Is there no beam in your eye, Mr. Teschemaker? Why is it that neither the "Avicultural Magazine" nor "Bird Notes" are favoured with your delightful and instructive articles now? Can it be that the Editor of "B.N." has also offended, and, if so, can it possibly be that the fault lies after all nearer home than you thought? POLONUS.

[These letters contain nothing to further the question as to there being two kinds of Virginian Cardinal, but as they are in direct reply to the personal part of Mr. Teschemaker's letter of last week we have thought it only fair to publish them.—Editor, CAGE BIRDS.]

Cinnamon Canaries.

SIR.—It is gratifying to find that your correspondent of last week has secured satisfactory proof that the so-called "khaki" Canaries are no new creation. The variety has, in fact, been well known for hundreds of years, literally, so we may well drop the novel description in order to avoid any confusion among new recruits to the Fancy.

If Miss Hamilton could get Part XI. of "Our Canaries" she would find the breed fully dealt with, and also its peculiarities in reproducing its own colour; and Parts III., IV., and VIII. contain coloured plates of the variety. As regards the points she wishes information upon: Briefly, two birds of cinnamon colour or cinnamon variegated will breed progeny of the same colour. The colour may occur as a sport, as would be the case in Miss Hamilton's experience, if the original stock had no cinnamon blood at all in the strain, but this is a most difficult thing to decide in these days, because a cinnamon taint may exist in the blood without any external signs revealing it, especially to a novice. From cinnamon hens mated with cocks which had no cinnamon blood at all she would obtain no cinnamon colour, as cinnamon colour, more or less, is necessary in the male parent to transfer it to the progeny. Certainly, breeders know how to produce the colour at will. The book named above conveys all this information. As a variety, I do not suppose the Cinnamon hen is any more ready to breed Mules than a non-cinnamon hen, but a dash of cinnamon blood in a hen is certainly a good thing if one aims at breeding light-coloured Mules.

No particular name, as a breed, could be given to such a class of Canaries as that described, other than common or cross-bred birds, unless, indeed, the stock had descended without crossing from some particular breed, say, Norwich or Roller, in which case I should describe them as Cinnamon Norwich or Roller, as the case may be.

German Gingerbread Nesting Boxes.

A PAGE of the "Star Weekly" of Toronto has kindly been sent us by a Canadian reader, Mr. Wallace C. Jones. This contains an illustrated account of the bird sanctuary which has been established by Mr. J. A. Harvey on a twenty-five acre plot on the borders of Lake Ontario, and from it we take the following cutting:—

It is of peculiar interest just now to learn that artificial birds' nests were mostly imported from Germany until the interruption to trade occasioned by this present war. Mr. Harvey, finding he could not get a supply of nests of the approved kind, set to work to make them himself, and later had workmen make them after his own specifications. The over-elaborate gingerbread "houses" that Germany used to send out here have been found inferior to some of the simple, natural-looking nests and bird houses Mr. Harvey has himself devised. A roll of birch bark fixed to a section of a pine or cedar slab has been found as popular as the most elaborate imported bird houses, with a gable roof like a Swiss chalet. A couple of feet of a cedar log bored for a bird's nest looks as natural as the forest itself when fixed to a trunk of a tree. Bird houses made of little bits of slab-board with the bark left on make pretty little houses, and ones that fit in with the rustic surroundings of a pergola, a summer house, a gate-post, an arbour, a viney, a verandah, or a sleeping porch. Wild birds will become domesticated with great sauciness under the circumstances of a house with modern conveniences, so long as it is natural-looking and not garnished with impossible paint.

Starlings and Fruit.

The vast increase of the Starling in various districts, and its appearance in modern times in many parts of the kingdom where anciently it was unknown, are, of course, things familiar to all those who take an interest in British birds and their habits. But even now many people awaken very slowly to the destructiveness of Starlings during the fruit season, or to the fact that their legions must, sooner or later, require thinning. The amount of damage done by these birds to fruit crops, especially in cherry orchards, is enormous. Starlings undoubtedly are useful in devouring caterpillars, wire worms, sheep ticks, and other insects, but their ravages upon fruit crops, it is to be feared, quite counterbalance any benefits they may confer on the farmer in that way. More than fifty years ago Canon Tristram, while exploring the Northern Sahara, discovered that the common Starling was as great a pest in that part of Africa as it now is at home. "Myriads of Starlings," he says in his book, "The Great Sahara," "visit the date forests in winter and do incalculable damage to the ripe fruit. They are snared and destroyed by thousands, being prized for food. In spring not a straggler remains in Africa." The Starling, by the way, is by no means bad eating, and a titling from the immense legions that now throng Britain ought to be very acceptable to many of our poor folk.

The Other Point of View.

Two years ago, says the "Estates Gazette," when the turnip crop in the North, particularly in Cumberland, was threatened by the ravages of the larvæ of the diamond-back moth, the Starling came to the rescue, and cleared field after field of the pest. The same kind of thing seems to have occurred at Ashted Woods, where the oak trees were almost stripped of their foliage by caterpillars. Starlings flocked to the scene in their multitudes and fed on the insects to such good purpose that they entirely cleared the trees of the noxious visitors; acting while experts were considering measures of a preventive nature against a repetition of the mischief. It is undoubtedly the case that Starlings are undergoing a modification of their food habits, and reports indicate that these birds are capable of doing by no means inconsiderable damage to crops. But it must be remembered that it is essentially an insect-eating bird, as the formation of the bill will show, and no better proof of the Starling's economic usefulness in relation to forestry is needed than the incident just referred to. Any harm that is done by Starlings and other birds to growing crops is often caused through a scarcity of natural foods, and it is hoped that this year our avian inhabitants will make some amends by helping farmers and horticulturists to rid the land of some of the insect pests that are now becoming so troublesome. According to the zoologist's report to the Royal Agricultural Society there are indications that this season is likely to be a rather bad one for attacks of insect pests. Among those brought to notice by inquiries are apple-sucker, winter moth, red spider, various kinds of aphids, and apple blossom weevil. Injury to foliage, and later to fruit, by bugs of the family capsidae has attracted a good deal of attention of recent years, and in some localities these insects are now very active on the leaves. Among farm crop pests, turnip-fly, onion-fly, and cabbage-root maggot have been inquired about, and the sainfoin midge, which was so troublesome last year, is under investigation.

THE RAVEN IN NATURE AND IN CAPTIVITY.

By "LICHEN GREY."

The Corby, up in his lonely cliff, is crouching, in sorrow, his lane;
For his mate is lying stark an' stiff, doon-by,
at the weter-gate stane;
But brawly he kens that he manna greet, fu' lang o'er his sorrowfu' fate,
But maun get a new wife to tak' her seat on the eggs, or it's ower late:
An' the morrow's morn, ere peep o' licht, te the distant hills he'll ha' flown.
An' be back at his nest afore the nicht, wi' anither te ca' his own.

CORBY is a name commonly applied to the Raven in North Britain, though elsewhere, perhaps, more generally bestowed upon the Crow; and the weird croaking which constitutes his ordinary cry can scarcely be expressed better than as crouching.

The picture drawn in the lines above quoted, is in every respect true to nature, for it is marvellous how soon a bird, which has been so unfortunate as to lose its mate, will find another to help carry on the all important duties of housekeeping; and it is scarcely less interesting to note the fact that the newcomer is always ready to take up the work at the point at which it was relinquished by his or her predecessor.

A Willing Stepmother.

I have satisfied myself, by close observation on many occasions, that a new hen will incubate eggs which she finds in the nest on her first introduction to it as assiduously as though they had been her own; and the attention of step-parents of either sex, to adopted young ones, is not excelled even by the parent itself.

Whence the new partners come, in such cases of emergency, must always strike us as something of a puzzle, but it goes to prove that there are always a certain number of non-breeding birds about and that their haunts are known to the settled householders in the avine world.

The vocal powers of the Raven are very considerable, and although the male does not "sing" to his mate, in the usually accepted sense of that term, he has a variety of metallic, and not unpleasant notes, to which he gives vent at the approach of spring. In captivity a Raven may be easily taught to "talk," and to imitate the human voice very closely.

In nature there is, perhaps, no bird whose notes, and the expressive inflections of whose voice, are more calculated to impress us with the conviction that birds are able to talk to one another. Nay! a tame Raven would sometimes even appear capable of holding converse with man himself, not to mention the lower animals. He will cackle with the poultry, or bark with the dog, and he will so closely imitate the voice of the latter's master that poor Carlo may be sent home in fancied disgrace, or despatched on fruitless errands, and it would almost seem from the aptitude with which they are used, as if the bird understood the full meaning of the words and expressions he had picked up.

The Raven and Mr. Gladstone.

One rather amusing instance of the reasoning faculties of a Raven occurred during the late Mr. Gladstone's Mid-Lothian campaign. Political feeling was at its height, and a meeting, which was being held under Liberal auspices in a village assembly room, was nearly broken up in the excitement following upon a sepulchral voice which shouted, "Damn old Gladstone," in the middle of the chairman's speech. Order was scarcely restored even when it was discovered whence the interruption proceeded, by the Raven mounting the back of a chair in an empty "fiddler's gallery," and after repeating his original offence, solemnly declaring, "I'm a joker—bow, wow, wow."

Once an abundant bird throughout Britain, the Raven is now almost banished to the mountainous parts of Scotland, the North of England and Wales, and even where most plentiful can scarcely be called common. In a few places, particularly round the rock-bound coasts of Devon and Cornwall, an odd pair or two, and sometimes their offspring, may yet be met with, but the day has gone by when the Raven was to be found nesting upon the spires of churches, and similar stations, in the neighbourhood of human habitation.

Its nesting sites are now almost confined to the most inaccessible cliffs, and even there the eggs or young are too frequently destroyed. The old birds are, however, very wary, and generally manage to keep out of harm's way; and though their offspring may be taken regularly, year after year, they cling tenaciously to the old site and have been known to return to it for a very long period.

Should one or other of them fall a victim, perhaps to the poisoned bait of some game-keeper, his or her place, as we have seen, is quickly filled, and even should both of the original pair be destroyed, it is remarkable how often the identical site may be occupied by another pair of the birds.

It is in this way, no doubt, that the idea —exemplified by the old saying, "The Raven never dies"—has got about, for though the birds do undoubtedly live to a very long age, "never" is a very long time. Perhaps those birds which turn up from time to time to take the place of those killed, may themselves have been reared there in days long departed; but in that case where have they spent the intervening years, and how come they to know that the old site is untenanted? It seems almost impossible to suppose that in the interval they should not have established themselves elsewhere, but if that were so, why should the new home be deserted in favour of the old?

The only other hypothesis would seem to be either that the birds do not breed at all until an eligible site for a nest becomes vacant, or that, though forced by circumstances to emigrate to other lands, they still keep up communication with the old country, and are ready to take up residence in the ancestral home as soon as the death of a parent shall have made room for them.

But if that were so, should we not be forced to concede a power of reasoning, and a sort of unwritten code of the laws of succession, to birds, which might jar against all preconceived ideas? Be it so! We cannot, in the present state of our knowledge, follow the argument much farther one way or another.

A dog or a horse undoubtedly understands much that is said to it by its master, or those who know it well; and who has not sometimes felt that a "dumb animal" would speak to us if its tongue could but frame the words to which its sense of feeling would give utterance? And if a quadruped be credited with this power, why should we draw the line at a bird?

At any rate, everyone who has had much experience of Ravens, either tame or wild, will readily admit that if there is any bird which equals him in reasoning power (whatever that may mean) and adaptability, there is certainly none that excels him; and if the lower animals should be destined ever to hold direct communication with man, that there is no more likely channel, through which the tide of knowledge may eventually run, than the weird and mystic bird that forms the subject of this essay.

Far distant then, let us hope, may be the day when the last of our native Ravens shall have been banished from our midst; and all honour to those kindly landowners, who, even at the cost of some slight damage to game or stock, still suffer the birds to occupy an ancestral home in some secluded corner of their domains—a home to which the occupiers might perhaps trace a line of direct descent far beyond that of even the ruler in the castle himself, and whose occupation in all probability antedates the arrival of even ancestral man upon the scene.

As for the feeding of a Raven in captivity, there is no difficulty whatever about this. The bird is practically omnivorous, and will thrive on any kitchen scraps that may be available. Pieces of meat cooked or uncooked, the offal left when preparing a fowl or a rabbit for the table, a dead Sparrow or other small bird, or a mouse, nothing comes amiss to it.

An Innocent Deception.

A Leg Set; Trouble Averted, and a Bird's Life Saved.

By J. C. WILMOT (Bedford).

THERE was a sharp rat-tat-tat at the door, and when the door was opened there stood an excited panting servant maid with a cage in her hand, and a Canary with a broken leg lying at the bottom of the cage. "Oh if you please sir," she exclaimed, "mistress has sent this bird to ask you if you will kill it." After examining it, I said I should not kill it, but would set its leg.

I found the fracture was not a very serious one, so after placing it in position and putting on a splint, with the assistance of my better half, bound up the leg, put something soft at the bottom of the cage, placed some seed and water in a position for the bird to reach it without much trouble, and then took it to my bird room where it could lay without being disturbed.

An hour or two passed and the mistress herself called, "Why, Mr. Wilmot," she exclaimed, "my maid tells me that you have set my bird's leg, I knew that you were clever at doctoring birds, but I had no idea that you could set a bird's leg." "I asked your maid," I replied, "if she thought you would like to be killed if you happened to break your leg, and she said she did not think you would." I said "neither would this little bird, so instead of killing it I decided to set its leg." "I am exceedingly obliged to you," she said, "for the bird is a great pet, and I know my husband when he comes home will be very cross about it, as he had warned us several times about hanging the bird where we did, but we took no notice, and now it has been knocked down, and the poor little dick has its leg broken." Now I happened to know something of this gentleman's temper, and at such times his language was such that would not be admitted to the pages of CAGE BIRDS, so I suggested a way out of the difficulty. "Suppose, Madam," I said, "I put one of my Canaries in your cage until your bird is better, I can find one I have no doubt very much like yours, and you can take it home and your husband will never know the difference unless you tell him." "Splendid," she exclaimed; so my bird was taken away and hung up in the sitting room.

The following day the newcomer, feeling quite at home in its new surroundings, commenced to sing. Now it happened that my bird was a superior singer to theirs, and as it poured forth its melodious notes the husband looked up at the cage and said, "That bird has improved in song lately, Missus,"

"Yes it has indeed," she replied, not wishing to reveal the secret, and so it went on for about a fortnight, the newcomer charming the family with its melody. Then the old bird was taken home, apparently none the worse for its accident, in fact it was impossible to tell which of the legs had been broken. I often saw the same lady afterwards and asked her if she had told her husband about the broken leg and its sequel, when she invariably replied: "No, it would spoil it to let the cat out of the bag."

THREE INTERESTING SOFT BILLS.

By "TYRONE."

ANYONE walking on the Sussex Downs, especially near Eastbourne, must have noticed the dainty little birds posted watchfully on large stones or clods of earth, from which, on the approach of a strange human being, they flit to a similar point of vantage a little further away. They have a habit of flitting their wings and tails in a manner that shows a white patch on the back, which is concealed when the bird is motionless.

These little birds are Wheatears, and the colours of the cock when in spring plumage are a beautiful blending of black and white, and soft blue-grey. His wings, the tip of his tail, and his ear coverts are black; the forehead and patch on the back is pure white; while the back is bluish-grey, and the breast a pale buff colour. When he is out of plumage, during the autumn and winter, he very much resembles his mate, who is browner in colouring, with buff markings.

In Advance of Spring Time.

Wheatears come to England in the early spring, arriving sometimes as soon as the beginning of March, and some have even been seen before February was gone; and they leave us again some time during October.

Soon after they arrive all their energies are directed to the important business of nest-building, and for this the favourite sites are either a hole in the ground (perhaps a deserted rabbit burrow), or a snug-cranny among rocks, or even a spot out in the open field, sheltered only by a clod of earth.

The nest is very snugly and softly lined, and generally contains five or six pale blue eggs. There are usually two broods reared; one may expect to find young birds in the nests in May and July. But the Wheatear's nest is very carefully hidden, and is difficult to find.

Wheatears are insectivorous birds, and in a wild state feed on various insects, such as larvae, butterflies, small flies, and beetles, grasshoppers, spiders and small snails.

They should never be caged unless their owner knows something of their habits and is prepared to feed and house them suitably, for they are not easy birds to keep in captivity. Many adult Wheatears can never be accustomed to cage life, and these should be released. Young birds reared from the nest, or captured very young, will be more easily reconciled; but if adults are taken at all they should be caged in autumn when the moult is over.

The Cage for a Wheatear.

They should be kept in a large cage, with a canvas top to prevent injury to their heads if they attempt to fly upwards. The cage should have three perches, the highest being in the middle, and of course the food and water vessels should be inside the cage. In addition to the perches the Wheatear will probably be glad to have a good-sized stone to rest on, such as he would be likely to choose if he were at liberty.

The wild-caught birds should, at first, be given a very liberal supply of live insects until they are accustomed to eating the artificial insectivorous food; and here mealworms and house black beetles come in very handy when spiders and "wild" insects are scarce.

A Wheatear may safely be given twenty-five mealworms a day at first, but when he is thoroughly accustomed to the artificial food the number may gradually be reduced to five or six. But at all times he will be the better for having plenty of spiders and live insects of various kinds, and these are especially necessary if the bird is kept through the moult; but be careful that the insects are not taken from poisonous plants or shrubs.

Wheatears are not usually great bathers, but all birds are more healthy for bathing in suitable weather. As almost all of these birds migrate to warmer countries for the winter, (although it seems generally admitted that a few stragglers remain), Wheatears in captivity will need to be kept fairly warm in winter, and the temperature should not be allowed to fall for long below 50 degrees.

The cocks have a gay little song, which generally improves in captivity, and if the bird is suitably fed he will sing almost all the year round. Both cock and hen have a sharp alarm note that sounds like "Chat," which probably gives rise to their local names of "Clod Chat," "Fallow Chat," etc.

Wheatears are very likely to injure their claws when they are kept in cages. This is probably done by catching them in the wires, as the claws are very much curved. They also get sore feet, and therefore the perches should be covered with something soft.

There is a good deal of difference in the size of Wheatears, some birds being considerably larger than others, though similar in colouring, and therefore some people think there are two varieties; but this seems to be doubtful. The smaller birds are about 5½ inches long.

The Whinchat is another interesting summer migrant which is common in many parts of England, though its quieter colouring does not attract so much attention as the more decided markings of the Wheatear. And yet it is decidedly a pretty bird, the prevailing brown of its plumage being relieved by distinguishing markings.

The cock has a white mark passing from the bill over the eyes, and a little white on the throat, wings, and base of tail; on the cheeks there is a black mark, and the breast is fawn colour, shading almost to white; the back is specially brown, and the wings dark brown. The hen is, as usual, duller in colouring than the cock, and the marks above her eyes are buff instead of white; the young birds are like her. In winter the cock loses his more ornamental markings, and resembles his wife and children.

The Coming of the Whinchats.

Whinchats generally arrive in England in April, and leave again in September or early in October, when many of them go to parts of Africa, or even as far as India. In England they frequent commons, meadow land, and railway embankments, where they are very fond of perching on the top twigs of hedges, hawthorn, or furze bushes.

When harvest time comes they visit the harvest fields, and may be seen sitting or hanging on the sheaves, and it is probably from this habit that in some parts of the country they are called "Barleyeats." They may also be seen sometimes in the autumn searching among the roots and cabbages for caterpillars and small insects.

These little birds seem often to roost among the tangled undergrowth of gorse bushes. Just as dusk is falling they are sometimes very busy catching some favourite food insect in the manner of a Flycatcher, darting from a favourite perch to catch its prey, and returning to the perch to eat it and await another.

Their food consists of various insects, small worms, beetles, small flies, caterpillars, spiders, etc., and wireworm found on fallows in the spring.

The Whinchat has a pretty little song—cheerful and sweet, and low in tone. It frequently sings while it is hovering in the air. When its nest is threatened by any danger it has also an anxious note—a sound like "peep."

It builds one nest in the season, and this is laod among the heather, in the middle of a furze bush, or among the grass of the middle of a field or near the hedge.

The nest is generally made in a little cavity in the ground, the outside is made of dry grass, moss, and a few odd straws, and the inside of rootlets and horsehair. There are generally from four to six eggs.

The Whinchat is a difficult bird to keep in a cage, but it is an attractive bird, and worth the trouble it gives. If young birds are hand-reared they may be fed on the usual mixture of hard-boiled yolk of egg and crushed sweet biscuits, with ant eggs (so called), and mealworms, killed and cut into small pieces.

Mealworms are most useful in meeting off wild-caught birds, and so are house black beetles, of which Whinchats are very fond. Some of the insects may be killed and mixed with the artificial food: in picking these out the bird gets used to the taste of the insectivorous food, and when he is quite accustomed to eating this he can do with fewer insects. But if the mealworms are withheld too soon the bird will very likely "go light" after all.

The food and water vessels for all these birds should be inside the cage, and they should be made of glass or china, as these are easier to keep thoroughly clean. To avoid terrifying the bird by putting the hand inside the cage, it is a good plan to have the food and water holders made to slip in through holes in the front, which should be at each end of the cage and well away from the perches.

A Resident Softbill.

The Stonechat is not a summer migrant, but is one of the few soft-billed birds that remain with us through the winter, though doubtless some individuals of the species migrate. Stonechats are very widely distributed, being found in many parts of Europe and Asia, and even in South Africa there are birds which strongly resemble them.

In England the Stonechat is generally found on commons and dry heaths where there is plenty of furze and brambles, and in September it may be seen in numbers on the stretches of grass which run along the edge of the cliffs of the Norfolk coast. On commons it may often be seen sitting on the highest branch of a furze or bramble bush, from which position it will dart towards the ground after an insect, returning to the perch it left just as the Spotted Flycatcher does.

If you try to get close to this bird it has a way of dropping gently to the ground as if to hide behind the bush it was perched on, but when you have crept quietly up the bird has disappeared; it slipped away unobserved, and is very likely again watching you from the top of a bush a few yards farther away.

The Stonechat is decidedly a handsome bird, although he has no brilliant colouring. His head and throat are glossy black, and round his neck is a white collar; his breast is a warm brown, and when he flies he shows a conspicuous white patch on his back just above his tail. In the winter the head and throat are brown, and the white collar is duller in colour. The hen's colouring is duller, with less white.

The Stonechat's nest is most carefully hidden; it is generally placed on the ground—usually under a gorse bush. The nest is made of dry grass and moss, and lined with hair and feathers. There are generally four or five eggs, which are pale greenish-blue in colour, with spots on the larger end of reddish-brown. The colouring of the eggs varies very much.

The song of the Stonechat is sweet, but not very loud, though if the bird is carefully fed its song improves in captivity. When wild he may sometimes be seen fluttering in the air while he sings, as the Whinchat does, though more often he chooses to perch on a projecting branch.

When wild, Stonechats live on insects and their larvae and worms, and in captivity they always need plenty of insects, particularly in autumn during the moult. Young birds taken from the nest may be reared as suggested for Whinchats, but if you want to meat off adult Stonechats you will need a very large supply of live insects.

All the Chats should be kept in box cages, by which is meant those wired only in front. Coconut fibre makes a very good covering for the tray, especially if it be damped and then well pressed down. It is dangerous to the bird if it gets mixed with the food and is swallowed.

Although these birds spend the winter in England when at liberty, they must not be left out of doors all the year round, even in a large aviary, for cold and damp will kill them when in captivity. They should be brought indoors before the cold weather comes, and kept in a temperature of not less than 50 degrees.

The Pros and Cons of Inbreeding.

By SUB ROSA.

IF one must judge from the advocates of inbreeding, it is not only the royal road, but the only road to success. I know of several fanciers and writers who swear by it—writers whose names are, or have been, something to conjure with in those sections of the Fancy they happen to be connected with. Yet there is overwhelming evidence to the contrary.

Speaking of the Norwich Canary, I know for an absolute fact that the best Norwich bred in this country for a number of years have been bred without any regard to inbreeding. In fact, several have been bred—birds in the front rank—from absolutely new blood.

Pedigree v. Inbreeding.

The most successful fanciers that I know buy on face value, but if they didn't know the bird came from a good stud they would not purchase. But that is not inbreeding, but pedigree; a very dissimilar factor.

I am not going to say that inbreeding will not produce good Norwich; it must do if purchased the right way, but there is less chance of keeping up size in a variety where it is essential.

Fanciers cannot afford to overlook the fact that there is going on continually an almost imperceptible change in the type of our birds. Anyone can notice it from time to time. New fashions keep on setting in. Fanciers and judges have their whims. Sometimes it is a craze for this, and sometimes for that. We have it in every section of the Fancy, and it always has been, and always will be so, as long as men have the capacity to argue and to differ in their opinions. If one must keep pace with the fashions one must now and again introduce a bird that will improve his stock in the direction the existing fashion tends.

Inbreeding is more likely to be successful in varieties like Borders, especially in even marks, and more especially again in a variety like the Lizard, where markings play an important part. But if I were to be thinking of inbreeding with Norwich, I should not think of starting with birds which were not perfect, or almost perfect, and I should want birds from the show bench. Also, they would have to be teeming with health—for it is a saying full of truth that you can't expect a healthy branch from a rotten tree.

I should want at least three pairs, and the outlay to purchase birds suitable for my purpose could not be less than £25 to £30. Then one could hope for some measure of success for a few years without introducing new blood.

Now it is much cheaper to proceed in the other way. Birds that are not show-birds may be purchased more cheaply. For instance, one can buy a big stock cock, with perhaps just a trifle too much feather, for half the price of a bird suitable for the show bench, and a hen to match him needn't run into a big figure.

But three pairs such as I describe would not do for inbreeding, because one would be inbreeding faults. Good birds can undoubtedly be bred by either method, but to argue that inbreeding is the only way to success is neither safe nor wise, and the fancier who in this way builds castles in the air may find himself sadly disappointed, especially if he happens on an unlucky moment to keep an unhealthy bird.

A Plea for more Selling Classes.

I have often thought that it would pay societies to introduce more selling classes into their schedule. The system which appears to be most in vogue is for two classes to be provided of 12s. 6d. and £1. Now you cannot expect a good stock bird for 12s. 6d.; fanciers won't part with them at the price.

Again, all varieties are mixed up, which is all against fanciers' patronising those classes, and if societies would only open out and put on two sale classes each for Norwich and Yorkshire, and put the Any Other Varieties in a separate class, I think they would get more support. Also, I would introduce a sale class of £2, where fanciers could expect to buy something decent for stock purposes. Five claims from this class would pay the prize money.

Singing Contests.

Announcements of forthcoming contests in the nature of advertisements must be paid for at advertisement rates, two words a penny.

BARNSELY.

Dove Inn Linnet sing, July 2, 4 min. time. Two novices were to the front in F. Norman, 2min. 55sec., and G. B. Jones, 2 min. 23sec.; 3, Hardman 2min. 6sec. The Lark contests seem to be a failure as only four birds turned up to sing.—J. Hardman, Sec.

PONTEFRAC.

Linnet contest, Woodman Inn, Horsfair, July 1; 24 birds entered for 4 minutes time singing. 1, 2, Beard; 3, Scotson. Open sing, July 2; 25 birds for 3 minutes time singing. 1, 2, Beard; 3, Wainright.—J. Beard, Hon. Sec.

DURHAM.

Linnet singing contest, July 1st, Black Horse, for championship of county of Durham; 46 birds sang. Judge, Fairless, East Howle; time-keeper, Dixon, Durham. 1, cup, champion, Grame, Gateshead; 2, gold medal, Kendrick, Broom Park; 3, 5, Clobber, Leadgate; 4, Reed, West Auckland; 6, Wilford. Meeting will be held July 15, at 6.—McKinley, Sec.

LEEDS.

Glasmakers' Arms, Saville Green, Linnet contest July 2; 31 birds sang for four prizes. 1, 3, Hirst; 2, Butler; 4, Richardson. Judges, C. Biss, W. Lacy; timekeeper, E. Stanhope.—W. Lacy, Sec.

Leeds Quality Linnet Singing Club, Plasterers' Arms, Skinner Lane, July 2; 20 birds sang, and some very good singing. 1, Hargreaves; 2, Temple; 3, Booth. Judges: B. Dearlove and B. Ridgehard; time-keeper, W. Dunn.—J. Wright, Sec.

Leeds Linnet and Canary F.A., Albion Hotel, Saville Green, York Road, open contest for quality Linnet singing, July 1; 16 birds sang. 1, Bott; 2, B. Smith; 3, T. Ward. Judges, Howarth and O'Brien. July 2; 22 sang. 1, Hollingworth; 2, Stead; 3, B. Smith; 4, Sissons; 5, T. Ward. Judges, Hardcastle, Naylor, Grant.—W. Naylor, Hon. Sec.

Globe Inn Linnet Club members' contest, July 1, for time and quality; 23 birds entered; quality: 1, J. Statham; 2, 3, Page; time: 1, J. Murphy; 2, Donnelly; 3, F. Murphy; time: J. Murphy, E. Statham; judges, T. Statham, J. Jones. Next contest open to all for time and quality, July 22. R. Disley, Sec.

Clarence Hotel Linnet Club, Linnet singing contest, July 1; 16 of the best birds in Leeds sang and some very good singing was heard: 1, 2, shared, Wigfield and Chippingdale; 3, Wigfield. Judges, T. C. Summers, P. Madden. July 2, 26 birds: 1, 2, shared, Butterfield and Callaghan; 3, Wigfield. Judge, T. C. Summers; time-keeper, A. Butterfield.—T. C. Summers, Hon. Sec.

Queries Answered

- (1)—All questions must be clearly written in ink (or typewritten) on one side of paper, and conclude with either the correct name or a pseudonym.
- (2)—The proper name and address in full of querist must always be written on a separate sheet of paper, and enclosed with the query.
- (3)—Queries intended for different specialists must be written on separate sheets of paper.
- (4)—Queries must not include or be included in orders for books, instructions re advertisements, or any other matter for publication.
- (5)—The department to which the queries refer must be stated on the left-hand corner of the query.
- (6)—Queries received during any week, up to the first post on Saturday morning, will be answered in the issue bearing date of Saturday in the following week.
- (7)—If an answer by post is desired from our specialists, a postal order for postage must accompany any query relating to sickness of birds, or a shilling in ordinary enquiries, with a stamped and addressed envelope in either case. Dead birds must not be sent to the office (see Post-mortems).
- (8)—All who desire letters of complaint written to advertisers must state grounds for doing so clearly and fully, and enclose a fee of sixpence.
- (9)—All queries must be addressed to the Editor, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C. Postcards are not admissible.

CANARY QUERIES

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

TRANSFERRING YOUNG (S.).—No, there is no objection whatever to taking a brood of only one or two young from one hen and giving them to another hen with a small brood in order to make up an average-sized brood, and at the same time allow one of the hens to begin nesting again without loss of time. As you say, the hens do not appear to object to such arrangement, and probably do not care a rap. The only thing to bear in mind is to be careful not to mix up broods of greatly varying ages, but to keep them as near as you can the same age, and in any case not to place young, say a week old, with others two or three days old. You will find it help to make things go more smoothly if you make the changes in the evening, so that the hens have the increase to start feeding the first thing in the morning, when they are naturally most keen and active. This method of transference of very small broods is by no means uncommon among fanciers, and the only reason there can be for not adopting it is when one has doubts about the feeding qualities of any of the hens, when it is always wise to allow hens with small broods to go on with them in order to provide for the contingency of any one of the hens refusing to feed, when they might be useful to fall back upon as foster-parents; but this is a consideration from which you seem to enjoy a fortunate immunity. Your ideas of breeding up a hardy strain, possessed with full normal instincts, is certainly a very sound one.

ALWAYS CRUMPED UP (Tonypandy Novice).—The probability is that your outdoor aviary is too cold during such a season as we have had so far for the bird, which may have come from much more comfortable quarters when you purchased it. Remove it to a comfortable place indoors, but you need not overheat it, and treat as follows for a week or two, and if not then well, please write again and repeat particulars, when I will advise you further. As staple diet give a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition to this give separately every second day half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days give twice in each week a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and gold of pleasure. Give a spray of green food daily, varying this item now there is so much to choose from. In the drinking water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for three consecutive days, and every second day after for the rest of a week; and after the first week give instead in the water five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia, and sweet spirit of nitro every second day for a fortnight.

All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

MIXING EGG AND COLOUR FOR STOCK (A. A. W.).—If you add no moisture of any kind except the oil when mixing the food to stock in bulk, and are careful to keep it in a cool dry place, you need have no fear whatever about its fermenting or deteriorating in any way. On the contrary, it will improve by allowing the colour time to penetrate thoroughly into the biscuit food, as these proprietary biscuit foods, being necessarily dried rather hard, generally require a little time to absorb the colour evenly all through, and for this reason it is advantageous to mix them to stand a little. If necessary, a few drops of moisture may be added to the quantity of food as and when required for immediate use, but none should be added to the bulk which has to stand. Given these precautions you have no need to worry.

FALSE MOULT, &c. (D.S.).—If the bird has been kept under only fairly average conditions of health and hygiene, I am afraid it must be a congenitally weak specimen to be in the condition you describe at so early an age. Try what a month of the following treatment will do for it, and if not well in that time please write again and I will advise you further. Repeat full particulars when writing again. Keep it in a fairly warm place, but do not hang it in a window, neither by night nor day. At either time the fluctuations of temperature are quite too violent in such a position for the well-being of the bird. Give a staple diet of a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape. In addition to this give separately a piece of bread the size of a hazel nut, soaked in cold milk, drained, two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it and sprinkled with maw seed, every second day in alternate weeks, and twice a week on other days give a pinch of a mixture of equal parts hemp, niger, white millet, teazle, and broken groats. Give a morsel of green salad daily. In the water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea for three consecutive days, and every second day for the remainder of the week. After this give five drops each of oxymel of squills, ipecacuanha wine, tincture of lobelia, and sweet spirit of nitro every second day for two or three weeks as may seem necessary; and during the first of these weeks add twelve drops of chemical food to the water on the alternate days between giving the squills mixture.

PAINT AND SAND (N. C. M.).—(1) Provided only that you allow the cages to stand a sufficient time for the paint to dry and harden before introducing the birds, it is not in the least detrimental to paint the insides of cages. Any good oil paint or what is known in the trade as "flating" may be used, or the enamel paints sold in tins, such as Aspalin's. The point is to allow them to dry thoroughly before the birds are put in the cages. (2) Yes, clean sharp river sand is quite suitable for cages. In this case the only essential point is to be sure the sand is gathered from an unpolluted river or stream.

DIVERS OPINIONS (Dumping).—Your friend is on the whole correct in his opinion that the "bobbing" or "dumping" you refer to is very often a question of improper dietary. It is almost invariably a symptom of excessive constipation, and is best treated by a proper proportion of laxatives, such as green salads or fruit, in the diet. It may, as you say, pass off without any kind of treatment, but that does not prove that when it has been allowed to develop, proper treatment, to which it will yield much more quickly than leaving it to follow its own course, is not the best. A fair supply of succulent green salad daily when it can be obtained in a fit condition for use is the best, because the most natural, remedy. But when this cannot be obtained, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and ten drops of lemon juice added to the drinking water daily until the droppings assume a rather moist condition, and the bobbing has ceased, is a good and simple remedy.

MOULTING AND LAYING (W. W. C.).—Treat the bird for the moulting the same as advised to "E.N." Jan. 22 issue. As regards the laying, you need not worry about this—a casual egg now and again, or even a full clutch laid now is not likely to affect the fertility at the proper breeding season. You might see reply to "H.T.E., King's Cross," in same issue, on the subject.

STILL SLACK (Norwich IF).—See that the bird is still kept under favourable and healthy conditions as outlined in last reply. Give now a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape mixed together. In addition to this give just a pinch of the seed mixture advised in last reply every third day, and on the intervening days give first a morsel of banana, carrot, or sweet apple, ringing the changes on these if you wish to increase variety, and next half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion and four of sherry well mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. Every second day add to each two table-spoonfuls of drinking water a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, ditto of sulphate of iron half as big, and add 6 drops of dilute sulphuric acid if necessary, but if the symptoms have disappeared in less than that time you may stop all phoric acid. Continue this treatment for 3 or 4 days earlier. The above dietary may be continued until two or three weeks after the bird seems to have quite recovered.

CASTING FEATHERS (G. A. Shaw).—Possibly keeping the birds in a recess near the window in the kitchen is the cause of them being still in a moulting condition and out of song. Certainly, they should not be casting feathers now, but it is no more than what might be expected if they are exposed to rapid extremes of heat and cold, which such a position suggests, or even if they are subjected to direct draughts from the window. See that these exciting causes are removed, or if they cannot be avoided in their present position, remove the birds to a more temperate and equable place. Every second day give, in addition to the present dietary, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed. Also make a little of the paste advised to "Shun" in our issue of Feb. 26, and keep a cube stuck between the wires for the birds to peck at when they like. Dissolve half a drachm of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, add a teaspoonful of glycerine, and add 20 drops of this mixture to the drinking water two days in every three. Continue this treatment until the feathers cease dropping.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS

Answered by H. NORMAN.

MANAGING MILING PAIR (A. M. C.).—It is unfortunate that your Finch should have destroyed two of the eggs, but this is not unusual, for few of them can be trusted. The hen will get on very well without him until she is ready to go to nest again, then you can run him in for an hour or so daily until she has laid a couple of eggs; or it will be sufficient if you see them mate two or three times. So few Finches assist in the rearing of the young that most breeders take them away entirely, merely using them to fertilize the eggs. There is scarcely any waste of time in this, as young Hybrids leave the nest rather earlier than Canaries. Hemp seed is not absolutely necessary in the rearing of birds. If the hen will eat sunflower you could allow her to have it, but I would advise you to crack it for her.

BREEDING WITH HAND-REARED LINNET (C. E. B.).—If your young Linnet is a cock bird he should be in full song now and ready to breed. The best partner for him is a young Norwich Canary—a healthy bird of good size. If you have a suitable hen in your room, run her in with the Linnet at once. Use an ordinary breeding cage for them. Give them a nest pan or box, and supply them with building materials, such as short lengths of grass, moss and cow hair. It is just possible your Linnet is in breeding condition, although perhaps not a particularly stout songster. Add a little lightly cracked hemp to his seed fare, and give a spoonful of egg food every other day.

BULLFINCH WITH DIARRHŒA (Tweedum).—If a bird has continual diarrhœa, even in a slight form, there is something wrong to account for it. The causes of the trouble are bad seed, that is, seed badly harvested or stored, water with some impurity in it, and sudden changes in climatic conditions. Taking the seed first, I would advise you to buy each kind separately, and then make your own mixture. Examine them by taste and smell, and before using rub them in a damp cloth. Your mixture had better consist of the following: Two parts each of canary and teazle, and one part of summer rape. This for staple food. Others had better be sunflower and maw seeds. Your wild food should consist of seeding grass, chickweed, and shepherd's purse. See that they all have plenty of seed pods on them. A little soaked seed might be given twice a week. Give boiled water to drink or freshly made tea and skim milk; half of each. To this could be added half a teaspoonful of prepared chalk and two drops of laudanum. If he is strong and healthy I would advise an aperient of Glauber's salts and syrup of rhubarb. As much salts as will cover a threepenny piece and three drops of the rhubarb in one ounce of water. Repeat two days later. Watch him carefully, cleaning out the cage daily, and supplying clean perches. See that he has good sound grit or sharp sand. When he improves get an oz. of crystals of citrate of iron from the chemist and dissolve daily in two table-spoonfuls of drinking water as much as will lie on a threepenny piece. This in itself is a good corrective for looseness of bowels, and also a good tonic.

BIRDS FOR AVIARIES (Oakwood).—I presume you simply want your aviaries filled with song birds, not to have them with the intention of breeding. Your three aviaries being all of the same size, 5 ft. by 2 ft. by 2 ft., in one of them I would advise you to have half a dozen Finches, either cock birds or in pairs. If you have cock birds, the following would be a suitable collection: Bullfinch, Linnet, Siskin, Twite, Goldfinch, and Greenfinch. Another aviary could be filled with Buntings, all of which are hardy and easily kept. The following would be a good list: Yellow Cirl, Reed, Meadow, Ortolan, and the Corn or Common Bunting. You may not be able to get all these, but, anyway, you would have no difficulty in securing a pair of each of the first three, and they would make quite an interesting collection. Your third aviary could be used for a few Softbills or for a mixed lot; if the former, get a Pied and a Grey Wagtail, a Blackcap Warbler, and a Nuthatch or even a Hedge Sparrow, but do not be tempted to turn in a Robin or any of the Tits, they do not always agree in confinement with other birds. All these birds are hardy and fairly easy to manage, for although the Blackcap is a migrant I have kept him in an outside aviary all the year round.

TROUBLE WITH SKYLARK (Lower of Skylarks).—You should have sent us an account of the illness of your Lark with all particulars of feeding and general treatment; it is possible we may have then assisted you to effect a cure. Birds in confinement cannot always remain in perfect health and song, and there are times when to be quiet is natural to them. Your holding the feet in water would not have given it a chill—Larks in a wild state are frequently wet-footed. Perhaps your feeding was rather heavy, and he may require an aperient and a change. Have you our Nutshell booklet on the Skylark? Our manager would send you a copy post free for 2d.

BREEDING LINNET MULES (Young Novice).—You omitted to send us your name and address with your letter; perhaps you will kindly forward these on a postcard. It would be waste of time attempting to breed from your Linnet while he is in the moult. You had better pair your hen Canary to something else to save disappointment, and the sooner you do so the better. With such sudden changes of temperature as we have lately been experiencing, the birds are liable at any time to drop into the moult, and if your hen did so your chance of breeding is gone for this season. If you have no other British Finch, run her with a Canary; the young hens you get will be useful for Mule breeding next year.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

AVADAVATS, ETC. (Esperance).—I am afraid there are very few Avadavats in England at the present time—in pre-war-times they averaged about 3s. 6d. per pair, but 7s. 6d., or much more, per pair is sure to be asked at present. As regards cage, an all wire one will meet the case, so long as you do not place it where a current of air or draught can blow through it. Do not limit them to an ordinary wire canary cage, have nothing smaller than a canary breeder, very nice all wire oblong cages are made about this size. Instead of the coconut shell put in a small rush nest, these have wire which can be hooked over cage's wires. If you get half-a-dozen small split rings (similar to those on umbrella elastic fastenings), and put two on a wire of the cage in suitable positions, the main stem of small twigs can be passed through them, and two rings to each twig will keep them in position; if there is a certain amount of rock or swing about the twigs, well, all the more natural. The cage need not be in front of window, but just to one side of it, and that the side furthest from the door. I do not think the sweet plaintive little lay of the Avadavat would disturb anyone, not even an invalid.

INDIAN GREEN PARROT (Squish).—Your diet is fairly satisfactory, but in addition to the "Parrot mixture" keep a tin of mixed canary and white millet seed (in equal parts) in the cage, to which it can then help itself at will. It should never have egg food, but cuttlebone, grit, and a chunk of wood are essentials which should ever be in the cage. Do not give tea, coffee or milk sops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. They are hardy birds and do not need any coddling, but they must not be subjected to draught, neither must they be kept in a stuffy, stagnant corner of a room—there is generally one such corner in every room. As regards talking, if it is a youngish bird it should do so; as soon as it is fairly tame keep it where it hears plenty of talking, whistling, and other sounds, and teach it by the constant repetition of such words, etc. as you wish it to repeat, this combined with petting, talking to it endearingly when you are attending to its wants, etc., will ultimately bring out such capacities as it possesses in this direction.

NEST MATERIAL FOR RED-BILLED WEAVERS (J.W.B.).—All that the birds require is hay or fresh long grass. I cannot hold out much hope of your having breeding luck with Weavers in a cage, though such is not impossible. If any young should be hatched out, then besides the usual dietary, you must keep up a liberal supply of live insects, such as well scoured gentles, five ant's eggs, small mealworms, smooth caterpillars, and flies, etc., as for the first week the parent birds almost entirely feed their progeny on live insect. Unlimited fresh green food should also be supplied at this time. However, even if they should not breed, they will interest you by having a number of their interesting nests, if you fix up twigs in the cage for them to attach their domed houses to.

WHAT PARROT? (Saxton).—I cannot attempt to name this for you, till you give me some idea of its size, and state whether it is a long or short-tailed species, either by comparing it with some well-known British bird, or giving me the measurement in inches, from top of head to tip of tail, as it stands on the perch.

POST-MORTEM.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, Collage Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. The Post Office regulation is that bodies of birds must be sent at the letter rate of postage, and must be packed in hermetically-sealed receptacles which must themselves be enclosed in strong wooden, leather, or metal cases. If this regulation be infringed the packets may be destroyed by the authorities. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

MR. E. M. SOUTHERN.—Bird was suffering from advanced liver disease, so can quite understand matters. There was no rupture, the undue prominence of the vent being brought about by the enlargement of the liver displacing the intestines.

MISS E. M. ORMSBY.—Roller Canary succumbed to ptomaine poisoning.

MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS make your 1916 breeding season a record in every way by purchasing a copy of

CAGE BIRD HYBRIDS.

This great work is written by CHARLES HOULTON, an authority with a reputation extending over 25 years as a leading Exhibitor, leading Expert and Judge.

Complete Bound in Cloth, 7/6 carriage paid. Magnificently illustrated by that great bird artist MR. H. NORMAN.

MARVELLOUSLY COMPREHENSIVE.

First of all is considered at great length the question of cages and aviaries for hybrids. All the various methods of housing are thoroughly and carefully described. The perches are minutely detailed; nests and nesting material have a chapter to themselves. Mr. Houlton's special cage for hybrid breeding is clearly described and illustrated. All the foods, natural and artificial, are enumerated. Egg and other soft foods and their feeding values dealt with. The selection of the stock is debated at length. The hens which breed light and dark exhibition mules described. The proper breeding procedure for Dark Goldfinch Mules gone into. Egg binding and its treatment. The food supply. Care of the young hybrids. All these topics are treated with that experience and skill only an expert of Mr. Houlton's standing could bring to such a task.

There are no less than Sixteen Coloured and Sixteen Art Plates in this work. EACH PLATE IS A PERFECT STUDY OF AN INDIVIDUAL HYBRID. Every plate shows the correct colour, the correct shape, the present day type and general characteristics of a prize-winning Hybrid.

THE PRACTICAL AND COMPREHENSIVE WORK WHICH ALL HYBRID BREEDERS REQUIRE.
